THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

The present is a fitting opportunity to recall attention to the Society's work for Christ.

The season of storms, shipwreck, and loss of life has commenced. The Missionaries, who are in daily contact with seamen, have been distressed to hear e and another—whose face was familiar, and whose hand had often been grasped at the close of a service—having found a grave in the ocean; and we that before the winter closes the sea will have claimed fresh victims, and many a dependent relative will be left to mourn the loss of the breadwinner.

ISSION VESSEL WITH DEEP SEA FISHING FLEET.

What this Mission aims at is that these poor bereaved ones may at all events have this consolation, that he whom they loved has gone "to be with Christ, which is far better," and "some tears of the poor widow may be wiped away, and some cries of the fatherless be hushed."

The year 1883 has been one of special blessing. From the various stations on the Thames have come most cheering reports of the conversion to God of those who hitherto lived carelessly or disreputably. The Chaplains at Gravesend, in particular, have repeatedly met on board homeward bound vessels, men who are seeking by their amended lives and personal testimony to prove the reality of the work of God's Spirit in their hearts.

The novel Medical Mission to the Deep Sea Fisheries, by means of the smacks Ensign, Cholmondeley, and Salem, has borne abundant fruit. A dear skipper writes: "Thank God, fishermen are coming to the Lord Jesus fast:" and this evidence is amply corroborated by independent testimony, as, for example, the statement of some of the largest smack-owners, that men once drunken and depraved are now sober and valuable servants. One firm, in announcing an annual subscription of £10 10s. to the Mission, remarked, "Our men are completely revolutionised, and much good has been done." They at the same time intimated that any of their employés who desire to spend the Lord's Day in quiet worship, will be alowed to do this without fear of dismissal.

But there are many thousands of seafarers who do not know their sins to be washed away in the precious blood, and to them—to every one of them who the Port of London—we desire to present the Gospel. Will all who have means help us to do this? It is an unspeakable privilege to be "workers er with Him." We commend the Thames Church Mission to your most earnest and prayerful consideration, and count upon your generous assistance e Master's sake.

E. J. MATHER, Secretary.

PROTESTANT BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.

The attention of the benevolent public is respectfully invited to the claims of this Society, which may be briefly summarised as follows:—

The Society was founded in 1853 for the purpose of assisting the Blind poor of Great Britain and Ireland, by life pensions paid monthly at their own homes, through the agency of voluntary visitors.

This system of distribution besides being the most economical to the Charity, is one that gives the greatest relief and gratification to the beneficiaries.

The Society has now upon its register 495 pensioners in receipt of allowances ranging from 10s. to 25s. each per month, and an approved list of 180 candidates seeking election.

In the selection of candidates no religious test is demanded, it being only required that they are in need of assistance, and their moral character is satisfactorily attested by responsible persons.

The only expenses of management are a nominal salary to the Secretary, a donation given to another charity for the occasional use of its board room, and the unavoidable cost of printing and postage. Hence nearly the whole of the moneys received go direct to the objects for which they are given.

Having barely sufficient funds invested to provide for one year's pensions, the Committee are compelled to rely from year to year upon the generous contributions of friends, and they appeal with all earnestness to those able to give for a share of their Christmas contributions.

Treasurer, N. J. POWELL, Esq., Devonshire House, Shortlands, Kent; Hon. Secretaries, Messrs. THOS. POCOCK and A. S. DODSON; Secretary, W. E. TERRY; Office, 235, Southwark-bridge-road, London, S.E.

AN EXAMPLE, AND AN INVITATION.

Our Lord was engaged in the glorious work of preaching and teaching, and there came unto Him a large company of "Outcasts," having with them those that were "lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others." Our Lord received them, and healed them, and blessed them, and the multitude "glorified the God of Israel."

Jesus said to his disciples, "I have compassion on the multitude.. ...I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint by the way" (Matt. xv. 32).

"Then Jesus took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

The sympathy and compassion of our Lord, and his care for the bodies of the poor, are worthy our imitation.

Every Sunday morning at the Seamen's Bethel, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, a company of poor creatures, selected by the Missionaries of the Mariners' Friend Society, the Police, and Dock Officials, among the outcasts of our dense river-side population, are provided with a FREE BREAKFAST, after which the Gospel is spoken to them.

Like those of our disciples, our provisions are limited. They were privileged to give the Master, for the hungry people, "seven loaves." Will not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN help us to imitate our Lord in not sending them away fasting?

Donations may be sent to FRANCIS J. SHELTON, Hon. Sec., 19, Old Gravel-lane, E.; or JOSEPH MOORE, Treasurer, 9, Morgan-street, Bow, E.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

BARBICAN EAST CENTRAL MISSION TO THE JEWS.—This Mission is making strenuous efforts to make known the message of salvation to large numbers of Jews, by house to house visitation, Scripture and Tract distribution, weekly addresses at Albion Hall, London Wall, and Night School at Hoxton. In view of the approach of winter, when occasional help to the poorer Jews is absolutely necessary, practical Christian sympathy towards the maintenance of the work will be gratefully received, and Annual Report forwarded by the Superintendent, PAUL WARSCHAWSKI, 6, Farleigh-road, N.

GREAT COLEMAN'S, near Ongar, is now opened by DR. and MRS. S. C. GRIFFITH to give change of air and rest to educated people of limited means.—For particulars, apply to 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM.

We have endeavoured to demonstrate that derangements of the nervous system will account for almost all chronic ailments, whatever form the symptoms may assume. The question then arises, What means are best calculated to prevent these derangements? From experience of the most practical character we answer, The Magnetic method of treating disease which we advocate, instead of medicinal agents, because it relies upon aiding the restorative forces of nature by supplying a self-regulating power to the nervous system. By stimulating from nerve centres to nerve extremities, and assisting nature in her constant efforts towards restoration, more of the vis medicatrix naturæ is induced, and when the impalpable but vivifying force of Magnetism thus aids the recuperative powers of the system, there is every hope (presuming renewal of health is possible) that unfavourable symptoms will disapppear, trying temperatures lose their depressing effect, and he vitality of the system be so increased that hereditary tendencies will be rendered inert, and the constitutional weakness overcome. We trust that this explanation clearly proves to those least accustomed to reasoning from cause to effect, that Magnetic influence directly touches the origin of our chronic ailments, and is therefore of all known means the one best calculated to prevent the development of any organic disease. This being the established character of the remedy under consideration, a patient may as safely rely upon its health-giving virtues as he does in seeking the genial influence of pure air and sunshine, because Magnetism does not stimulate, but sustains, equalises, and harmonises, and thereby enables the system to maintain the required balance of health. It cannot, therefore, tax and exhaust the system, for while it restores and sustains the failing energies, every organ of the body is better fitted to perform its proper function, and to render united and effectual opposition to disease so long as the natural term of life shall last.

December 15, 1883.

"A short time ago I adopted your treatment according to your advice, and I now think it is time to write and inform you that, under Divine blessing, I have derived great benefit from it. I was somewhat better when I commenced to follow your instructions, but from the first day of so doing my recovery was much more rapid, and I was at once able to go through a long day's work with but a little interval for rest—a thing I had not been able to do for several weeks previously; and in a short time I fully recovered, and have had no return of the symptoms since."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. Corson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

THE NEW YEAR.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST.

"THINE, O LORD, IS THE GREATNESS, AND THE POWER, AND THE GLORY, AND THE VICTORY, AND THE MAJESTY." Thus, with David's noble ascription to the Lord Almighty, we enter on this new period of time. And may I suggest that when, a few days hence, we begin the Week of United and Universal Prayer, no petition or thanksgiving can claim a prior place to that our Redeemer taught us: "Our Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name"? Nothing can more effectually lift us out of our self-considerateness, or bring us into a truer fellowship with the holy and the waiting ones in heaven and earth, than to recall the order in which our prayers should, as a prevailing rule, proceed. It was the Master who said: "After this manner therefore pray ye."

Amidst the upheavings of the nations with which we enter on the New Year; when all controversies gather more and more around Christianity; when from multitudes of peoples a smothered or active cry is being raised as to the way of salvation, a summons comes to the waiting virgins to arise and trim their lamps. The conversion of men to God is the duty which the Spirit presses on the conscience of many; on the other hand, the call of the Spirit of holiness to the professing Church is that which lies on the hearts of others. They are both imperative. This paper addresses those who are the servants of "The righteous Lord who loveth righteousness."

A GRAVE DEFECT.

I venture to direct attention to a grave and too much overlooked phase of our present religious life and activity. I recall a meeting in a lecture-room attached to the Church where I ministered. At the close of a fervent address three-fourths of the people avowed their acceptance of Christ Jesus. I said to them, "Now you have to seek grace to walk as children of God." The gentleman who had spoken to them turned on me with an implied rebuke that I was misleading the people. Has not this been a heresy of late years? Has not coming to the blessed Saviour for peace been put forth as the end of religion, instead of the beginning? The difference between the teaching has been all but infinite in its subsequent issues.

Strong words have been recently uttered as to the rapacity of certain owners of property and employers of labour in the East of London. But in the matter of obligation between man and man no line can be drawn at any one class. What defence can be made of the fearful fact that at the last general election the political teachers of the land spent two millions and a half of money mostly in corruption and national demoralisation? There is no greater reproach among us, no cause for profounder humiliation, than that Christian morality does not keep pace with Christian agencies and evangelisation. Conscience is in sore default as to the nature and extent of the law of righteousness. While material resources have been increasing, the self-considerateness of operatives and domestic servants has been extending. The plumb-line of moral duty in the details of life is everywhere defective. With persons who profess conversion as to their feelings, the conscience is not rectified. Alarming contradiction! The idea of sin does not gain ground with the wider knowledge of the Gospel. Nothing in heaven or earth can equal the seriousness of such a paradox. The very sense of sin has become relaxed and nerveless. I may here add, that over some of us of late years has come a trembling under the fear that even among the Lord's people the obligation of undeviating veracity has been waning. There is no vice against which men are so helpless as that of lying; no sin is there that is a greater abomination to the God of truth; and no habit is there which will more certainly exclude from the Kingdom of God.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

I may say here, I have watched with deep concern the growing scepticism of many Christian professors in relation to the Old Testament. A juster literary estimate of the sources and authority of the ancient Scriptures is one of the best gifts to our age. But rebounds almost always rush to perilous extremes. A tendency is in vogue which, if unchecked, will soon make it impossible for a man to derive any certain teaching from the Old Testament. Than this it is hardly possible to conceive of a more awful privation and calamity. If one man may reject this part and another that, what will soon remain? I do not stop to defend that majesty, loftiness, pathos, and beauty of the Old Testament, which have never been overpassed, but affirm that much of the criticism which is directed at the Old Testament is, in effect, pointed at the New. The modern objection, for example, against the severity of the Hebrew prophets in relation to evil, and especially to false profession, must be an objection equally to the like tone of severity from the lips of the Lord Jesus. If the devout reading of the Old Testament awakens and guides a chastened "fear of the Lord," that is the best preparation for receiving into "honest hearts" the lessons of the New.

FIRST PRINCIPLES.

We must go back to first principles. The Apostle of us Gentiles says that his conversion was "a pattern." Let us note that conversion in one aspect of it. Three times it is told by the inspiration of the Spirit. When the answer came to the troubled question, "Who art thou, Lord?" the response led to an instantaneous inquiry as to duty. The Lord was offered a throne on the heart of the convert. From Christ came at once an exaction of cross-bearing. "Go to Damascus" was the command. Not back to Jerusalem; not at that stage into the solitudes of Arabia; but "go where thou mayest be instructed by the men thou wast journeying to destroy; where thou mayest acknowledge thy blind mistake; where thou wilt be hated unto death by the party whom thou hast served." I say not that it can be always safe to unveil, as unto Paul, the naked cross. But woe unto us if we altogether hide that cross from a convert. Better will it be for us, a thousand times, never to have opened our lips in the Lord's name if we make the blessed Gospel an opiate, instead of a Divine incentive to faithful witnessing, and obedience to the perfect will of God. If we keep back the complete truth of Christ, we shall fail to arrest the Rationalism of our period.

In nothing are we more in accord with the method adopted by our Lord than when we remember that the maxim in relation to success in Christian work should be, Quality, not quantity. Oh, the endless, unutterable evils the forgetfulness of this truth has been working these last years. There are few more instructive passages than the direction Paul gives to an evangelist. The root, he shows us, of the Christian religion is faith unfeigned; out of this proceeds the pacified, converted conscience; out of this the heart purified by the Holy Ghost; but "the end" is that which the Apostle accentuates, and that is the restoration of the comprehensive and righteous law of love on the heart and life (1 Tim. i. 5). In his great Epistle to the Romans Paul tells us at the very opening that the Lord gave to him "grace and apostleship unto obedience of faith among all nations;" and, like a musical strain that falls back at the close on the original note, the Epistle grandly closes with the repetition of the same truth. Would to God that this practical godliness might be the reformation of the new year! A doctrine that becomes an excuse for, instead of a condemnation of iniquity, is that which the Lord told one of the seven churches He hated. Oh, strong word from his lips! Where shall we find an overwhelming motive against iniquity like that of his cross? Through the universe, and through all the eternities of God, the atoning blood of the Divine Son expresses a condemnation of sin which no tongue of seraph can adequately set forth. May the Lord in his mercy give grace to preserve us in sympathy with Himself, so that there may be heard among us the decisive teaching of this true, genuine, unimpaired Gospel of loyalty and obedience.

THE RELIGIOUS LIFE.

An urgent stress should, moreover, be laid upon obtaining the aids of private devotion. At any time did men more shrink from the blessedness of being alone with God? Was the temptation ever greater to starve the soul of even the Christian worker, by an unceasing round of public engagements? The temptation is, indeed, with many persons more serious still. It is to use no standard whereby we can test ourselves. A dealer who should, without a measure, sell gold hap-hazard, must come to ruin. If he sold overweight, there would be the ruin of his substance; if underweight, the ruin of his reputation. What must it be for a Christian man to have no standard to try his spiritual life? Through God's mercy, the rule of the inspired Word is all adequate. But what if, throughout the year, there is no private appeal to it? The petition for God to bless us may be followed by his remonstrance: "My son, I have nothing to bless to you. The words of holy men, which might correct your conscience, and direct your life, you never consult." No doubt men are busy, but they cannot afford to lose the enrichment of holy retirement; and they have also the blessed Sabbath. What is to come if, during the Sabbath leisure, the semi-religious newspaper, or the religious story that runs into the novel pure and simple, is preferred to the Bible, or to the stimulating book of devotion? The reply may be made that the Lord gives Sabbath liberty. Ah, my brother, the question is not what the Lord requires. That is not easy to affirm. The question is, what do you require? Do you not need the opportunities of the returning Day of Rest, for ascertaining how matters stand between you and God? By your modern habit of laying aside all private aids to devotion, may there not be coming over you a detriment which opens a path to infinite danger and loss? Let us not at a new starting time shrink from these inquiries. They were never more necessary.

THE WORLD SPIRIT.

In relation to the changed sentiment in reference to worldly conformity, to which my first paper referred, it may be said to young Christians and faithful brethren, let us avoid argument as to this or that form of worldliness. "What harm is there?" may be an ensnaring beguilement. Deceptive pleas can easily be urged. Half-dressed ballet girls know the power of filial affection. The gamester may be honourable outside the betting circle. Drunkards are often amiable. The thief is often generous. You make no way by arguing concerning these isolated facts. When Jehovah of olden time spoke through prophets against the practices of idolaters, he did not go into specific details, but warned comprehensively: "Every abomination to the Lord which He hateth have they done unto their gods." "The world," from "the evil" of which Christ prayed that his followers might be kept, and to "deliver us out" of which was one end for which He gave Himself, must be judged in our measure as Divine pity and holiness judge it. Its whole tendency is to withdraw men and women from God. It opens a deep of ungodliness no mortal line can sound. Its plain of misery is bounded by no horizon. Its attractions hide impurities and unutterable foulness. Its golden cup is full of corruption. Its demands become an inexorable tyranny. Its spirit and associations make real walking with God an impossibility. Behind its glamour there are cries of agony and despair. Its victims only a pitying God can count. It dupes innocence, silences conscience, satirises goodness, and leaves its prey in merciless desolation. Its selfishness and vainglory move along a path of costliness, bankruptcies, divorces, and unceasing wrecks. "The prince and god of this world" is said by infallible authority to be Satan. The world is his royal state. Its followers are his vassals. Its invitingness is his consummate artifice. To make agreement with it is for us to become confederates with him who is the mysterious adversary of God, and whose stupendous forces and powers have made human history a roll of tears, and lamentations, and woe.

Let me, however, suggest that we must avoid all austerity. This is hurtful all round. The word is, "Thou shalt rejoice in every good thing which the Lord thy God giveth thee." The spirit of understanding and discernment will be given to us as we present the prayer which saintly men and women have offered for near five centuries: "O most merciful Jesus, grant that I may always desire and will that which is to Thee most acceptable, and most dear. Let thy will be mine, and let my will ever follow thine and agree perfectly with it."

SUGGESTIONS.

I am aware that in these times spiritual religion is saitrised by men from whom other things might have been expected. But this should not trouble us. The permanent elevation of humanity has come from the Spirit of Christ only, and from those who were in union with Him. I close, then, with offering a few brief helps to a Christian life.

(1) By the separation of His servants Christ has intended that they should bear witness on behalf of all purity, truth, and righteousness, and thus hasten the deliverance of the world from the evil one.

(2) Throughout all the ages, from Paul downwards, effectiveness of life has come by following "The royal way of the Cross."

(3) Morning by morning we should seek for the grace of watchfulness against the self-motive, and that our soul may be what the keys of the instrument are before the skilful player, so that in business, or Christian service, our actions may be in harmonious obedience to the Spirit's monition.

(4) The "quick understanding in the fear of the Lord" can be attained only through stated seasons of devotion. When we are a "long time with Jesus" faith grasps the Unseen, and all-powerful love sways the life.

(5) Since our best doings are defiled, our abiding endeavour must be "through faith in Christ to stand in the righteousness of God."

(6) All our desires to read the future must be subordinated to this—what the Lord's present service requires.

(7) A rich reward follows faithful walking. The experience of the early Church is to-day that of the loyal-hearted towards Christ: "the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost which was given unto us."

Let us thus tread the unknown paths of the year, and all must be well.

"Lead Thou me, Spirit, willing and content
To be as Thou wouldst have me, wholly spent.
I am thine own, I neither strive nor cry:
Stretch forth thy hand, I follow silently."

Ling Holme, Tunbridge Wells.

On the Threshold.

SOLEMN depths about me rise,
Stillness broods above,
Strangely clouded seem the skies,
Changes round me move;
Unto Thee I lift mine eyes,
Oh, eternal love!

Shall thy rescued one of old
Fear anew to roam?
Shall the heart that knows thy hold
Shrink from paths to come?
Shall I, as I near thy fold,
Dread the journey home?

Lord, within this rising year,
Thou alone canst see
What awaits of dark and drear,
Curtained now from me,—
What of loneliness and fear,
What of agony.

Therefore, ere I read the scroll,—
Kneeling at thy feet,
Leave I to thy care my soul,
Oh, thou Shepherd sweet!
From thy heart I take the whole
That this year shall meet.

Not one hour that Thou hast planned
Would my yearnings shun,
Not one step o'er sharpest land
(So thy will be done),
Not one thorn touched by thy hand,
O Thou wounded One.

Give me but to breathe a word
For my God and King;
Give me, where thy sheaves are stored,
Harvest yet to bring;
Give me for thy name, O Lord!
Yet a song to sing.

Choose the rest—oh choose the rest,
And if Thou shalt call,
Ere the New Year, bright and blest,
Fading hence shall fall,—
Take me calmly to thy breast,
Christ, mine All in All.

There, led home through shadowed ways,
Hearts that trusted Thee
Quietly through changing days,
And through mystery,
Everlasting chords of praise
Wake triumphantly.

In Memoriam.

OUR FRIEND 1883:

DEPARTED THIS LIFE MIDNIGHT, DEC. 31.

BY ANNA SHIPTON.

WE shall go to him, but he shall not return to us. The friend that God has given us has departed, leaving us with many a message of mercy rejected, with many an invitation to the marriage-feast refused, with tender letters of love unread, with the finger of Providence unrecognised, and the face of the gracious Giver unsought! To some he has come like a dream of the night; with others he has left treasures that will never grow old, hopes that can never perish, and promises that shine like the stars at midnight, untarnished by prosperity or adversity.

What has he left you? Perhaps a vacant place by the household hearth, never again to be filled—another treasure safe in the arms of Jesus; or he has given you one that will be no treasure, unless you have laid it up in the sanctuary in his keeping. Perhaps he has left you nothing but what you would gladly exchange for forgetfulness which his rival will not grant you—false friends that have betrayed and forsaken you, disappointment, and regret, and remorse. The blots on his tablets cannot be washed out by the hand of his successor, but—"There is a fountain filled with blood,

Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

Yes, our friend is hid from our eyes; he is not dead, but sleepeth; he will arise again in judgment, and meet you face to face. Shall you meet him as an enemy, or as a friend? Shall you pause in Eternity, and track his footsteps, as the great mystery of life is unfolded, and pausing, praise with the multitude of the heavenly host, and cry "Glory to the Lamb," that in such an hour you overcame by the blood of the Lamb?—there was unfolded the riches of his grace, and here his love overpowered you, and there his care melted your cold heart when it seemed turned to stone, and again it beat in glad music to the love that never grows cold.

But it may be that you wish the vain wish that you had never been born, when he rises in judgment, when the voice of '83 may echo in tones of howling mockery in the land of darkness, a darkness that may be felt. Oh, man! Hell is no fable; Satan is no myth. Cast away the subtle delusion that you may live as you like, and become at last an inhabitant of some pleasant sphere, or at worst become as the beasts that perish. God has said it (see Matt. xxii. 13; xxv. 46), and will He not make it good? God is not mocked, "for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Hush! 1884 has glided on the last footstep of the year. We welcome him, sent of God! It may be our last unread scroll—our very last. He comes with the promises in his right hand and blessings in his left, for whosoever will. He comes to plead for the poor, the outcast, the miserable—he comes to whisper of the coming glory—to open doors whereby the children of the kingdom may go in and out for service—to bid them gird themselves anew, trusting in the Living God. Let us lay hold of the promises and expect the blessing. Let us take up our cross joyfully, and follow Jesus in the way; for He that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

WHAT IS THAT IN THINE HAND?

AN EXHORTATION TO CHRISTIANS.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

[The first half of this address, given by Mr. Moody on a recent Sabbath morning, is substantially the same as that which he gave at Edinburgh in February last, and which is published from this office as a leaflet (envelope size) under the title, "The Things that God Uses." (6d. per doz.) We append the latter part of the address.]

NO man is fit for God's service who is not willing to do little things. The people who are always waiting for an opportunity to do some great thing, never accomplish anything. If you want to be wise in winning souls you must be ready to do just what the Spirit prompts you to do. It may be He will call you to go to the home of the drunkard, and stay there and mind the children while he or his wife goes to listen to the Word. If this were done by Christians generally, streams of salvation would break out in every quarter.

I do not believe in dreams, but sometimes they illustrate a truth. I read of a man who wanted to do some great thing. He was going to endow a charitable institution, but his object was really to glorify himself, to build up a name. Let me say here that no young man or young woman is fit for God's service who is actuated by any such motive. If you are going to work for God you must let Him take care of your reputation. If you look for your reward here then you will be doomed to disappointment. The reward will come hereafter. This is the time of Christ's humiliation, and we are to go "outside the camp bearing his reproach." The nearer you live to Christ the meaner will be the things that worldly people will say about you. If you want the applause of the world, you had better give up Christian work, because you cannot be useful in God's vineyard without the world beginning to slander and abuse you. This man was intent on building up a large fortune and endowing that institution. One night he dreamt that he was taken away to heaven and an angel took him into a temple of polished marble. Everything was complete, except one little stone left out, and he said, "How is this?" "The Master-Builder," said the angel, "intended that for you, but as you wanted to fill some greater place, you have been left out of the temple altogether." From that time the man made up his mind that if he could only be a chinkstone in the building he would be content.

Dear friends, it is a great honour to be connected with the Lord's work, and if you look down upon it you certainly are not fit for his service. It is the highest position any mortal can have to be a co-worker with God; but you must forget self. Many Christians are walking in darkness and bondage, who would be in the clear light of heaven if they were only willing to forget themselves and work for the Master. If you cannot do some great thing, be content to do some little thing. A friend told me something I did not see at the time about the burning of the Ring Theatre at Vienna. The gas went out. There was one hall where they were trying to get out, and it looked as if they were all going to perish. But a man had one match; he lit it, and so saved twenty lives. It may be you are not very talented, but God can use you to save twenty or forty souls. There is not a Christian hearing me but could lead one soul to Christ in the next forty-eight hours if he would make up his mind to do it, by the help of God.

You may have heard the story of the man in the cabin of a vessel at sea, who was seasick; those of you who know what that is will agree with me that one feels very little fit for work at such a time. This man heard a shout that there was "a man overboard." He wondered what he could do, and at last he thought he could hold up the bull's-eye lantern, in the hope that it might do some good. The drowning man was rescued. When the sick passenger was able to go on deck, he was talking to this rescued man, who told him that just as he was sinking for the last time, and they could not find him on account of the darkness, someone held up a bull's-eye lantern, which threw a light on his head, whereupon he was seized and saved. So you can hold the light for someone. How many of you could cheer your pastors on. Go and help them in their work; your presence will do some good, and may influence someone else. If you cannot sing as well as other people, you can pray. If you cannot speak, you can lift up your heart in silent prayer to God. If you have been saved yourself, ought you not to try and rescue others?

A young man went to Minnesota, one of our Western States, a number of years ago. In that part of the country they are subject in the fall of the year to fearful storms. The wind blows at the rate of forty to sixty miles an hour, and the snow beats upon you so that you cannot keep your eyes open. It is worse than a London fog, and that is bad enough. Sometimes the thermometer is far below zero, and men perish in the storm. This young man got lost in one of these storms. At last as he was almost ready to sink down and die; he happened to see a light in a little log cabin near by. He went in and found shelter and refuge and was saved. He has become a wealthy man now. He has bought a farm there, and put up a beautiful house; on the top of it is a revolving light. Whenever there is a storm the lamp is lit, if perchance it may be the means of saving some one else. That man had the right idea. If God has redeemed you and you do not try to redeem others, I would not give much for your Christianity. If any drunkard has been raised out of the pit and out of the miry clay, his feet established, and a new song put into his mouth, and he is not willing to save others, there is something wrong with him.

We have no time to lose. Time is short and it will soon be over with us. It is only a few months, or years at most. What we are going to do we must do quickly. Let us use what ability we have. If you are a Sunday-school teacher, do not think your work is too small. Mothers, see to the conversion of your children. Do not let cursed unbelief make you think they are too young to be converted. Let us remember what the Master said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not." Do not let your unbelief stand in the way of their coming. One of the most powerful of American preachers, Bishop Simpson, was converted before he was four years old. Let us pray God to sweep this cursed unbelief out of the way, and let us labour for the conversion of the little ones.

In Michigan, a few years ago, I was urging upon parents the importance of bringing the children early to Christ. An old missionary said: I want to endorse all that that young man has said. Sixteen years ago I had three little children left me, my wife having died. The first Sunday afternoon after my wife's death my little girl, only ten years old, came to me and said: "Papa, shall I take the children into the bedroom and pray with them, as mother used to on Sunday?" Taking her little brother in one hand, and her sister in the other, she led them off as her mother was wont to do. I noticed when they returned that they had all been weeping. "Nelly," I asked, "what is the trouble?" She said, "I made the prayer that mother taught me, and then brother made the prayer he was taught. Little Susie used not to pray when mother was alive—mother thought she was too young—but after we had done, Susie made a prayer of her own. She put up her little hands and clasped them, and said: 'O God, you came and took away my dear mama, and I have no mama now, won't you please make me good, just as my dear mama was? For Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.'" Said the old missionary, "That child gave evidence of being a true Christian before four years old; for sixteen years she has been in a heathen land, as a missionary, leading others to the Saviour."

Dear mother, have you faith to believe your children can come? Bring them to the Lord Jesus Christ. Let your motive be pure. Let it not be to build up this or that sect, but let it be for God's glory. A godly missionary lady in India, when she found her children had to be sent to America to be educated, said, "I am going to send them back. I cannot give up my work. My heart is here and God will take care of my little ones." She said she could do it for Christ's sake. She took them on board the vessel, and when the hour came to weigh the anchor an official came and said, "You will have to part with your children now." She fell on her knees and said, "Lord Jesus, I do this for Thee," and kissed her children and left them. I was told by one who witnessed the scene that there was not a dry eye on the deck. Let us do all for Christ's sake. He has done all for us, and we can do but little for Him. Let us re-consecrate ourselves to Him and his service here and now; and let us be willing to do whatever He appoints for us.

"I can bear anything now."

WE read with much interest "F. D.'s" account of her visit to a West-end shop, which appeared in your pages of Dec. 6. We are anxious to enlist her sympathy in the work of the Young Women's Christian Association which is trying to meet the needs of those engaged in business by opening rooms in various parts of London for classes, recreation, and rest. Here they will always find a welcome, and Bible-classes are held from week to week. That these are appreciated can be best seen by the large attendances and the thankful way in which many speak of the help they find there.

Our work could be enlarged to any extent if we only had the necessary means and the workers to interest themselves in our institutes. The West-end Institute is at 17, Old Cavendish-street, and we hope shortly to open a Y.W.C.A. Restaurant in Mortimer-street, connected with the boarding-house which has existed for so long in Welbeck-street. The City Institute is at 31, Finsbury-square. These have a membership of over 1000 drawn from the neighbouring houses of business.

We are now looking out for premises in the neighbourhood of the Strand, where we hope to establish a branch, and some scattered members are earnestly praying that suitable rooms may be found. We have in all sixty-four Y.W.C.A. branches in the London Postal District. The Hon. Secretaries will be very glad to give further information to F. D. or any of your readers.

UNPICKING.

"THERE, mother! I've finished it now. Can't I put the tiresome thing away and read my book?" So questioned Annie Leslie, as she tossed from her a plain print pinafore she was making for a poor child in her mother's district.

"Let me see what you called finished, Annie," said Mrs. Leslie.

"Ah!" said the little girl, shaking her curly head, "it will not bear close looking at, mother. I do not want you to go over my stitches with your sharp eyes. Do let me put it away, and forget such a thing ever was made!"

Mrs. Leslie only smiled at this, as she took up the pinafore, and caught sight of many a big stitch, and here and there a tell-tale stain which told of careless finger-pricking on her little daughter's part.

But presently, checking Annie's spring towards the book-shelf for her favourite story, she silently pointed to a seam, that had been cobbled together in Annie's most careless style, and which was puckered beyond description. Annie hung her head, as her mother bade her sit down, unpick, and re-sew the faulty seam.

Presently the little girl exclaimed with a pout, "I wish that things never could be undone, mother. I should like never to be able to unpick, or to alter anything I had done. It's so tiresome!"

"Well, my child," replied her mother pleasantly, your wish can be gratified early. What day of the year is it?"

"December 23rd, mother; just two days more to Christmas, and eight to the New Year."

"Then, Annie, you can look back upon a whole year, every day of which you have said, and thought, and done, countless things which you can never, never, undo. You cannot alter a single thing in the past. Much as you and I, looking back on our past, may long to sit down and remedy all its false steps, and foolish sayings, we can never do it. Are you satisfied, my daughter?"

"No, mother," said Annie, in a subdued way; "there are such lots of cobbles and bungles in my past year that I should be thankful to have the chance of unpicking them. I've tried this year, too, to do a little work for Jesus, but oh! mother, I am afraid it will never bear his looking into it after all!" And two big tears welled up in the little maiden's eyes and blotted out the sight of the seam she was sewing.

There was sympathy in the motherly face that bent to kiss Annie, as Mrs. Leslie answered, "The year's record and work are done, darling, and with all its mistakes we must let it pass away from us for ever. But the dear Lord has forgiveness for every fault, and a tender pity for every mistake, as well as an indulgent love for all our efforts at work for Him. We can only put the past year into his hands, dear. We can never undo what is past, but Jesus can forgive it all. Will my little daughter trust Him to do this, and to help her in the coming year to live a less careless life, and to do such thoughtful work for Him that there shall be less longing on her part to be able to go over the past?"

"Yes, I will, mother," said Annie.

Will you do the same, dear little reader, if you feel as Annie did, that the record of the past year has much in it that makes you long to have its days and hours back again that you might live them better? And remembering with joy that Jesus can and will forgive all the sins that we confess to Him, step very solemnly into the New Year, determined earnestly to watch every word and action, just because we can never sit down to undo the past.

Are you a little worker for Christ, and is your heart heavy at the thought of his all-searching eye inspecting what you have so poorly done for your Master? Do not be so fearful; Jesus is so kind, even to our mistakes. He will be very gentle over your failures, and will only point out to you what is wrong, because He can and will give you grace to do better.

Rum and Religion in Madagascar.

UNDER this title a letter has appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette, from the Rev. G. Shaw, in which he describes how a journey from Tamatave is accomplished, and the condition of the villages which are contiguous to the shore. He says:—"But frequently in these hamlets along the coast if the traveller arrives late he will be distressed and horrified to find that the demon of the rum-barrel has been before him, and the people are all more or less under its influence. Frequently have I entered a village after sundown only to find every person in it drunk, and even the little children staggering in their play round the fire or in the moonlight. In the village to which I have conducted you there were on my first visit but six houses, each of which was supplied with a large stock of rum; and while I sat at my evening meal a young urchin of perhaps ten or eleven years of age came in with a small piece of silver, which he tendered for the purchase of this vile spirit, and had I not been present I have not the least doubt the man would have supplied this child at his request.

"But what can the missionary do against this powerful agent for evil, introduced in European vessels by professedly Christian men, to the complete destruction of all morality amongst these ignorant natives? Not only are the people being ruined in body and soul, not only are they becoming so debauched that they cultivate barely sufficient rice to supply their most pressing wants, but they fail utterly to supply that most pressing demand of the foreign merchant and planter, the labour market. So long as over 10,000 barrels of rum, each containing between forty and fifty gallons, are imported in one year to the east coast of Madagascar, at so cheap a rate as to be retailed at sixpence a quart, it is vain for the planter to look for labour constant, regular, and trustworthy among these people. And this is the lowest view of the matter. There is a higher and graver responsibility resting upon the British nation, who with one hand send the Bible and missionaries to teach these people, and with the other pour into the country that which washes out at one sweep both the moral and religious life of the natives, and conducts them to an early and certain grave. It is to the disgrace of those speaking the English tongue that it was their voice which was uplifted to prevent the native Government from imposing a higher duty upon this importation, and so restricting in some measure the evil effects upon their people."

SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN AND MARINERS.—The forty-fourth annual meeting of this Society was held on Dec. 17, at Fishmongers' Hall, London. Sir Thomas Dakin presided. The report stated that the deep had swallowed up 1,790 vessels and claimed 4,129 lives during the year. Happily, these figures show a slight decrease on the previous year. It was estimated that 20,000 had perished at sea during the last five years. The society had helped 13,145 distressed fishermen, mariners, widows, and orphans, during the year, and awarded seventeen silver medals for saving life. The gross payments of contributors, and 33,000 fishermen and mariners, members of the Society, amounted to £30,305,

THOSE IN PERIL ON THE SEA.

Dear Sir,—The following extracts from a letter of the skipper of the Thames Church Mission smack Ensign, stationed with the Short Blue trawling fleet, will not merely interest those whose sympathy has already been enlisted for the poor smacksmen; it must surely touch the hearts of all your readers, and cause many prayers to ascend to the Throne of Grace "for those in peril on the sea."—Yours very faithfully, 33, New Bridge-st., E. J. Maiher, Secretary.

Ludgate Circus, E.C., Dec. 29.

SIR,—With a thankful heart to God for his love and kind care through another storm of life, I write to give you an account of the recent gale. About half-past four on the morning of December 12 (Wednesday) I turned out and had a look on deck. It looked rather dirty then, and afterwards, about five o'clock, I went up again and began to reef. The wind commenced to come in gusts, and I called all hands out to reef the ship as soon as possible. The wind came on so hard and sharp that we could scarcely stand to take in the last reef in the mainsail, but, with willing hands and our Father's care, we got it in all right. The power of the wind and storm beating against the canvas was more than our vessel could stand under, so we took in the jib and mizen and laid under the mainsail and foresail. The hatchways were battened down and tarpaulined, and all was done that seamanship could do.

About ten o'clock in the morning we are drifting as the wind and waves send us The gale is blowing as if it must blow everything away, the squalls bringing sleet so thick that all throughout the day you can see nothing. A little clear would come now and then, and last for five or ten minutes. For the twenty years I have been at sea I never saw it blow like it.

About eleven o'clock, the gale having been at hand now for five hours, I left the deck for a few minutes, with all hands, and we had prayer in the after-cabin, asking our Father to "keep us under the shadow of his wings." The experience of the Christian truly is this, that the man who loves Christ and is in danger finds to the full the truth of God's Word, that He is "our refuge and our strength, a very present help in time of trouble." I cannot say, as I have heard some people say, that I had no fear. Oh, yes, my flesh trembled at the prospect of death, but my spirit was happy in Christ my Saviour. Truly, "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him."

The gale still continued, and in the little bits of "clear" we began to see several smacks close together, which, at such a time, was very dangerous; but I steered our vessel surely in the midst of it all. "His banner over us was love," for we came up to and passed everything we saw. A heavy sea broke, with the roar of ten thousand lions, close to our bow, and then again near to our quarter, with hundreds of tons of water in it. Bless God! none of them came on board. We passed one smack in the gale, laying with her canvas blowing to pieces. I looked in a funny state, through wet and cold; yet I could look and rejoice in God all through the storm. I cannot explain to you the comfort of a Christian crew in such a time as that. We had one on board who could not see his way to serve Christ before the storm. Since then he has given himself into the care of the Lord Jesus, and is, I am sure, happy.

In the afternoon the sky showed signs of clearing up, and the wind began to ease. Still the sea ran very heavy. About five o'clock I left the deck, cold, wet, and weary, but happy in Christ for his preserving power and love through the gale.

Since then I have heard sad news. Many smacks have suffered; some are complete wrecks, some have lost one and two hands. My old ship the Ann, I am told, was seen by a Yarmouth smack to go down with all hands. May the widows and orphans find comfort in God! I wish I had a little hope that the master and crew had gone to the better land; I should then feel happy. I left a Bible on board of her, with a number of God's precious promises marked with pencil. I wonder if they ever were looked at. My heart is full.—Yours, W. Jones.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. W. FALCONER, after serving as an evangelist nearly eight years in the villages of Milford and Wittey, in Surrey, is now settled at Scalloway, Shetland, N.B. He would be very grateful to any Christian friends who might be able to send him THE CHRISTIAN, or other books or papers, for distribution in his remote sphere.

MR. OSCAR OWERS, of the London Evangelisation Society, has conducted a series of Bible readings and evangelistic meetings in Forfar, N.B. We are now full of praise and gratitude to the Lord for the blessing given to us through His servant. The meetings increased in interest, power, and numbers. The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

REV. T. E. CLEWORTH began, on December 2, a mission under the auspices of the Belfast Y.M.C. Association, which has been very successful. The preacher has won his way to the hearts of the people of Belfast by his earnest and loving words. Large numbers waited behind for Christian counsel and encouragement, and many have professed to decide for Christ. The afternoon Bible readings were well attended and Mr. Cleworth's searching words were very helpful to a large number of Christians.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND.—A correspondent writes to the Philadelphia Presbyterian Journal of December 13:—"Rev. E. P. Hammond has been with us in Darby two Sabbaths and the intervening week. I am happy to report a very precious work of grace in progress in the church. During the week a number have professed conversion. Nearly all of these are in the Sabbath-school, and it greatly cheers all our hearts to see, in this beautiful Memorial Chapel, the spiritual fruits being garnered for which it has been erected and dedicated to God. It is hoped that a general revival of religion will spread through the whole community."

REV. W. HASLAM recently conducted a deeply-interesting Mission at St. James', Gloucester. Many souls, awakened by the truths contained in "From Death into Life," came to hear, from the lips of the author of a "full, free, and present salvation." A definite blessing lighted on many earnest inquirers. Backsliders, with the careless and ungodly, in many cases found forgiveness and peace. The services were well attended. Christians of various denominations gratefully acknowledged what a time of refreshing and strengthening of their faith the Mission had proved to them. W. BULMER, Vicar,

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE has paid a flying visit to Hawick. He addressed three meetings under the auspices of the Home Mission. On Sabbath evening, December 23, the Corn Exchange large hall was overcrowded; at the close of Mr. Scroggie's earnest and powerful appeal not a few anxious ones remained to be spoken to. Many were forcibly reminded of the first meetings held here by Messrs. Scroggie and Dunn, eleven years ago, when the Lord vouchsafed such a glorious work, the fruits of which still remain. Our Home Mission was instituted at the close of these earlier meetings. During January Mr. Scroggie will labour at Airdrie, after which he will join Mr. Moody in London. He desires prayer on behalf of his work in these places. J. F.

MESSRS. FULLERTON and SMITH'S fortnight's mission at Cambridge, which has lately terminated, was very successful. From the commencement much interest was shown. The services in Zion Chapel were largely attended, indeed, overflow meetings had to be held in the schoolroom on the Sunday evenings. At a meeting for men, we are told that many of the roughest in the town were present; nevertheless the service was very successful. A special service for women was also held, and was equally blessed. Mr. Fullerton preached once at St. Andrew-street Chapel (Mr. Tarn's), while daily Bible readings were held. The after-meetings have been attended by many inquirers; backsliders of twenty years have been restored, while many Christians have been refreshed. The evangelists conducted a watch-night service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Lord is blessing the work of the Gospel Mission-room, Floodgate-street. Believers are being quickened, and souls are being saved. Some of the old Arsenal-street workers have come to our help, which has much encouraged us. What pleasure it would give me to be able to help some of the very poor in the neighbourhood of the Mission-room during this winter! J. GRINNELL, Superintendent.

Female Mission to the Fallen.

SIR,—I desire to direct attention at this season to the work of the Female Mission to the Fallen. Recent investigation has brought to light most deplorable evidence as to the numbers and the extreme youth of a very large proportion of the unfortunate class we seek to rescue. The Female Mission to the Fallen sends out nightly duly qualified women full of Christlike sympathy, to deal with their erring sisters, to hold out a helping hand to rescue any who are willing to leave their wretched life.

Such a work seems to me worthy of general support. There are usually upwards of eighty young women under the temporary care of the missionaries. The annual expenditure is about £4100. The income from annual subscriptions is £1224, so that the Committee are dependent upon donations to the extent of about £2880. I will only add that I shall be most happy to receive and forward any contribution.

Believe me, yours faithfully,

AMID the trees that fringe the banks of the Tay, at Perth, pleasant homes are planted, most of them looking westward towards the river. One of them, across its own fair grounds, looks southward, towards the "fair city"; this is "Springland," for so many years the residence of Mrs. Stewart Sandemann. Only last year, when we of the town caught a glimpse of the windows of the house, or the tower by the river-side, there came to us a feeling of sheltering motherhood. Behind these windows we knew there watched and prayed one whose faithful heart never forgot the wants of her native place, and whose remembrance ever was winged with prayer. For the sad or joyful, for the old or young, sympathy was ever found at Springland, for any who was known to be seeking the Lord Jesus; if not, the prayers that followed them were more earnest, and the yearning was deeper still.

The gracious presence of her whose life had been so bound up with the "valley in which she had spent the most of her days" was taken from us, and the loss was felt to be irreparable, not only for us of her native place, but for the many from distant places who had been welcomed under her hospitable roof. It seemed, too, as if no written memoir could ever convey to others the impression cherished by those who had known her. But her daughter's pen has given to us all a book like Mrs. Sandeman herself. Written with artistic taste and graceful diction, these pages are interesting beyond the records of most biographies. Glimpses of life refined and beautiful, sketches of strongly-marked personality combine to form a picture which fascinates the reader. Above all, the loving heart of the daughter has known how to place before us those incidents of her mother's life which are best fitted to draw us after Him who was and is her Saviour and her Lord.

The Christian world is richer for this memoir, and we trust that even as God's blessing was upon her spoken words, so his blessing may rest upon this written record, and make it the means of stirring lukewarmness into zeal, and love into stronger devotion.

Henceforth.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"The Lord is round about his people from henceforth, even for ever."—Ps. cxxv. 2.

NOT ours, O Lord, the henceforth,
It cometh from thy hand;
The Future that we see not,
And may not understand:
The secret place of thunder,
The swelling tide of wonder,
"The deep that lieth under,"
Are all at thy command.

On thine unerring purpose
We would henceforth recline,
And lose each narrow longing
In that sweet will of thine:
With grateful hearts confessing,
Thou givest nought but blessing,
Our souls to thy caressing
With rapture we resign.

Thy choice for us, Lord Jesus,
Shall all our hopes transcend,
We take with deep thanksgiving
The "henceforth" Thou shalt send;
Assured no joy nor sorrow
Can reach our life's "to-morrow,"
But from thy touch will borrow
Its glory and its end.

Forth in thy name henceforward,
More boldly may we go,
As "conquering and to conquer,"
We fight a vanquished foe.
Our banners still uprearing,
While evermore is nearing
The day of thine appearing—
How near we may not know.

Our Alpha and Omega
Alike are found in Thee;
Thou art the only Henceforth
Of Love's futurity!
To Thee the soul aspireth,
And nought but Thee desireth,
In Thee alone acquireth
Its true felicity.

The love that "passeth knowledge,"
Oh give us, Lord, to know;
And make our hearts henceforward
Responsively to glow!
In questionless subjection
(No feverish introspection),
May thy divine perfection
Through us, unhindered, flow.

Oh by thy Cross and Passion,
Thy love so rich and free,
We claim thy full salvation,
And yield ourselves to Thee,
Through thy regeneration,
By fullest consecration,
With ceaseless imitation,
The miniatures of Thee!

A SEAMAN'S TEMPERANCE LEAGUE has been formed at the port of Naples, mainly through the efforts of Mr. S. Burrowes, the harbour missionary. The resident British consul, Mr. Grant, heartily sympathises with the movement, as do many of the ship captains trading from the port.

SAILORS' REST, WHITEHAVEN.—About six months ago, at the suggestion of Mr. White, who labours amongst seamen and fishermen in this district in connection with the Seaman's Christian Friend Society, suitable premises, close to the harbour and dock, were opened as a Sailors' Rest. An earnest working Christian, who has had some experience of a seafaring life, has been appointed caretaker. The Rest is proving a success. The Gospel and Temperance meetings are very well attended, and we have evidence by the changed lives of some that the good seed is not being sown in vain. We have one regret, and that is, we are in debt, not having been able so far to clear off the debt incurred in furnishing the house. If any of your kind readers who are interested in the work of God among seamen would help us with contributions, we will be deeply grateful.—Yours faithfully, JOHN DAVIS, Hon. Sec.

Messrs. Moody & Sankey in London.

Meeting of East-end Ministers.

ABOUT fifty of the clergy, ministers, and friends in the Stepney district met Mr. Moody, at the invitation of the Central Committee, on Thursday week, to confer as to the continuance of the work. Mr. Hugh Matheson presided.

Mr. G. Soltau reported, concerning the Islington work, that the names of converts and inquirers had been arranged in streets, and called upon by visitors. When all their reports have been received and tabulated, the names will be given to the various ministers whose churches they may desire to attend. Many most interesting cases have been recorded. In not a few instances those visited had been brought into liberty by conversation with the visitor.

Mr. Seaman spoke of the results at Wandsworth. The greater number whose names were taken were, it was believed, decidedly converted to God, though some were still inquirers. The work was not only being maintained, but increased, through the fuller development of Christian life in believers who, formerly, more or less indifferent, had now become thoroughly whole-hearted.

Mr. Moody mentioned several cases of interest. One was a young lady, accompanied by an eder one, who was a Unitarian. At first neither wished to be spoken to, but eventually the younger one was interested, and after some days decided, though feeling she got no sympathy at home. Thus the light was carried into that family, and other cases were cited to show how, when one soul was born of God others of the household were won also.

It appeared that at Stepney a great number, who, when others went into the inquiry room remained in the hall impressed or anxious, had not given their names. Some discussion arose as to how to secure the names of these, and what was to be done with them when they were obtained.

Dr. Barnardo suggested that a handbill might be distributed at the closing meetings, inviting all who had received any benefit, or were in any way interested, to leave their names with the stewards. At a smaller mission in which he had taken part this had resulted in 350 names being given, in addition to the 250 previous y received. Dr. Barnardo's proposal was seconded by Mr. Charrington.

It was at last decided that the question under discussion should be left to a committee of six, representing different denominations and interests, and who were prominent workers in the meetings. The names were Revs. Dr. J. F. Kitto (Rector of Stepney), G. S. Reaney, A. G. Brown, Rowe, Hurndall, Dr. Barnardo, and Mr. Charrington.

Mr. Moody then proposed that some young men from Cambridge University, who had been indefatigable in these meetings, should hold a ten days' Mission for men, in connexion with the work, in addition to all that will be done by the churches. This brought to his feet the senior curate of Whitechapel Church, who said that eight years ago, in Dublin, Mr. Moody had made a similar suggestion, which was acted upon; and he, who had gone in to scoff, was brought to Christ, amongst a hundred others, ten of whom, at that time worldly or sceptical, were now clergymen in various parts of the world.

At the close Mr. Kitto said they could not separate without expressing their warm gratitude to God for having sent Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey among them, and for the work that had been done. Mr. Kitto's very informal utterance, spoken with evident emotion, was seconded by Mr. Reaney. Prayer was made in conclusion by Rev. G. Rowe, Mr. Hugh Matheson, and Rev. T. Richardson, in which the two Evangelists were warmly and affectionately commended to God.

A Saturday Night Prayer-meeting.

We suppose that the Saturday evening before Christmas would generally be regarded as an unlikely time for getting East-enders to a religious gathering. When we say that 2000 persons or more came to Stepney Hall on Saturday evening, December 22, for "a prayer and praise meeting," that fact will be accepted as a fair indication of the deep hold that the Mission has taken of the East-end community. To be sure it was widely advertised, by posters, that Mr. Archibald Brown would preside, and that Mr. Sankey would be present to sing some of his "Solos." The proceedings were altogether of great interest. The exercises were brief and pointed, Mr. Brown's interlocutory remarks forming excellent connecting links to the prayers and praises of those who led the devotions of the assembly. Mr. Sankey's recital of incidents in connection with the history of the songs added a distinct charm to that part of the evening's engagements.

Early in the meeting Mr. Brown said there had been some criticisms on the Mission. That was not to be wandered at—there are always some who cavil at everything. People had said: "Fancy putting up a huge hall like this for a fortnight's meetings, and then taking it down again!" "I believe," said Mr. Brown, "that the cost of the building has been repaid over and over again. I am within the mark when I say that the names and addresses of about 1300 persons have been received at Stepney of those who, at all events, had been made sufficiently anxious about their salvation to speak of it to others, and sufficiently in earnest to give their names. I would not myself take £500 for the blessing that I have got." Later on, in giving out the hymn, "More holiness give me," Mr. Brown said: "I believe that what the Church of God needs more than anything is a baptism into holiness. It is the worldliness in the Church that withers her power for service. The best sermons are those that walk about, and that people can see and hear."

Later still, Mr. Brown told the meeting about some "painful cases" he had heard of, and for which he desired prayer. One was that of a widow, who was trying to get into the Hospital for Incurables, and whose comfort was her only boy. That son had just stolen £100 worth of jewellery from the shop in which he worked, and had decamped. The mother, who was a true Christian, had sent to ask for prayer on her own behalf, and that her poor prodigal lad might be restored. Another godly woman, whom he knew, was in terrible trouble because her daughter had run away, and no tidings of her could be found. The sorrowing mother had sent this message: "Will you ask your missionaries, wherever they go, up and down the streets and in the slums, to seek for my poor, wandering child, who goes under the name of Lilian Gordon." She was encouraged to make this request by hearing of a young man who had been sought and found by the missionaries, and who, Mr. Brown added, was now in the meeting.

These touching and tragic stories greatly moved the heart of the meeting, and very earnest were the petitions that went up on behalf of the mourning parents and those for whom they mourned.

Mr. Sankey's solos were "When the mists have rolled away," sung in response to many special requests, and "We shall meet beyond the river." He told the story of the hymn, "It is well with my soul." A Chicago mother was voyaging to Europe with her four children in the ill-fated Ville du Havre, which collided with the Lochearn. All the children found a watery grave, but the mother was rescued. She telegraphed to her husband "saved alone." He afterwards wrote the hymn which so beautifully expresses the calm confidence of the Christian in the midst of earthly trouble and sorrow. When Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were in Chicago, this mother whose family attended the meetings, and all the four children then gave their hearts to the Saviour. Equally interesting was Mr. Sankey's recital of the conversion of Charlotte Elliot, through the instrumentality of Cæsar Malan, and her composition of the well-known Gospel hymn, "Just as I am," as the record of her own spiritual experience.

In the closing prayer of all Mr. Brown entreated the Lord to clothe Mr. Moody with unusual power for the work of the following day, and to give Mr. Sankey many precious souls through the songs he would sing.

Stepney's last Sunday was as busy and, we trust, as blessed in its results as any of the two that preceded. The early gathering was very large. Mr. Moody discoursed with much unction on the Holy Spirit, as the author of Love, Liberty, Unity, Power, Boldness, &c., in the Church. In dwelling on the "liberty," which is the gift of the Spirit, he said: "I pity the church or chapel where there is no liberty for the people to do anything—not even to sing. There are, probably, a few in the choir who do all the singing; two or three in the congregation do all the praying; the minister does all the preaching; there is nothing left for the people but to do all the sleeping." Mr. Sankey's first song message was that triumphant anthem, set to Mr. McGranahan's stirring and stately music, forecasting the time of the second advent:—

"It may be at morn, when the day is awaking,
When sunlight through darkness and shadow is breaking,
That Jesus will come in the fulness of glory,
To receive from the world his own."

His second solo was that solemn one, made more solemn still when placed in juxtaposition with the first:—

"Nothing but leaves; the Spirit grieves
O'er years of wasted life."

Forenoon, afternoon, and evening great companies of immortal spirits thronged the Hall for the last time, and listened to the earnest, pleading words of invitation and exhortation from preacher and singer. There were the usual after-meetings, and also the men's meeting conducted by Mr. Thorne in the evening. As to the ultimate results of all these unwearied labours by the evangelists, and those who so faithfully rallied round them day by day and week by week, "The day shall declare it." Doubtless the many Gospel messages that sounded up and down the Stepney Hall have proved to a great company the savour of life unto life; alas! that the converse should also be ture, and that they should be to others the savour of death unto death.

Notes and Incidents.

A policeman off duty "tossed up" one Sunday afternoon for Moody in the evening or the theatre on Monday evening. The "toss" fell for Moody, and at the meeting that evening he was led to yield his heart to Christ, and subsequently to confess Him publicly.

Two young men, unable to gain entrance during the address, attended the after-meeting. It so happened that no second address was given, nor any word given from the platform. But as they sat there conviction of sin laid hold on them, and they both were earnestly seeking Christ in a very short time.

A young man ran into the Wandsworth Hall to escape the rain. He was met by the Spirit of God, convicted of sin, and led to Christ.

An elderly woman, the wife of a labourer, told the following tale one Monday morning:—

"On Tuesday last I came to hear the preaching, and I heard the choir singing the hymn with the chorus, 'Follow, follow—I will follow Jesus, anywhere, everywhere.' I couldn't get those words out of my mind; they have rung in my ears night and day ever since. I have for years been a great drunkard—oh, such a bad sinner, but those words have just kept me from going near a public-house, or tasting a drop of liquor. When I have been half inclined to step in I have remembered, 'I will follow Jesus all the way,' and I am just trying to follow Him; but I want to get a little more instruction; I want to know if He will forgive all my past sins, I want to know if He will and can bring me from the drink. I do so want to follow Him. I have had a good husband. For years he was very patient and gentle with me, though I was so bad. At last I tired him out, and he took to ill-treating me, and then to drinking himself. About twelve months ago he knocked me down, and broke my wrist (I observed that her right hand was permanently crippled), and since then he has never struck me, bad as I have been. Yesterday was the happiest Sunday we ever spent in our lives. We kept indoors the whole day, had no beer or drink in the house, and just read and talked together." After much talk and prayer, the poor weeping woman seemed able to trust the Word of the Lord, and to rest assured of His power to keep and bless.

It was a beautiful and touching sight at one meeting to behold a father and his two sons, aged about fifteen and thirteen, together confessing Christ, and taking their stand for Him.

A few seats off might have been seen a tall man—a mechanic, earnest in face, and with the little bit of blue conspicuous on his coat. On asking him what he was seeking, he replied, "Last Sunday I was here, and was woke up to feel my need of salvation. I have been anxious all the week, and now I want to get this thing settled. But I can't understand how I am to look for Christ—what does it mean?" The address had been on the serpent of brass, and after, in a few brief sentences, showing him the meaning of John iii. 14, that he must first accept by faith God's provision in Jesus as the remedy for his sins, he exclaimed, "Oh, I see it—I see it! It's all as clear as possible. I accept Christ. I am all right now." And jumping off his chair, in the exuberance of his newly-found joy, he gave clear testimony to those around him.

Not far from him sat an elderly gentleman, bowed down with sorrow and trouble, unable to look up and lose his load. His great cry was that he had such heaps of difficulties; that he couldn't feel any light or peace; that he couldn't trust the Lord until he felt more assurance. Patient reiteration of one or two texts at length availed to show him how foolish he was to carry a burden that he might at once throw down at Christ's feet. As he left he said, "Well, I will just trust the Lord about everything; you are quite sure I may venture, and that He won't cast me off if I fail, by and bye?" It was most touching, to see him, like a child, beginning to learn the first lesson of faith.—Night and Day.

THE WANDSWORTH WORK.

The special efforts in this neighbourhood have not been relaxed. Ned Wright, amongst others, has conducted services at the Presbyterian church to congregations growing in numbers and interest. The work of house to house visitation proceeds apace. Ministers and other workers continue to bless God for the visit of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

An East End pastor, writing a few weeks ago, says: "During the last visit of the evangelists to East London, amongst others a stalwart fellow, about thirty years old, a barman in a public house, was brought to Christ through the Word. He at once secured another situation, and has ever since been a most consecrated and earnest Christian worker. For a long time he has been secretary of the East London Evangelisation Society, and has been the means of doing a marvellous work among the lowest and poorest classes of people. His example has been blessedly contagious in many cases too. Recently he has been out among the fishermen on the North Sea, where he has done a good work, and now he is appointed by the Thames Church Mission to their hall at the Tilbury New Docks. Eternity alone will reveal the results of this one man's toil."

Mr. Spiers' Saturday meeting for children in Lavender-hill Hall, Clapham, will not be held till Saturday, January 12, on account of the postponement of the Clapham meetings.

THE "MAIN SHEET."

HOW TO BE SAVED, AND HOW TO KNOW IT.

A Word to a really Willing Soul.

By DAVID ANDERSON MOXEY, M.D.

AMONG the number of those who are anxious about their souls, in connection with the great work that God is now carrying on through the agency of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, it may be that some who read THE CHRISTIAN are just at that stage of their spiritual history wherein the following letter was useful to the recipient of it, himself a man who came under concern about his future at one of Mr. Moody's meetings in Scotland.

The person indicated was an officer in the mercantile marine, a man of superior breeding and intelligence. He went to several of Mr. Moody's meetings, and was conversed with by one and another, my wife being among the number. It was thought that he had come out of darkness into light, and one night I was introduced to him as a recent convert.

Soon after, I received a letter from him, the general drift of which is sufficiently expressed in the following words, which I quote from it: "I was sorry to have to leave home so soon, for I felt as if I could get some good from you, whose faith seems to be so strong. I want to get that faith and trust. I want to know that I have got it. Can you help me? . . . I am anxious to receive your reply to my question—Can you help me?"

I answered as best I could, and enclosed several tracts that I thought might assist him. His second letter came four days later, saying:—

"Your remarks are very comforting, and I trust will help me out of my great difficulty. But I must take time, and study your letter and Bible references, and examine myself, to see if I have a real faith. I pray for it night and morning, and try to be earnest in my prayers. The books you have sent I shall study carefully, and hope to get some help from them."

Again I wrote to him, and a few days after came his third letter, saying: "I thank you for the plain way in which you have put before me the matter of feeling; also, your remark, 'Examine Christ (not yourself or your faith), and see if you can as implicitly trust Him with your soul, as you can trust a bank with your money.' I say to myself that I do trust Him—that I know He can save me, that I know his blood was shed for me, &c.; still I am not sure if I fully realise it all. I seem to be like the one in the pamphlet you sent me, 'I have long tried to be religious, but cannot.' Only I cannot say as he did, 'I see it now.' I keep your letter in my pocket, and often take it out to read, hoping that light will come to me.

"I have a friend here who is very anxious that I should be confirmed in the English Church. I object, as I belong to the Scotch Church, and am a member of it with my wife, but, if being confirmed by the bishop was going to benefit me in any way, without detriment to my standing in my own church, I should be glad to have it done. I would like your opinion on this subject. What I mean by benefit is, if it (this confirmation) will help in any way to give me the light I am wanting?"

At this juncture it dawned upon me that I had been on the wrong tack with him in my attempts to argue and explain. Here, evidently, was a man who was dead in earnest, and who, I believed, was willing to come to God in his own way, only the devil was raising difficulties. This seemed to be a case wherein the man must be brought at once to a definite transaction with God—a deliberate, conscious surrender of self, and acceptance of Christ. I accordingly wrote a letter to that end, grounding it wholly on God's Word. Let me introduce the letter by my correspondent's answer to it.

He writes: "I am most happy to tell you that, through your letter, I have got hold of the 'Main-sheet' now, and with God's help will never let go of it. I saw it all at once on reading your letter: and as I could say from my heart that I believed God raised Christ from the dead, and that I was willing to accept this living Christ as my Lord, I followed your advice, and it seems as if a load was lifted from off my mind ever since."

Here is the advice referred to, as contained in my letter, and may God bless it now, dear reader, to the salvation of your soul: "'If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.' (Rom. x. 9, R.V.)

"In this one verse you have the entire conditions of salvation. Read it carefully; note the two conditions—confessing something, and believing something; and then ask yourself, 'Am I willing now, at this moment, to accept Jesus as my Lord?" If your heart replies, 'Yes; God knows I am!' then kneel down and say to Him aloud: 'Lord Jesus, I really believe in my heart that God raised Thee from the dead, and that thou art listening at this moment to my words—and now, according to this verse, written by the Holy Spirit of God, I hereby come to the point of decision, and now, at this moment, deliberately, willingly, and thankfully, I confess with my mouth, that I take Thee to be my Lord, my Master, my Saviour; and I give myself to Thee, the best way I know how, body and soul, for time and eternity. Lord Jesus, I do not merely say I do this, but I really mean it and do it. Amen.'

"When you have done this, and really done it, as really as your wife did, when she accepted you as her lord (her husband)—she did not merely say she accepted you, but she did accept you—then you have God's word to your soul, 'Thou shalt be saved,' in other words, 'That is salvation.'

"He does not ask you to feel or realise salvation. He relieves you of all doubt, or trouble, or speculation, or anxiety on the subject, by coming down with his Almighty shall! He takes all the responsibility, and says—That is salvation, feel or no feel.

"When you believe that God in this verse, in the last four words, speaks the truth, says only what He means, and means just what He says, then kneel down a second time, and humbly and gratefully thank him for saving your soul."

Let me add the following lines as singularly appropriate:—

"'Tis done, the great transaction's done—
I am my Lord's and He is mine;
He drew me, and I followed on,
Charmed to confess the voice divine.

High heaven, that heard the solemn vow,
That vow renewed shall daily hear,
Till in life's latest hour I bow,
And bless in death a bond so dear."

The subjoined passages of Scripture are recommended for perusal: John i. 12, 13; 1 Cor. xii. 3; John iii. 3, 16, 18, 36, and v. 24; Acts ii. 36; viii. 37; xiii. 38, 39; Rom. v. 1; viii. 1; 1 John v. 19, 20; ii. 12; iii. 1, 2 (R.V.). Read also Num. xxiii. 19; James i. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 13 (R.V.); Heb. xiii. 8; 2 Cor. i. 20; Psalm cxxxviii. 2; Luke xxi. 33.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.—The committee of the Lord's Day Observance Society have issued a powerful appeal to the directors of our great religious societies, asking them as far as possible to discourage Sunday travelling by their agents and deputations.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, PORTSMOUTH.—In the recent notice of "Miss Robinson, and Her Work," in our columns, the number of people attending the weekly meetings was stated to be 7,200, whereas that is the estimated number of people using the institution weekly for all purposes.

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL.—The work carried on by Mr. D. C. Joseph at the House of Industry, 394, Hackney-road, E., continues to make progress, though but few inquirers can be received into the Home for lack of funds. The visits made among the sons of Abraham and the reception of the Hebrew almanac for 1884 give cause for much thankfulness. There is an earnest spirit of inquiry among many Jews at the present time in all parts of the world. Mr. Joseph and other Jewish missionaries need the prayers and sympathy of Gentile Christians.

Notes and Comments.

WITHOUT the least approach to formality or mere custom, do we commence our Notes and Comments this week, by wishing all our readers in the fullest and truest sense of the words, "A Happy New Year." The word happy is so familiar and so generally regarded as synonymous with joyful, that to some it may seem hypercritical to say that it far from expresses our real desire for our friends. The word, however, in its original derivation refers to outward things only, things dependent upon the haps or chances, as some call it, of life. True joy is not dependent on circumstances; whatever happens to or befalls the trusting child of God in the year upon which we have entered, he may rejoice; all things, adverse or prosperous, work for his good. Our earnest desire for all, therefore, is that they may find the New Year daily bringing them into closer fellowship with the Lord, and revealing to them more and more of the riches of his grace. "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."

As we enter on the privileges and responsibilities of another year of editorial labour we are encouraged by the kind and appreciative words of friends in different quarters of the globe. One reader, at Beaufort West, South Africa, writes as follows:—

"I should like to assure you that in this isolated part of the Karoo I have found THE CHRISTIAN to be a boon which I should not like to miss. The healthy and vigorous tone it manifests on the great social and other questions of the day I appreciate thoroughly. I pray that by God's grace you may be enabled in the future as in the past to take up with no uncertain attitude the cause of might against right."

Another subscriber, resident in Ontario, Canada, says:—

"I read your reports of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings with the greatest interest, and long for similar meetings in Canada. THE CHRISTIAN has quite a circle of readers in this neighbourhood; it is sometimes sent from here as far as British Columbia. I pray that God may prosper you in your work for Him."

A third correspondent, an evangelist in far-off Australia, expresses a similar interest in the paper. We thank these friends for their prayers and kind words; we shall earnestly endeavour to merit a continuance of such practical sympathy.

In an article contributed to the Pall Mall Gazette, the Warden of Keble College has raised the question, "What is the charm of Quietism?" The term represents a mystic system of religious belief originated by a Spanish priest some two hundred years ago or more, a system which maintained that religion consists in the internal rest of the mind, employed in contemplating God and submitting to his will. Mr. Talbot judges wisely when he asserts that in an age when men's hearts and lives are secularised by competing interests, and perplexed by many complications, anything which encourages men to realise and act upon their filial relation to God is helpful and good. Intellectually also men need an influence which shall help to preserve the balance of thought, and keep from extremes and caprices of opinion and popular tumult. There is a preponderance of superficial religion among us, and it is largely owing to the want of quiet, earnest, and thoughtful regard to the fact that we are to "let the peace of God rule in our hearts."

Quietism has its weak and dangerous elements as a system; its indifference to the practical duties of life places it outside the sphere of such religion as is taught in the Word of God, and we must guard against allowing sentiment and mere feeling to take the place of consecration to the service of Christ. At the same time, it is unquestionably true that in these days Christians are in grave danger of neglecting the inner life, of paying too much attention to the claims of the world, far too little to those of the soul. Strength for service, and all right action are born of communion with God, and when all has been said that requires to be, for diligent performance of daily duty it yet remains true that "in quietness and in confidence shall be our strength."

We would remind our readers resident in the provinces, who desire to attend Messrs. Moody and Sankey's London meetings, that special provision is made for their accommodation. By sending stamped, addressed envelope to Mr. R. Paton, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C., they will be furnished with tickets of admission to the services. The meetings are resumed at Lavender-hill Hall, Clapham, next Lord's day, January 6.

The dawning of the New Year is apparently bringing with it the growth of a more enlightened policy on the part of the Russian authorities in religious matters. We learn with pleasure that the Rev. J. D. Kilburn, of St. Petersburg, has been granted permission to visit Russian prisons for the distribution of the Scriptures among the prisoners. We sincerely trust that this wise and liberal step is but the precursor of others that will tend to the real and lasting elevation of the masses of the Russian people.

It has been stated that there are eight requisites to make a prayer-meeting successful. They are punctuality, life, brevity, variety, point, promptitude, order, joy. Just now, when thousands of special meetings for prayer are to be held, it is well for us to consider these points, and to let our own part in such meetings be marked by attention to them. Of course the sine qua non, for a good and successful prayer-meeting, is the presence and power of the Holy Spirit; but this is no less likely to be realised because preparation and watchfulness against human frailties and mistakes are borne in mind by those who seek his aid. Chairmen, speakers, and prayer leaders have a responsibility laid upon them which they should not forget, as by inattention to wise thought upon it they may spoil a meeting and hinder the Holy Spirit's work.

It has been stated in the Nonconformist and Independent that sixty thousand Protestants—one-tenth, that is, of the whole French Protestant population—belong to churches without pastors. The fact appears strange, and reveals a condition of things far from flattering to the spiritual status of the Church to which it applies. The gifts of Christ for the maintenance among his people of the ministry of the Word are not withdrawn, and yet there is a dearth in many quarters of qualified men to act as pastors and teachers. The question suggests itself as useful for all churches everywhere, Do we sufficiently realise that it is the Lord's work to raise up and provide ministers for his Church? May there not be too much reliance on colleges, and upon earthly circumstances, in reference to the keeping up the ranks of the ministry?

The tidings this month from the various agencies for spreading the Gospel among the Jews appear to be specially cheering and hopeful. A very stimulating and encouraging summary of recent missionary intelligence appears in The Jewish Herald for January; those who think of such work as unremunerative and unpractical cannot do better than read it; their confidence in Jewish Missions will be established thereby. Mr. Friedlander's report of work among the refugees given in a recent number of Tidings from Zion is also of a character inducive alike of thankfulness and increased earnestness. After all allowances are made for losses and disappointments, it is stated that there is a greater number of inquirers connected at this moment with the Mission than at any time during the last ten years. As the time draws nearer for the re-gathering and restoration of Israel to their own land, surely zeal and heartfelt interest in their spiritual welfare should become more fervent on the part of all true Christians.

The agent of the London Society stationed at Hull gives the following gratifying account of the way in which, even among some of the orthodox Jews, Mission work on their behalf is regarded. He says:—

"I was visiting the shop of a very wealthy and learned orthodox Jew. We soon got on the topic at issue—Christ, and after a spirited debate the Jew said to me, 'I feel we Jews ought to be thankful to you Meshomodim (i.e., Jewish converts), because you keep as it were the lamp of God's Word burning amongst us poor Jews. Our own ministers never come to visit us, except on occasions of births, marriages, and deaths, and then only to the rich; and by your coming to us we do hear, and are led on to read what, alas! we so often neglect, our sacred Scriptures.' The earnest tone in which this peculiar testimony was given, was really a new phase to me to look upon Missionary efforts."

The decision of the Church Missionary Society to exclude all girls from their schools in China, unless the parents consent to unbind their feet, marks a new departure in Mission work. That the practice is cruel and unnatural is not to be doubted, but it is the custom of the land, and has been so from time immemorial, and some may think it questionable whether it is wise to make instruction dependent on nonconformity to a deeply rooted national prejudice or predilection. It might be well if Christian antagonism to fashion and worldly conformity, in England, were as pronounced as our friends of the Church Society would make it in China. But everywhere it is by the often slow but sure process of education in truth, rather than by compulsion, long standing prejudices are overcome.

The Hon. Roden Noel has written to The Pall Mall Gazette, expressing his deep sympathy with the movements set on foot for providing our destitute school-children with necessary food. He speaks of it as cruel to make little children work their brains with insufficient nourishment in their bodies, and argues that while in all cases where parents can feed their children, the right course is for school managers to insist on their doing so, it is nevertheless true that while the present system of starvation wages obtains, it is absolutely essential that along with compulsory education there should be a supply of food for those children who are unable to procure it at home. How far this should be the work of the State, or be left to the richer members of the community, is a point upon which opinions vary. That it must be done by some means is abundantly and urgently proving itself daily.

Mr. Noel's remarks on the general condition of the poor of our land are worthy of very careful attention. He says:—

"He who can read 'The Bitter Cry of Outcast London,' and Mr. Sims's 'How the Poor Live,' without wondering at the infinite patience of the people, must be 'made of stuff,' not only 'stern,' but impenetrable and obtuse. They wait three conditions—more enlightenment, organisation, and a leader. Once let them obtain these, and then has sounded the knell of our present fools' paradise, as of the plausible, comfortable commonplaces of landowning and capitalist political economy."

The conditions waited for are perhaps nearer fulfilment than some imagine, and the wise course to pursue is for all who perceive the drift of things to range themselves, on the side of fair and candid consideration of existing facts in relation to capital and labour, refusing to be biassed by the claims of class and self-interest on the one hand, or of spoliation and injustice on the other.

Some years ago the Rev. John Ross, of Hackney, used to keep before the Christian public the duty, the privilege, and the advantage, of proportionate and systematic giving; and those who adopted the principle of laying by a tenth, a fourth, a third, a half, of their income, as the Lord enabled them, for the support of Christian work, or for benevolent purposes, have, we doubt not, in every instance found the benefit of it.

We think we may also add, that the practice of apportioning a fixed annual subscription to those institutions or objects which the donor may decide upon helping, will be far more useful to the receiver, and more satisfactory to the donor, than the same amount given in occasional and uncertain donations. It enables the managers of the institution to apportion their outlay with some reference to a known income, and it saves the donor the necessity of considering the object and amount of every donation. At the same time, the total amount of his annual subscriptions may be so far within his means as to leave a margin for contributions to special objects.

Mrs. Watts Hughes continues, in a quiet but effectual fashion, to seek the welfare of poor lads in the Highbury district. In her Boys' Home, Holloway-road, twenty-seven destitute youths are sheltered. Besides the daily care of these lads, a weekly Sunday-school and evening service attract a large number of poor children from the immediate neighbourhood. During the week a mothers'-meeting and Temperance meeting are also held. We commend these efforts to the attention of all who can in any way help them on. Mrs. Watts Hughes' address is 19, Compton-terrace, N.

Among notable buildings just now in course of erection in our metropolis is the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, in Queen-square, Bloomsbury. The sad prevalence of these pitiable diseases renders it a cause for thankfulness that there should be an enlargement of accommodation for the treatment and relief of sufferers from them. The new building will contain 160 beds and cots, and a spacious department for out-patients. The outlay involved is £60,000, exclusive of site, of which amount some £19,000 is yet required. The fact that in England and Wales 120,000 persons perish annually of the maladies for treatment of which the hospital is founded, is in itself ground for rejoicing in the extension of its provisions; the more so, as the class of patients contemplated are the really indigent poor.

Professor Huxley spoke rightly when at a recent meeting at the Mansion House he said, in reference to efforts on behalf of the outcast poor, that mechanical endeavours to improve their condition from the outside must be futile and useless:—

"Improvement should come from the inside. Cultivate their intelligence and sense of dignity, give them higher aspirations than those which could be gratified by their common vices, and they would improve the houses of their own accord."

This is all true; only, while the Professor would stop at science, art, literature, and recreation as the means for raising them, we should place before all these, and as a factor absolutely essential, the glorious Gospel of the blessed God.

Several articles on the religious condition of prisons, in this and other lands, have recently appeared in our columns. It is a matter for much thankfulness that the spiritual destitution of criminals in foreign prisons is engaging the attention of some Christians. Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde-park Hall, is leaving this country in a few weeks, for the purpose of visiting the prisons of Italy, Turkey, and Egypt, in the hope of being able to bring the Gospel to those who truly "sit in darkness and the shadow of death." We commend this effort to the sympathy of our readers, and trust they will help forward the work both by their prayers and pecuniary assistance.

A scheme has been started for providing a Home for freed women slaves in Cairo, which promises to be successful. Mr. W. E. Forster has advocated it warmly in The Times, and it has been taken up by the British and Foreign Anti-slavery Society, the committee having opened a fund on its behalf. The horrors of slavery in some parts, even in these enlightened times, are fearful to contemplate, and women are perhaps now the chief sufferers; the gratification of human passions, and the maintenance of domestic slavery, forming the principal demands made upon the slave market. A grave reponsibility rests upon our Government in reference to the part played by Egypt in this traffic. The establishment of a Home such as that contemplated is an excellent idea, one well worthy of support.

Scientific men of late years have rejected contemptuously the very idea of the Deluge. They have ridiculed it, and would not even listen to any evidence in favour of it. The influence of all this has been very disastrous on the age. It is therefore to be noted that in the January number of Good Words, the Duke of Argyll, who has occupied the highest reputation and places in the Geological Society, has a paper which challenges the attention of the scientific world, and which gives remarkable proofs that since the birth of man a great flood of waters "prevailed exceedingly upon the earth" and "all flesh died that moved upon the earth."

It is a matter for devout thankfulness that we begin the year with such tokens of reaction against the scientific assumptions that have been darkening the air with scepticism. We are only at the beginning of this reaction. Certain scientific men have claimed an authority which has swayed multitudes. Men of equal eminence are now disputing this authority. One of the foremost among them (Principal Dawson, F.R.S.) has lately said that materialistic evolution is not only at variance with revelation, but with science, logic, and common sense.

A very praiseworthy project has been mooted in connection with the London Homœopathic Hospital and Medical School, Great Ormond-street, Bloomsbury, W.C. It is the endowment of several "Children's Cots" by mutual subscription. We are sure our readers will give the proposal a favourable consideration.

As a postscript to the issue of "The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit" for Thursday, December 27 (Passmore & Alabaster), Mr. C. H. Spurgeon writes as follows:—

"Thus have I completed twenty-nine volumes of these sermons without a break. When I commenced printing them, little did I dream that 1766 would follow in succession, and continue to be received by the Christian Church with favourable regard. I am very grateful. How great a labour this publication has thrown upon me, few of my readers can ever know; but their edification has been my full reward. I make bold to beg the renewed prayers of the thousands of my readers. Many of them have sent me help for my many Christian enterprises, and I am sure they will continue to do so, and will also yield me their loving intercessions. Long as time lasts, may these discourses speak in many tongues the glorious Gospel of the blessed God! No new notions are preached in these pages. The truth of the unchanging Word is that which I have always proclaimed. 'Modern thought' finds no friend or spokesman in me. Quite enough boast of their 'progress;' my glory is to be 'steadfast, unmovable.' Pray that I may be as a brazen wall to this generation."

We are sure our readers will be glad to join in the request of the preacher; all the more when they hear, as the latest intelligence states, that he has been seized, even in his warm southern retreat, with a fresh attack of his painful physical complaint.

We have received several letters complaining of the paragraph in the obituary notice of the late Mr. John Eliot Howard, in which some remarks were made of the want of Gospel teaching and testimony in the Society of Friends in the early part of this century, as compared with the present time. We gave insertion to one of these letters, but being indisposed to prolong a controversy, arising out of a memorial of one so loved and respected by all, we felt it better to submit the correspondence to Mrs. Guinness, who has written the following note in reply:—

"My Dear Friend,—I have read Mr. Sydney Cooper's letter published in yours of Dec. 20, as well as similar ones you have since enclosed to me, objecting to a passage in my obituary notice of the late Mr. John Eliot Howard, of Tottenham. I observe that none of the writers seem to have noticed the printer's error in the dates, which should have been 1830 and 1836, instead of 1850 and 1856, an important difference as affecting the question. But I write to say that I regret that the paragraph referred to was introduced at all into an 'In Memoriam' sketch of the career of our late beloved friend and brother; and that, rather than continue a correspondence which must, under the circumstances, be painful, I beg entirely to withdraw it.—I am, dear sir, faithfully yours,

FANNY E. GUINNESS.

Harley House, Bow, E.

We trust this note will be considered sufficient ground for the non-insertion of several communications, and for which, indeed, we could not afford the considerable space which they would occupy.

APPLEDORE, DEVON.—In our issue of Nov. 15, a paragraph was inserted with reference to religious destitution among the seafaring population in this port. A communication, which we regret to find was mislaid, has been sent to us by the Congregational and Baptist pastors at Appledore questioning the accuracy of our correspondent's statement, and asserting that the religious needs of the population are fully provided for.

CHRISTMAS DAY IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

VERY dreary indeed the East-end looked in the dull grey mist of Christmas afternoon. Scarcely a sound was to be heard; the streets were almost deserted; even the public-houses were closed up. All was busy and bright, however, at the Strangers' Rest, where I was courteously received by the secretary, Mr. Isaac, who kindly took me over the premises, and showed me the preparations for the sailors' Christmas treat. A great deal of good work is done at the Strangers' Rest. There is the "shop," as it is called, where men of all nationalities are welcome to step in and write their letters, read, or rest free of charge; behind is a large room in which evangelistic services are held for the Englishmen; above is another reading and writing room, a large room where a Bible class is held, and, at the top, other rooms, where meetings take place for Scandinavians, Germans, and occasionally Italians.

Nor do the friends at the Strangers' Rest only provide for Jack ashore. Some 1,500 bags of books are given away every year for men to read upon the voyage, while several ladies write letters to the sailors when abroad, and thus help to keep them in the right path. The Rest is worthy of better support. Something like 2,000 meetings are held every year, at a total cost of less than £400, out of which rent and taxes absorb about £100. There are no paid officials except the caretaker, a capital man for his post; and it is a pity that an institution doing so much at so little expense should have a balance against the treasurer.

On Christmas afternoon the shop was crammed with sailors, who spent a couple of hours, very heartily, singing Mr. Sankey's hymns and listening to Gospel addresses. At five o'clock came the adjournment of the Englishmen to the room in the rear, while the Germans retained possession of the shop, and after singing a verse, the business of tea was begun. Plates of bread-and-butter, jam, bread, and cake, quickly disappeared, while "more tea" was in constant request. When all were satisfied, the Germans vacated the shop for their room upstairs, and the doors were opened to admit some eighty poor ragged children who also had a feast of tea, cake, jam, and bread, which they eagerly devoured. The little urchins sang three verses of "Jesus loves me," several friends talked to them, and, on leaving, each child was presented with a pair of cuffs and a Christmas card.

Meanwhile meetings were going on in the English and German rooms, both of which were crowded. In the former, several addresses and exhortations were given, to which the men listened very attentively, and also joined vigorously in the singing. An anecdote by Miss Lockwood illustrating the dangers of delay, and a solo by Mrs. Isaac, seemed specially to impress them. Presently the meeting was thrown open for the sailors to bear their testimony. One man got up to say that there was no true happiness out of Christ; an old pensioner from Belvedere rose to testify that he had been a sinner, as bad as could be, for fifty years, but that Jesus had loved and saved him. A Swede stood up to thank God for his mercy; he had read the Bible for many years, and found peace at last under Miss Hedenstrom's teaching. Another said he had been a bad son and a bad servant—no use to anybody, in fact. He was first invited into the Rest by the secretary; what he heard there had changed the whole course of his life, and made him a better servant and son; he urged his fellows to decide for Christ. Then one came forward to say that he too had been as bad as bad could be; he had often been talked to by missionaries and others, but in vain; at length he came into the Rest, and attended its meetings; when away at sea he received letters and cards, and out of this had come his conversion. Yet another stood up to declare himself a monument of God's mercy.

The meeting came to an end with singing and prayer, in which twelve of the men present asked a special interest. After this came what was to many the great event of the day, the Christmas tree. The tree itself was given by Mr. J. Randall Wood, and upon it were socks, comforters, cuffs, albums, caps, bags of sweets, &c., in all about 150 lots, presented by miscellaneous friends, Messrs. Badger & Co. giving the sweets. Each sailor, on his way to the Christmas tree, was presented with a nicely-bound book and a ticket entitling him to some article on the tree, and much pleasure was evoked by the distribution, one gigantic "darkie" being particularly delighted with a red nightcap. On their departure, each received a bag of biscuits (the present of Messrs. Huntley & Palmer) and an orange, with, if they chose, a ticket for a tea on the following day.

So finished a pleasant afternoon and evening for Jack, though for the workers it was a very busy time. It is hoped and believed that good impressions were made, and that good results will follow. At any rate, for one evening, a hundred and fifty men have been kept out of mischief, brought within the sound of the Gospel. The Master's command, "When thou makest a feast call the poor," has been fulfilled. The results must rest with Him.

CHRISTMAS AT THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

AMONGST THE WIDOWS AND LITTLE ONES.

WE have much pleasure in telling the readers of THE CHRISTIAN what great joy we have had in distributing their bountiful supplies to both the aged and the young. The old widows came as usual to their class on Monday; but sewing was not the order of the day. After the singing of some Christmas hymns and a short address, warm garments were distributed among them, and each received a half-crown, a good piece of Canadian cheese, an orange, and a bag of sweets. Their delight and gratitude were touching to witness; we wish our Stratford (Ontario) friends could have seen the pleasure of the dear old bodies, as they received the Canadian cheese, and heard Mr. W. K. M.'s kind letter read, full of cheer and comfort to those lonely saints. One of them said: "It's just wonderful how the Lord opens the hearts of the rich to care for us poor ones!" Many are very aged, and are just waiting at the portal, watching for the call, whilst they work diligently for their weekly sixpence and tea, and help in making the children's clothing, either for service in England or emigration to Canada.

We returned to the Training Home from the Spitalfields Beehive on Christmas Eve, laden with gifts for the children. Before retiring we went to their dormitories, and filled the little stockings hung out for "Santa Claus" Early were they heard awake, busily regaling themselves with biscuits and sweets which their midnight visitors had provided.

In the morning we met as a family to tell out in song our joy, and once again recounted the birth of Jesus, who came to bring "peace and goodwill to men." Yea, the whole day was one joyous song of gladness to those young hearts. Every face was wreathed in smiles, except the two last rescued ones, and their pale, thin cheeks only told that they needed kindly nursing and loving care.

Would that, as a band of workers together with God, we could transmit the joy we realise in thus year after year entertaining these new families of destitute little ones. In every city in our land we should find, dining in Christian families, "those for whom nothing is prepared." Till He come, "ye have the poor always with you."

While the prince of this world is treading under foot thousands of parents, through the medium of drink, our work continues plain—saving the children ere they, too, are crushed by his delusions. Let every Christian resolve this new year to have his or her definite Christian work. Then we shall not have time to criticise the work or motives of each other. Let us obey the injunction to love one another, which is given fourteen times in the New Testament. Oh! for more open hearts and homes to shelter the "solitary in families" here, as well as in our colonies.

Our Christian brethren and sisters in Canada know that we do not bring them angels, but hundreds of letters now in our possession show that they "have entertained angels unawares." Our little ones have grown into their family life, and won their way into hearts and homes. Yes, princess and peasant can testify to this practical outcome of fifteen years' of Christmas songs, with orphaned, lonely-hearted children, and our present forty-first family is the loneliest of them all. The love of Jesus, manifested through his children, soothes the bitterest sorrow.

In the evening we contributed each our mite to the other's enjoyment. We began by repeating a poem, "The Lone Cottage." Then little Ada, aged four years, sang, "I'm a Little Pilgrim," followed by a young Italian girl in training, who gave, most pathetically, in her own language, "The Poor Mother."

Then we had several little songs and Temperance recitations, after which a boy of ten years offered to "act." This meant walking on his hands with heels in the air, across the length of the hall, telling only too truly of his Arab tricks. Their native talent in tricks and wit produced by want, was shown in full force. How we noticed the cleverness in these young philosophers of our day, and our hearts rejoiced that it was in our power to give them horses to drive, Canadian harvests to gather in, thousands of acres ready, waiting for these already developed youths to expend their talents upon.

Our merriment was calmed by two of our fellow-workers giving us a recitation in Hindoostanee and Welsh; and what with merry games, good cheer, and a bonny bright Christmas-tree laden with dolls and toys, we closed one of our happiest days.

We prayed that all the kind friends who had enabled us to make so many warm and comfortable, might receive in return spiritual blessings in large measure.

We hope to have an increase of homes in Canada to fill next summer, as we have taken up a fresh field, still more central; with our heavenly Father's blessing, what a comfort to be able to supply to many an overworked farmer's wife in the new land, a bright little sunbeam to cheer and comfort her in her declining years; or, as son, to aid in the never-ending daily detail of the farmers' life. It is just a mutual aid arrangement, but the successful issue depends on your prayers, kind reader, whilst we are sowing the seed in the young hearts under our care, that they may become a blessing in the families where they will be placed on arriving in the Dominion. £10 enables us to rescue one more. We receive girls under twelve years, and boys from ten to fifteen years of age. We hope to start our first party of boys in April, and the second in May.

Yours, in the Master's Service,

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

AN ACTRESS IN THE PULPIT.—A converted actress, Miss Neilsen, of Norway, is attracting great attention in Sweden by reading sermons and speaking in Methodist chapels and public halls. She began by reading Mr. Moody's sermons; and, being an excellent reader, she did not lack audiences. She is said to be doing an excellent work.

EDINBURGH CABMEN.—A large number of Edinburgh cabmen were treated on a recent occasion to a warm supper by several friends. Mr. Paterson, missionary in the old part of the town, reported that Temperance and other work, as a whole, was encouraging. Nearly a third of the men were total abstainers, and drinking had decreased among others. The meeting, which was addressed by a number of other Christian gentlemen, lasted from about 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. A good work is being done amongst these men by Miss McBride Brown.

CITY YOUNG MEN KEEPING CHRISTMAS

ONE of the annual events of the Young Men's Christian Association is the Early Morning Christmas Breakfast. This took place at the premises of the Association in Aldersgate-street, the proceedings lasting from about half-past eight to nearly eleven o'clock. Mr. George Williams presided, and about 170 persons were present, of whom a small proportion were ladies.

The CHAIRMAN, in the course of his address, said England had been celebrating the 400th birthday of Luther, and the celebration had been heartily taken up by the people of every land. But to-day they were celebrating the birthday of Luther's Master, Luther's Lord, his great and ever-blessed King. On that occasion they were assembled together at this happy Christmas breakfast as true disciples of their most blessed Lord. Their presence there was an indication how they loved Him and delighted to celebrate his birth, because it had brought so much of comfort and peace to their hearts. As an Association during the past year they could rejoice at the goodness of God to them. If ever there had been a year in which God had shown his special favour, it was during the past year. He thought they had never known so many to have given themselves up to Christ, and become his followers as during the past year, and they rejoiced with such. He had no doubt there were many there present who celebrated the birthday of our Lord with a heartiness and thoroughness they had never done before, because during the year they had found Him to be their Saviour in deed and in truth. All over the country progress had been made. Three new associations had been formed in the metropolis, and Mr. Hinde Smith, the late secretary, had sent to say that at Brighton a handsome house had been purchased for a new home for the Association. New buildings in connection with the organisation were rising in all directions. The Christian Church was beginning to realise and feel that care for young men was the highest Christian policy to pursue. They would, therefore, on this most happy Christmas morning rejoice and be glad, and he was happy to see so many bright sunny faces there. He trusted that they would all realise for themselves a happy Christmas.

Mr. HENRY VARLEY in his address referred to the comprehensive character of the term "salvation," human life, from the beginning to the end of it, illustrating the necessity of salvation. He was grieved at the manner in which Christian festivals were observed in this country. He stood like a brick wall against a pantomime Christmas. The prevalent mode of keeping Christian festivals was a travesty of the truth and a caricature of the reality. God intended Christmas to be a holy day in the sense of a high and blessed condition of spiritual life. Whitsuntide was one of the most important of the Christian festivals; it commemorated the time of the fulness of the Holy Spirit, and yet perhaps on that day more young women were ruined and more young men debased by drink and vice than at any other time of the year. The same state of things, more or less, prevailed at other Christian festivals. The nation had the devil's counterfeit of a holy day in too many instances.

Mr. W. T. PATON said there was a power in Jesus Christ such as existed nowhere else to lift up this humanity of ours, sunk and degraded and lost as it was, into all the fellowship of sons of God. They, as Christians, would allow no other name to rank with that of Jesus. In a certain town-hall in England he was told that there were carved upon one of the pillars the names of Jesus Christ, Shakspere, and Gœthe. A sceptic might say that enough concession was made in putting the name of Jesus topmost of humanity, but Christians would never rest satisfied with that. He could not help loving sceptics and pitying them, except when they traduced the name of Jesus. He was himself near scepticism once, but 30 years ago he found Christ, and his sceptical inclinations had long since gone. He was once told of a sceptic who was urged on by his companions not to show the white feather in the hour of death, but to hold on. The answer of the dying man was, "I have nothing to hold on by." The Christian, when he came to die, could stretch out his hand in the dark, and would find it grasped by the hand of the Once Crucified.

Mr. JOHNSON, a coloured African evangelist, said he was proud to have been six years a member of the Young Men's Christian Association; he was delighted to see the progress it was making. He exhorted young men who were Christians to stand out boldly for the Lord in these days. He had been for 28 years and nine months a slave in America, when the Bible was almost a sealed book to him and witchcraft was his religion. But the grand Gospel message was blessed to the poor ignorant slave, who found salvation.—Daily Chronicle.

The Mile End Assembly Hall.

DEAR SIR,—It was my great pleasure last Lord's Day to be with our brother, Mr. Charington, at the Great Assembly Hall. The building was literally packed, and evidently very marked spiritual interest pervades the work which he has carried on with such unflagging zeal for so many years.

I observe that the builders are getting on with the front part of the new structure. I rejoice in this, but I wish to ask through your columns whether some Christian capitalists will not at once substantially help our friend in his work. How I wish I could have had some wealthy men who reside at the West End, with me on Sunday last. The brutal and licentious degradation of the young people in the Whitechapel-road is distressing beyond words to exaggerate. I returned home sick at heart. The indolence of many of the churches on the one hand, and the neglect of those who are heaping up wealth either for hoard or extravagant luxury on the other, is precipitating a crisis, which must end in anarchy, revolution, and bloodshed. I am no alarmist, but the Word of God shows very clearly how lawless and godless will be the last days of this wicked and adulterous age. I confess to the extinction of some little confidence which I once had that even rich men would read the signs of the times, and not edge the people on to the day of tremendous retribution.

Like Nero, drunken and fiddling when the invader was at the gates of Rome, so the licentiousness of luxury is "nourishing the heart unto the day of slaughter" (James v. 5). Once let the masses, sodden with poverty, ignorance, drunkenness, and hatred of the rich, find leaders, and there may be another version of our Lord's testimony concerning the rich fool: "This night thy life and thy property are required of thee." I notice another millionaire is dead, leaving £5,000,000 sterling. One, who is himself a man of wealth, said to a friend of mine a short time since, "If you did but know how hard it is for those who have money to give it away, you would pity us." Gold keepers, or are they kept by gold—which? Let this fearfully selfish and dark picture of our social life continue, and a new crusade must be heard. Christian teaching and teachers will be compelled to proclaim with trumpet-tongue a social communism which shall put an end to a condition which is to-day straining our national life almost beyond power of endurance.

If my letter should lead some to help—yes—and to visit so that they may see for themselves existing conditions, I will not regret that two recent visits to the East-end made my heart burn to my fingers' ends. I hear the Word of God saying: "Bring now the tithes into the storehouse." Christian men, patriotic men, Englishmen, I appeal to you all to come to the help of the Lord against the rising tides of iniquity.

Jaffa Medical Mission.

THOSE who so kindly helped the Jaffa Medical Mission, in answer to an appeal in THE CHRISTIAN, about two years ago, will be glad to know that, as a result of that appeal, nearly £140 was raised. A large ward, containing eleven beds, with nurse's room adjoining, was erected on the flat roof of the Mission-house, and adequately furnished. This addition has enabled them to receive, during the past year, 150 in-patients; the number of attendances for the same time in the dispensary has been a little over 11,500. Who can say what may be the result? With help to the sick body, help was given to the still more sick soul. Several interesting cases are given in the report for this year. There is great need for a real hospital, as many patients have to be sent away for want of room. Now is the opportunity to build. A suitable site is still to be had, though all available land is being rapidly built upon, and the price rising very much. The Treasurer is Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N.

Young Toilers in the City.

THROUGH the kindness of two Christian friends, a hundred young women and girls engaged in City factories and warehouses were invited to dinner on the three Saturdays previous to Christmas, at "The Welcome" Restaurant, Cross-keys-square, E.C. Roast beef, plum-pudding, tea, and coffee, were amply provided under the direction of Mrs. Fisher, who is unremitting in her labours of love among her hard-working sisters in the City. It was no small boon for these young people to sit down to a substantial meal, for many of them have fared but badly for some months past, owing to the scarcity of work at this season of the year.

After dinner the guests adjourned to the Lecture-hall of the Y.M.C.A., where Gospel addresses were given by several gentlemen. The exhortations of these friends were listened to with every attention; several professed at the close of each meeting to be desirous of knowing and serving the Lord. A double blessing was, therefore, in some cases the result of the kind thoughtfulness of those who provided these substantial meals.

Mission Appeals.

EVANGELICAL MISSION, GRAVESEND.—Mr. F. WHITE, South Hill, Gravesend, appeals for pecuniary help for a work he is carrying on at this place among the respectable poor. Many of them are in great want, but they listen to the Gospel.

TRACTS FOR WORKMEN'S TRAINS.—Mr. WILLIAM VEALE, 129, Tiverton-road, Stamford-hill, London, N., will gratefully receive sheet almanacks, Gospel books and tracts for distribution at the early morning workmen's trains, or they may be sent to Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM, Open Air Mission, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

RESTAURANT HOME, MORTIMER-STREET, W.—Miss FLORENCE CAMPBELL appeals for help for a work among young women in business. The Home in Welbeck-street having to be given up, £3000 will be required to carry out the above proposal, after which it will be self-supporting. Through the efforts of Lady Ailsa and others, £1600 has been collected. Communications may be addressed to Mr. G. W. CAMPBELL, 34, Queen's-gate-gardens, S.W.

THE HOME, 29, ALEXANDRA-ROAD, ST. JOHN'S-WOOD, N.W.—The lady superintendent of this Home urgently asks help for current expenses. A lady and gentleman promise £2 each if ten others will do the same, or £1 if twenty will give a pound each. Those who enter the Home pay towards expenses. W. B. HORSFALL, M.D., 18, Gloucester-crescent, Regent's-park, N.W., will be glad to receive contributions.

MISSIONARIES' HOME, PLYMPTON.—Mrs. CHAPMAN writes us that she and her husband have been obliged to give up this Home for lack of support. Besides spending the greater part of her income, and obtaining a mortgage for £200, there is a debt of £50 needing immediate payment, towards which she would be glad of the sympathy of our readers. Address: Mrs. CHAPMAN, Beech Cottage, Newton Ferrers, Plympton, near Plymouth.

THE SADDLE ON THE RIGHT HORSE.

THE modern "publican" is, in the eyes of many social reformers, about as objectionable a personage as the hated extortioner of New Testament times. How far the vendor of fiery and poisonous liquors deserves the maledictions that are so freely poured out upon his devoted head we do not attempt to determine. Judging, however, from a somewhat remarkable article in The Echo, of December 27, the publican is, to a large extent, an ill-used man—a cat's-paw, in short, of his wary but still more culpable masters, the distillers and brewers.

The writer of this article, taking for his text a recent deliverance by Mr. James, the President of a Devonshire "Wine, Spirit, and Beer Trade Protection Society," on the subject of Licensing Reform, proceeds to reflect the light thus thrown on "the inner workings of the Liquor Trade." Let the facts speak for themselves, and let the saddle be put on the right horse:—

"Mr. James shows clearly enough that the publican is very much what the brewer has made him. Few people have any idea of the extent to which the bound-house system exists. In the city of Liverpool there are 800 public-houses managed by people who have been placed in them by the brewers, and who have no capital invested in such houses at all; and beside these there are a large number of others to whom the brewers have advanced a portion of their capital, and who are consequently compelled to purchase all their liquor from one source. In Plymouth, Devonport, and Stonehouse, out of the 650 public-houses, 500 are owned by or are leased to brewers and spirit merchants; so that only 150 retail members of the trade are at liberty to purchase in the open market. The result is that while the wholesale dealers are realising large fortunes, the retailers are driven to all kinds of shifts to keep their heads above water, and not unfrequently carry on their business in a manner detrimental alike to the health and the morals of the community. Even the deterioration of the quality of the liquor supply is often directly due to the wholesale dealer, who supplies anything he pleases to a bound-house. Not a few of these houses are mere spiders' webs, from which the small investor seldom escapes until every pound of his savings has been sucked out of him. Mr. James gives as an example one fully-licensed house in his own town belonging to a brewer, which was let to no fewer than five different tenants in five years.

"Let us glance at the commercial working of this system. The spider advertises that he has a licensed house in a good situation, incoming £600, part of which may remain. The fly is at once caught. Having saved £200, he goes to the spider with it, and signs away his liberty with the usual recklessness of simple people when legal documents are set before them. He has first of all to pay £20 per annum on the capital fictitiously lent. That, however, is comparatively a light evil. He has to bind himself to purchase from one source only. He is charged from 10 to 15 per cent. more for his goods than he would pay for the first quality in the open market. Often the difference is still higher. There is one firm in Plymouth which charges no less than 30 per cent. more to the keepers of bound houses for their own ale than is charged by such firms as Bass and Allsopp. Wines are sometimes loaded with a profit of 100 per cent. As for spirits, it is simply impossible to buy French brandy in a bound house; such an article is not allowed. The "best French Brandy" of the bound publican largely consists of plain new German spirit, which, as Mr. James observes, "is little better than poison.' This stuff, when imported, differs but slightly from pure alcohol; and, when reduced to the strength at which it is supplied to the retailer, it costs the wholesale man only two shillings per gallon, exclusive of duty. These revelations will explain to the public why it is they purchase spirits retail at a few well-known houses 12½ per cent. cheaper and 12½ per cent. stronger than at ordinary London public-houses.

"The moral effects of the bound-house system are still more pernicious. Almost invariably the brewer escapes all responsibility, even though it is morally certain that he must have a knowledge of reprehensible practices, and absolutely certain that he could have prevented them if he had exercised ordinary supervision. The man of straw has to bear all the consequences, and the Licensing Magistrates decline to inflict a loss upon a large firm of standing and respectability. Mr. James cites such cases, of which he has personal knowledge in his own town. He declares that at the appeal to Quarter Sessions in one case "the evidence given as to the manner in which the business was conducted in this seething hell of vice, immorality, and crime, was simply appalling, and that the owners must have known how the business was conducted. Yet they escaped with impunity. In another case the house is so 'vile' that the present occupant is about giving it up in sheer disgust; yet the President of the local Publicans' Society anticipates that it 'will be galvanised into a putrefied existence by the operation of the brewers' battery.' In the third case a member of a local firm of brewers, when the woman who kept the house complained of dull business, suggested that she had two daughters and might obtain a few other girls as an attraction.

"We are not at all surprised that the Licensed Victuallers' National Defence Fund, which depends largely upon the brewers for pecuniary support, is anxious to disown any complicity with Mr. James' damaging revelations. The facts may be left to speak for themselves; as in regard to land and to house property, so it is with the liquor trade, the division and subdivision of interests is contrary to public policy. Mr. James considers the abolition of the wholesale monopoly indispensable to any comprehensive measure of reform, and so do we."

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE IN FRANCE.

THE Religious Tract Society has supplied the funds necessary for the free distribution of 10,000 copies of the "Bulletin Dominical," the organ of the Swiss Lord's Day Observance Society, among the employés of the French Post-office and railways. The Society is much encouraged by the success attending its efforts in many parts of the Continent.

SASSAN, SARDINIA.

An English Evangelist, Mr. J. E. Thomas, is labouring single-handed in this town of 30,000 inhabitants. By Gospel services and Sunday-school, he and his wife endeavour to present the Gospel to those whom they are able to reach. Not a little persecution has to be borne by those who take a decided stand on the side of evangelical truth. Mr. Thomas desires that he and the little band of believers in Sassan may be remembered in prayer by our readers.

JAMAICA.

Shortly after the week of intercessory prayer last year, a remarkable movement commenced in the county of Manchester, Jamaica, which is still in progress, and by means of which great numbers have been awakened and converted, while many merely professing Christians have been aroused to serve the Lord with truer purpose of heart. Although some opposition has been occasioned, the work continues to bless and to be blessed, while to all who have taken an active interest in its furtherance and usefulness, it has been a time of much encouragement and refreshing.

The writer spent several weeks in the midst of the movement a short time since, and is able to testify his belief that in answer to prayer, the Lord is indeed "visiting his people," and that in these latter days "his hand is not shortened that it cannot save; neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear." Would your readers remember the work at this season of general supplication?—Faithfully yours,

BROOKE M. PANTON.

PARIS.

Evangelistic meetings were held here from Dec. 1 to Dec. 16, under the direction of Mr. McAll. The Presbyterians kindly lent their church, the Oratoire, for the purpose. A prayer meeting, presided over by M. Th. Monod, followed each meeting. Salvation was the subject treated of, and the numerous and attentive audience seemed to appreciate what they heard, for many remained to the after-meeting. At one of the meetings, M. E. de Pressensé read a letter from a free-thinker, in which he expressed his disgust at so-called free-thought, and his desire to arrive at a true belief. The experiment has so well succeeded that it will be followed up. It is assuredly a joyful spectacle, this concourse of Christians of diverse Evangelical churches, united in seeking the conversion of souls, and finding each evening hundreds of attentive and serious auditors listening to their earnest appeals.—Le Christianisme au XIX. Siècle.

PUNJAB ITINERANT VILLAGE MISSION.

For some time past the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society have been convinced that more strenous efforts should be made to reach the people of the numerous villages which surround the large cities of the Punjab. It has therefore been decided that a great effort should be made to reach the village population. In accordance with the proposed plan of operation, the Amritsar Tahsil has been made over to the Native Church Council, who have stationed the Rev. Mian Sadiq, our native itinerant missionary at Jhandiála, in the midst of the villages of the Amritsar Tahsil, where he is working with great acceptance amongst the people. The large and important Tahsil of Tarn Taran has been made over to my charge. Tarn Taran ranks second amongst the sacred places of the Sikhs. It has a population of 6,000 souls, with over 300 villages surrounding it, containing 261,676 people. As a centre for missionary work it stands second to none in the Punjab; every month there is a Mela held there, to which thousands of people flock from all parts. We earnestly appeal to our friends to assist us in this great work. At the present time there is not, we believe, any other English missionary of our Society in the Punjab, who is able to devote himself specially to the villages.

Obituary.

MR. T. D. MARSHALL.

WITH sorrow we announce the decease of our earnest Christian brother, Mr. T. D. Marshall, of Oxford-street, W. For some months he had been in feeble health; his end came suddenly on the 16th ult., at Worthing, whither he had gone for the sake of his health. During recent years Mr. Marshall warmly espoused the work of the Salvation Army; his eldest son is one of its "captains." Other religious societies will also miss him. As for himself, he has gone to swell the throng of the glorified.

CAVALIERE DE MICHELIS.

God has called home to Himself one who for 21 years has been an earnest worker in Italy, Cavaliere Professore Paolo de Michelis aged 44. After a long illness, he died quite suddenly, a little before midnight, Dec. 21, in consequence of a violent attack of hœmorrhage from the left lung. From November, 1862, he resided at Pisa, where he laboured for many years as evangelist in connection with the Free Christian Church. Last September he came with his family to Spezia, as it was thought the mild sea air might be conducive to his recovery. His funeral took place at La Spezia on Christmas Eve, at 5 p.m., and was truly a proof of how much he was esteemed and beloved, both at Pisa and Spezia.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND McGRANAHAN IN IRELAND.

BANDON.

(From a Correspondent.)

ON Sunday, Dec. 16, a Mission was commenced here by Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. The meetings were held in the Town Hall, in which there are sittings for about 500 persons. It was nearly full at the first afternoon service, when Major Whittle delivered a most suitable and forcible address on John xiii. 34, 35. The attendance at eight o'clock was much larger. During the week two meetings were held each day; the choir sang for half an hour while the people were gathering. Inquiry meetings were commenced on Tuesday, and continued after each meeting. Wednesday afternoon was specially devoted to the young folk, when Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang some of their beautiful songs, and taught the children to sing one of them. It was a week of great blessing.

On Sunday, 23rd December, the Mission was brought to a close, by a meeting at four o'clock and another at eight. The hall was full to overflowing, so widely had the interest in the good work grown. Both the singing and the preaching had won the people. Some came early in the week to see and scoff, who before the Sabbath dawned had been subdued and saved. The last meeting was one of marvellous power. The Major enforced the words, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock;" and then Mr. and Mrs. M'Granahan sang, "I will." The whole service was a great victory for the Saviour. Altogether upwards of 200 professed to believe to the saving of their souls. Such a spiritual awakening has not been seen in Bandon for more than a generation. All classes were reached and stirred. The Episcopal ministers did not join in the movement, but the beloved evangelists were supported and helped in their work by Rev. G. R. Wedgwood, Methodist, Rev. T. Brown, Presbyterian, and by lay representatives of all the churches.

Some of us were rather annoyed at your reference to Bandon in your issue of Dec. 13. Your informant could not have known this town. We had no hindrance whatever. All classes attended the meetings, and no one was molested. So far from opposing the Mission, many Roman Catholics expressed sympathy with it. At the closing meeting, Major Whittle referred to the harmony and union and peace that had prevailed all the week, and expressed his gratitude to God for the great blessings which had been poured out upon Bandon.

We are glad to report that the meetings held by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan during the past weeks in Bandon, Midleton, and Mallow, have been orderly and quiet, and the people attending them undisturbed, with no police force called out either upon the streets or at the meetings for the keeping of order. As the last two of these towns are almost exclusively Catholic in population, the trouble at Wexford would seem to be indicated as local in its character. It is but fair to the Roman Catholics of Ireland to say, that most of their leading organs have condemned those who precipitated the riot at that place, and that there is no evidence of any organised purpose on the part of the Catholics of Ireland, as such, to put down evangelistic work.

That our fellow-citizens there have much to learn as to the true principles of liberty of religious opinion, is undoubtedly true; this is strongly evidenced by the riot at Wexford, and by the resolutions passed by the eighteen Roman Catholic Town Commissioners of Enniscorthy (nine of them said to be publicans), protesting against Messrs. Whittle and MacGranahan going to that town, on the ground that there would be riots, and that their meetings were "irregular assemblies, under the name of religious meetings." It is to be deeply regretted that those who had invited the evangelists to Enniscorthy felt compelled by the threats of mob violence to the persons and property of all Protestants (evoked partly by this same resolution) to withdraw their invitation, and to decline receiving them. The meetings were therefore not held in Enniscorthy, and the eighteen Town Commissioners are certainly not to be congratulated on the fact. Catholics will sooner or later themselves see that to allow a religious service to be broken up by a mob is a precedent and example they can little afford or desire to encourage.

AMONG THE KABYLES.

IT has been a hard wrench to break away from those we have just left, but meetings and partings must occur in this changing world. But who can describe the intense joy we have experienced in seeing souls impressed and softened by the truth, and anxiously looking to us for light and teaching.

It would effectually reprove the incredulity of some who have said to us, "You will never succeed in converting a Kabyle," if they saw how near some are to the kingdom of God. Surely whether amongst English, French, or Kabyles, without the Holy Ghost none can either see or enter that kingdom. We do not go to them with half a Gospel, a work completed outside of us merely, but we reckon upon a mighty power sent down from heaven to make it effectual in us and in them, an unspeakable price paid, but also a power exerted; a glorious redemption effected, and a life also communicated. Christ for us, and a Christ in us. This is the efficacious Gospel that must and does succeed.

Now to further explorations; to scour the district immediately under the Jur-Jura mountains. We made our way along the road cut on the sides of the mountains for many a mile, parallel to various distant ranges, dotted over with villages of the Louaoua of the West. We distinguished the schools of the Peres Blanc on the Beni Janni, and the ait Menguellet, and passing the villages of Tavuirt Amran and Agouni Nesellen on the right, distinguished by their square minarets, we come to the village of Tiferdout (Beni bon Youcef), the highest in this part of the country. To the left, on a spur, with scarped sides, we passed the village of Koukou, of the Louaoua of the East, the ancient capital of a kingdom mentioned as a powerful one by Marmol, in the sixteenth century, and of which a few unimportant ruins are all that now remain of its ancient splendour. Recently a number of cannon were found there, one of which is a breechloader. (Handbook.)

Now the wild and rugged scenery bursts full on the view, and one is reminded of the Prophet's description of the judgments of the latter day, when men shall go into the clefts of the rocks and into the tops of the ragged rocks for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty when He ariseth to shake terribly the earth (Is. ii. 21). Through these "clefts of the rocks," the traveller passes to the Valley of the Sakel. The road reaches Jur-Jura by the Col of Tizi-n-Djama, overhung by immense limestone rocks, and then rises the turfy Col of Tirouda, through a valley, where in 1857 the female marabout of Soumeur, Lalla Fatimah, took refuge. Her capture hastened the submission of Kabylia." (Murray's Handbook.)

At El Hammam there is a flourishing school for boys, and one for girls. One at Ait Saada (Beni Ataf), and another at Beni Laziz (Akbil). The Government provides a mule for one of the schools, in order to fetch water for the Instituteur from a distance. Here, both country and the people are wild, and the people are seen in all their originality and exclusiveness.

If anything is done in this quarter, there should be two men, combining the gifts of evangelist, doctor, mason, carpenter, and having hearts burning with love to Christ and the people, able to endure the isolation from civilised life, at all events as well as the Pere Blancs do in similar circumstances.

But now for another region. On a bright, fresh Sabbath morning we proceeded by a long winding path on the side of a mountain to a large distant village, crowned by the white tower of its Mosque, and scattered along the length of its topmost summit; the mountain rose up to a considerable height on one side of our path, and deep precipices descended on the other, many a "Sebah el kher"—good-day—were uttered, as we passed the travellers, with their laden mules and donkeys. Ere long we neared the picturesque spot, the women, on their way to fetch water, gazing with wonder at the unwonted sight of Roumi travellers, and especially of a Roumi thamtouth, showing that we were in the vicinity of their homes. The children laughed, but scudded away.

Entering the village, the Djemâa was straight before us. Passing some men reclining against a wall, we called to them "ased," beckoning them to "come" and hear at the Djemâa. On entering this their village parliament house, which consisted of an open shed, surrounded with stone seats, we soon had about fifty men, boys, and children gathered to hear us. We explained to them that we were English travellers, who loved them, and were come to pay them a visit, and, with their permission, give them some of the words of Sidna Aisa. We were learning Kabyle, and wished to know if they understood what we said. We read to them from "the Book of Light," repeated the Lord's Prayer, and sang "Come to Jesus." They listened with solemn attention. On asking if they understood "the famadh," a young man replied, "irkoul" —everything!

We briefly explained the Gospel, and spoke of the first coming of Jesus to die for their sins, and his second coming as the Judge of mankind. This always takes with the Kabyles, as there is a general expectation that Jesus is coming soon to judge the world, and their attention was rivetted. They were greatly interested more than anything to hear a thamtouth Roumi (a foreign lady) repeat some texts in their own tongue, and smiled with astonishment. They were very friendly, and saluted us courteously when we retired. This will show how accessible they are.

CABMEN'S MISSION, KING'S CROSS.—A correspondent writes to us:—"It was my privilege to be present last month at one of the Sunday evening services for the London cabmen in their Mission-hall, King's-cross. I was much impressed by the bright Christian spirit which pervaded the whole. The missionary, Mr. Dupee, is full of energy, and is evidently used as an instrument in God's hands of winning souls for Him. The personal testimonies given in the after-meeting were deeply touching. One after another of the cabmen rose, and told of the preciousness of that "peace which passeth understanding." Though daily life to them is often rough and stormy, yet they could tell of enjoyment of the better part, of which they had first learned within these walls. The other branches of the Mission comprise visiting the sick, working amongst the cab-stands, temperance work, Sabbath-schools, &c.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—During the terrible storm that recently swept over the country, the canvas-covered circus at Manchester, which had a nightly attendance of over 800, and on Sundays often 2000, was blown down with a terrible crash in the middle of the night. This is a sore blow to the work, which for the time being has to be carried on in two small school-rooms. The Vicar of the parish states that he can point to over a hundred homes totally changed through the efforts of the Church Army. At the head-quarters (21, John-street, Adelphi, W.), suitable working men are engaged as "captains" as fast as the conductors of the Army can find them. They cannot provide the parochial clergy with "captains" half as quickly as they are wanted. The Bishop of Oxford has notified his intention of becoming an annual subscriber to the Church Army Training Home at Oxford.

An Exceeding Bitter Cry.

A CRY from fetid alleys,
Where the sunbeams fear to shine;
A cry from loathsome cellars,
Where the outcast herd like swine:
A cry from lonely sickbeds,
Where sufferers pine for death;
A cry from stifling garrets,
Whose air is poisoned breath.
Oh, the bitter cry of London,
It keeps ringing in our ears;
The Cry of Outcast London,
Who can hear it without tears?

The cry of helpless women,
The cry of hopeless men,
The cry of starving children
For food to nourish them;
A cry from dens of darkness,
Where Satan's strongholds lie;
A cry from prisoned souls fast bound
With chains of slavery.

A cry that none can silence,
A cry that nought can drown,
A cry that rises night and day
From the sad heart of the town;
A cry for tender pity,
A cry for love and light,
A cry for help and healing
For freedom and for right.

Like a mighty surging ocean
The flood of evil rolls,
Oh, who will dare to stem it?
For love of precious souls—
For the glory of our Master,
Who bore for us the shame,
Now, forward, every Christian,
In Jesu's blessed Name.
Oh, the bitter cry of London,
It keeps ringing in our ears,
The Cry of Outcast London,
Who can hear it without tears.

Letters to the Editor.

THE DAILY PRESS AND BETTING.

Sir,—Are the Times, Daily Telegraph, Standard, Daily News, and other newspapers justified in encouraging betting, by reporting in large type and prominent positions the transactions in betting, and thus fostering and extending it? On the Warden-Watters case, the Times had an excellent moral leading article on November 28, in which it said: "The broad outlines of the story are only too familiar. We have the clerk, who wishes to make money rapidly, who is tempted to gamble, first with his own property, then with that entrusted to him by his relatives, then with that of his employers." There was a sufficient analogy between that leader and the system of gambling and betting generally to warrant me in using the occasion for bringing the subject to the front, and I accordingly wrote to the Times on November 28, drawing attention to the inconsistency of its useful moral articles, deprecating a system, while in another way it encouraged it by regularly reporting its transactions, and giving in effect the gist of this letter.

The Times took no notice of my letter, and so on December 3 I wrote to the Standard, but with a similar result. On December 6 I wrote to the Daily Telegraph, the Daily News, and the Pall Mall Gazette, with a similar result; and on December 10 I wrote to the Globe, St. Jame's Gazette, Morning Post, Daily Chronicle, Echo, Evening News, and Morning Advertiser, but in each case with a similar result. I submit that this letter had as much right to a place in the Times columns as the numerous letters on less important subjects which find a place there, because of its being widely representative in character. I am justified in asserting that out of our thirty-six millions of population there are millions who feel aggrieved at the Times, Standard, Daily Telegraph, Daily News, and other influential papers, reporting with such persistent prominence (and thus recognising and extending) the practice of betting, and whose views were represented by my letter.

When we reflect upon the immense influence which these twelve daily papers exercise not only upon their immediate readers but upon other newspapers, and through them to their readers, both at home and in the Colonies, and when we further reflect that not one of these twelve papers would give insertion to a public expression of opinion against betting, it forces the mind to the unhappy conclusion that our greatest secular social power considers self-interest to be of more importance than National interests, for it dare not offend a section of its clientèle by admitting a direct attack upon betting, although its own articles deal vaguely on generalities connected with the system. Yet we all know that it is only by a direct attack, and not by vague generalities, that any result is effected.

The position of a daily paper is different to an ordinary business, because of its immense influence. The daily Press of this country could bring about endless wars and commercial catastrophes. Its power for moral good or evil is equally great and immensely affects the welfare of the nation. The Press occupies rather the position of a soldier than that of a man of business. If a soldier considered self before country he would be unworthy of his colours; and the comparison may be applied to a daily newspaper, for although we do not expect pulpit utterances, we do expect that it will not give countenance to systems which are destructive to the character of its youth, who will have to fill our places in a few years.

It is a fact too little recognised by our current moral literature—by the Press, the platform, and the pulpit—that betting and gambling are dangerously increasing, one proof of which is evidenced in the numerous new sporting papers with which the railway bookstalls are now covered, and which did not exist a few years since. When the Alexandra Park property was offered by auction last summer, the particulars gravely described "A public betting enclosure—a betting enclosure for members of Tattersalls,"—as if betting were a recognised profession. The Times recently reported the prosecution of the proprietors of two betting houses at Epsom, in which 5300 letters and telegrams were found referring to betting transactions with persons in various parts of the country. I need not enlarge upon this fact, or quote others which are frequently occurring, to illustrate the evil.

The complaint I venture to prefer against the Times and other papers is, that they should constantly head one of their columns with the word "Betting," in large type, followed by information on betting transactions, and thus give their great authority to the recognition and extension of a system, the principle of which their articles admit to be wrong. The impartiality of the Times and other papers is carried too far, or not far enough, for if there is to be no limit (though a limit seems to be drawn against those who write against betting), and evil is to be encouraged as well as good, a column could as consistently be granted for the recognition and extension of assassination and other secret societies, if only they became more popular. By 16 and 17 Vic. c. 119, it is unlawful to keep a "place" for betting, and by 30 and 31 Vic. c. 134, s. 23, it is unlawful for more than "three" persons to congregate in a street for the purpose of betting; thus it is plain that the spirit of the Act is to discourage betting, yet the Times, Standard, Daily Telegraph, Daily News, and other papers, with their immense influence, allow their columns to be used by betting men in disseminating information which encourages betting, and thus is in direct opposition to the spirit, although not the letter of the Act of Parliament.

The recent revelations of the gambling house at Monaco, show that gamblers frequently commit suicide in consequence of their losses there—that in the one month of last January no less than twenty-three persons who gambled there committed suicide.

I venture to submit to you that, through the assistance given by the Times and other influential newspapers to betting, as if it were a laudable vocation, instead of a dangerous system, that the principle is receiving an impetus which is daily gathering force, and is imperilling the youth of our country. Why, sir, should betting be recognised by the Press as an honest institution? Would you or the Times editor approve your sons becoming betting men? Would you entrust a solicitor with family money whom you knew to be a betting man? Would you open an account with a banker if you knew him, or even his manager, to be a betting man? Would you appoint as a trustee for your widow and orphans a man (whatever his good qualities in other respects) whom you knew to be a betting man? Does the public repose confidence in betting men? Betting is against the spirit of Acts of Parliament, and it is held in abhorrence by the right-thinking men who support the great moral and religious institutions of our country; and why, sir, should the Press recognise and encourage it as an honest system?

Your obedient servant,
C. F. Dowsett.

EMIGRATION TO NEW ZEALAND.

Dear Sir,—I notice in the "Notes from New Zealand," in your paper, that the writer recommends Christians who have an income of £200 or £300 per annum to go to New Zealand, as they would be better off and would enjoy better health. I have lived in the North Isle five years, and the climate is lovely; but from my own experience and what I have seen of others, I should advise persons with the income named to think twice before they leave their native isle for the far inferior isles of the Pacific. If they have a long family who are not doing well here that would alter the case. I have met many people in New Zealand who much regretted leaving a good home thinking to better themselves out there. I write this as a caution, as people are misled by statements read in papers. People who have lived in comparative ease here, find things go very hard in the Colonies. I should recommend only those who cannot do fairly well here to go to New Zealand.

Colonial.

RICH AND POOR IN WEST LONDON.

Dear Sir,—A great deal has been written respecting the wretched state in which a very large proportion of the poor live. Various remedies have been suggested to improve the present deplorable state of matters. I have visited a great many of the wretched hovels in which the poor live in the Lisson-grove district in the North-west of London, and I have never witnessed anything at all comparable to, or even approaching, the lamentable condition of the poor of the above district. I have seen pictures of vice, filth, degradation, and squalid poverty, such as I verily believe are not to be met with in any other part of the world. I assert, without fear of contradiction, that there few places, if any, on the face of the earth, where cuch a state of things exists, or would be permitted to exist.

What has most astonished me is that so very few of the professed Christians who live in the West of London appear to know anything about the poor, and how they live, and what is being done to carry the Gospel to the perishing in the above district. One hears of conferences, conventions, and meetings held for the promotion of spiritual life; such meetings being crowded, especially if a popular speaker is announced. If a meeting is held to promote the cause of Christ among the perishing, very few would attend it, or take any interest in it.

I am quite sure that the Gospel is the remedy to elevate the poor. There is more wanted of the religion that Christ and his Apostles practised and taught, and less of mere sentimental religion. Christ healed the sick and fed the hungry. If his followers wish to impress the poor and distressed with the reality of religion, it must be done by following the example of Christ, and prove to them by loving sympathy and kindness in the time of suffering and poverty, that we are really interested in their spiritual welfare.

The poor cannot be expected to be contented with mere barebone doctrine when they are sick and starving. I have met with devoted servants of the Lord Jesus who suffered the greatest poverty, when within a few hundred yards there were living professed Christians in grand mansions, and faring sumptuously every day. Christ very plainly tells us in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew that He will abundantly reward those of his servants who minister to the least of his sick and suffering people, He also as plainly tells us what He will say to those who do not so minister. Excuses of not knowing, &c., He will not then accept.

One who Loves the Poor.

A MINISTER RUINED BY DRINK.—A Liverpool correspondent informs us that a minister who once preached the unsearchable riches of Christ, and pointed sinners to the Lamb of God, may now be found among degraded associates in one of the lowest haunts of that city. Being asked the other evening if he ever intended to reform, he replied, "No; I'm a lost man; already I feel the flames of hell within me, and if I had my choice of being saved or having a glass of whisky, I would prefer the whisky. If I was going to die the next minute I would have the whisky."

Notices of Books, &c.

AFTER WORK. E. Stock. An attractive volume of gleanings suited for young and old. It has many chapters of what is aptly called "Home Reading for the Family Circle."

THE CHURCH. Vol. III., New Series. E. Stock. This old-established magazine presents in its neatly bound yearly dress many features of freshness and value. It is full of reading at once varied and useful.

CHRISTOPHER CRAYON AMONGST THE GOOD SAMARITANS (1s. J. Clarke & Co.) is a collection of Mr. Ewing Ritchie's lively and realistic sketches of charitable agencies, contributed to a weekly contemporary.

HOW WE ARE SAVED. 1d. S. W. Partridge & Co. This is a small Gospel book, calculated to be of great service; it should be well known and widely circulated. It is suitable for distribution among all classes, and can be enclosed with an ordinary letter.

THE THOROGOOD FAMILY. By R. M. BALLANTYNE. 1s. Nisbet & Co. A capital book for boys. Important truths are interwoven with interesting narratives; the aim of the author, that of winning the soul for Christ, is at the same time kept well in view.

THOUGHTS ON LIFE AND GODLINESS. By Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS. Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. 6d. Short papers or sermonettes on practical aspects of the believer's life, rich in spiritual teaching. The book is neatly got up, and very suitable for a gift to young converts or to those who lack definite knowledge of the way of salvation.

THE GOSPEL ALPHABET. By C. R. HURDITCH. 1s. J. F. Shaw & Co. Twenty-six handsome cards, displaying the letters of the alphabet. Around each is a Gospel text, attractively arranged, and on the back are texts and verses bearing on the same subject. The idea is a good one, and well carried out.

A DAILY BREAD ALMANACK has been compiled and published by Rev. James Smith, Free Church, Manse, Glenbucket, Aberdeenshire. (1d.; cloth, 3d.) It furnishes a text for every day in the current year, one subject being continued throughout the month. It will, doubtless, be a help to the study of the Scriptures.

THE SYSTEMATIC BIBLE TEACHER, for School and Home. By J. GREEN. 2s. G. Stoneham. This work is designed to supply parents and teachers with a series of Bible lessons for school and home. They are arranged after the model of Mimpris. The explanatory notes given, and the selection of hymns, &c., make the book a useful volume.

VICTOR OR VICTIM. By JOHN SAUNDERS. Temperance Depôt, 337, Strand, W.C. A powerfully-written, dramatic story, illustrating the perils that attend the common use of intoxicating liquors. The responsibility incurred by doctors who freely prescribe these to patients is emphatically shown; we wish the note of warning could reach their ears.

A LIGHT UNTO MY PATH. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. By Miss E. J. WHATELY. Short suggestive chapters on the negative and positive aspects of Bible teaching. A looking-glass whereby a searching examination is made into the spirit of the precepts that should guide the daily life of the believer, and by which all may discover in what graces and duties they are deficient. A profitable book to study withal.

WORK FOR JESUS. By FAIRLIE THORNTON. Partridge & Co. This small volume of sacred poems has the true ring about it; a spirit of consecrated fervour flows off in tuneful numbers, cheering and invigorating to the soul. It has a threefold aspect, "calls to work," "words to workers," and "after work." Those who are familiar with the writer's name attached to fugitive magazine pieces, will be glad to welcome them in this collected form.

THE SHORTER CATECHISM; WITH COMMENTARY. By Rev. A. WHYTE. R. & R. Clark, Edinburgh. 2s. 6d. The latest issue of the "Handbooks for Bible-classes," and by no means the least in value. Some of the doctrines propounded in the Catechism are not popular now-a-days; all the more do they need to be held forth and their Scripture basis shown. Dr. Whyte has rendered good service to the cause of truth by his exposition of this compendium of theological lore. The book is full of information and suggestiveness.

MAY LESTER. By Mrs. JOHN BRETT. S. W. Partridge & Co. The life story of one who, with many opportunities of self-indulgence, preferred a career of self-sacrifice that met with a rich reward.

ROBINSON CRUSOE. T. Fisher Unwin. A superb edition of Defoe's immortal tale, with many richly-coloured pictures. A short introductory sketch of the author is given. A very handsome gift-book for a boy of adventurous tastes.

HERMIE'S ROSEBUDS, and other Stories. By L. T. MEADE. Hodder & Stoughton. Seven short stories for young readers, in this popular author's best and most realistic vein. Profit, as well as pleasure, will accompany their perusal.

WINNING AN EMPIRE. By GRACE STEBBING. J. F. Shaw & Co. A cleverly-written story, with plenty of dash and movement in it, intended to narrate the conquest of India under Lord Clive. Two other delightful and attractive stories, especially for girls, from the same publishers, are: BEK'S FIRST CORNER, by J. M. CONKLIN, and THE CAGED LINNET, by Mrs. STANLEY LEATHES.

Messrs. Dean & Son, 160A, Fleet-street, have issued some attractively got up and profusely illustrated books for the very young folks, under the title of "The Rose and Lily Series." THE FRIEND OF THE FRIENDLESS (same publisher) tells of the actively benevolent life of Elizabeth Fry. Dean's Gem Packet of Rewards (1s.) is an assorted collection of pretty booklets illustrated by highly coloured chromos.

THE BROAD AND NARROW WAY. 1s. Morgan & Scott. Some years ago a Dutch allegorical picture of German origin, was brought from Amsterdam by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, who has since imported more than 4000 copies. As a Dutch picture can only be a minimised blessing in this country, an English edition has long been a desideratum. This edition is now produced with an illustrated "explanation," and will be valued by ministers, missionaries, Sunday-school teachers, &c.

DAINTREE. By BERNHARD HELDMANN. Nisbet & Co. A curious amalgamation of sermon and story, clothed in a very florid style of diction. The story, such as it is, hinges on the strong, almost imperious, wish of a father that his sons should follow the same occupation as himself, though their tastes and capacities were in widely different directions. Quotations from Scripture are very profusely scattered over the pages, though their congruity is not always apparent.

HONEST JOHN STALLIBRASS. By Rev. J. JACKSON WRAY. J. Nisbet & Co. Mr. Wray is a born story-teller. He has laid the scene of this lively tale partly in the Central Highlands and the East Coast of Scotland, and partly in Honolulu, so that there is ample scope for the display of his descriptive powers. He appears to be fond of the Scottish tongue, but he is not at home in it; nevertheless, he has produced a book with a fine sea flavour, and one that will be read with avidity.

HETTIE; OR, NOT FORSAKEN. By F. M. SAVILL. Shaw & Co. 1s. 6d. A story of a superior class, relating the adventures of a little orphan girl six or seven years old, among low life in the courts and alleys of London; and how the Christian teaching of her sainted mother brought forth fruit amid the unlikeliest surroundings. Although the reader is introduced to many scenes of sin and sadness, the spirit of the story is bright and cheerful, and all ends happily for the little heroine and her friend Mopsie.

THE GLORIES OF CHRIST AS SET FORTH IN THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS. By E. A. H. 1s. J. E. Hawkins. We cordially welcome an enlarged edition of these Bible-readings, which originally appeared in our columns, and were looked forward to from week to week with much interest by many of our readers. The amount of time, thought, and spiritual intelligence manifested in these Bible-searchings is out of all proportion to the size or cost of the book, which we heartily commend for what it says, and still more for what it suggests.

THE ROBBER CHIEF; OR, TOO GOOD FOR HIS TRADE. By EDWARD BURTON. John F. Shaw & Co. The hero of this romantic tale is a young Scottish chieftain, the loved and trusted of a wealthy maiden. Envious and treacherous rivalry succeeds for a time in blighting and tarnishing a noble, unstained character. Grief and despair throw a life of worth into the leadership of a robber-gang; yet in that capacity he is strangely retentive of virtues which ultimately soften the hearts of his enemies, and restore lost joys, sweetened by bitter experience. The book is full of interest, and contains many an important lesson.

OUR OWN GAZETTE, AND Y.W.C. ASSOCIATION NEWS. Edited by Mrs. STEPHEN MENZIES. 1d. monthly. S. W. Partridge & Co. The first issue of this paper for young women is full of promise. There are contributions by the Editor, Mrs. Reaney, Rev. W. Haslam, Rev. C. J. Whitmore, Hon. F. Dillon, Miss C. Maynard, Hon. E. Kinnaird; specimen pages from Mr. Moody's and Mrs. Menzies' marked Bibles: and much other useful reading. The paper has a live and attractive look about it that will commend it to its special clientèle. A guinea prize is offered monthly for the best paragraph on subjects of special interest to young women. There seems little reason to doubt that it will speedily secure a wide constituency.

CORNISH STORIES. By MARK GUY PEARSE. T. Woolmer. 2s. 6d. Everybody will hail with pleasure a new volume of word pictures from the pen of this genial Methodist. We recommend it as a strong counteractive to tired brains and morbid feelings. Broad humour, practical commonsense, and the deepest pathos are charmingly combined; the whole is pervaded with a spirit of fervent piety. The characters who figure in the first story, "Christmas Eve in the Vivid" are cleverly depicted in the frontispiece and reproduced in gold on the front of the cover. Among the group, the one entitled, "Ye Parson," is, if we mistake not, a good likeness of the worthy author himself.

STRAY SUNBEAMS. By DR. W. M. WHITTIMORE. Stoneham, 67, Paternoster-row, E.C. A pleasantly-written book for young people from the pen of one who knows how and upon what subjects to speak to them. PLEASANT READINGS, 1s., and LIGHT AND HELP, 1s. (same publisher), are valuable little books, printed in large type, specially suitable for old people. The same may be had in packets of twelve tracts, price 6d. CHAINS FOR THE NECK, 1s., is a daily text-book for the young. A verse of Scripture and poetry are given for each day. The selection is good, while the type and binding are all that can be desired.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR suitable men of God as candidates for the Church Army.——For God's blessing on the Lewisham Bridge Mission at the New Hall, on the 3rd inst.——For special services to be held in the new year in Waterloo, West Shefford, Frost Village, Portage du Fort, Lumber districts, and other places in Diocese of Montreal, Canada.——For a Mission to be conducted in the parish of Godstone, Surrey, from Jan. 5 to 17.——For a little band of converts at Trouville.

MR. SAMUEL INSULL has been engaged during the past month in delivering Gospel Temperance addresses at well-attended meetings in Berks, Kent, Hants, and the metropolis, at which a number of persons signed the pledge and took the badge of blue. At Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard's Mission Hall, Potter's Bar, on the 27th ult., an interesting meeting was held, presided over by Rev. G. Stanton Batty, the vicar, at which addresses were delivered by Mr. Insull, Mr. Wood, and Mr. Sheppard, which also resulted in additional converts to the Blue Ribbon movement.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—As the work of the Theatrical Mission was noticed in last week's CHRISTIAN, some of the readers may be sufficiently interested to visit the scene of operations. Our respective Institutes—for girls, 21, King-street, and youths, 14, York-street, Covent Garden—are open daily, except Sundays, all the year round, and can be seen from 12 to 8. The best time for a visit is on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays, 5 to 7, or at the Friday tea and evangelistic meeting, at 4.30. We want to add dormitories as soon as means, just now greatly needed, are forthcoming.

COURTHOPE TODD, Director.

UNION OF PROTESTANTS IN ITALY.—A second meeting of the Intermissionary has been held in Rome, with very definite practical results. This committee, hitherto an informal brotherly gathering, was constituted a Conciliation Tribunal, an ultimate Court of Appeal, for the friendly settlement of all differences between the denominations. An assembly is to be held in spring for promoting the union and co-operation of the Italian churches. Two members of the Intermissionary are to draft a scheme for this assembly, as to colleges, schools, the press, and all matters for united effort, outside of individual Church action.

WILLIAM PATERSON,
Hon. Sec. Free Ital. Church.

Fraserburgh, N.B.

Week of Prayer, January 7—12, 1884.

SYDNEY Y.M.C.A.—The foundation-stone of a new home for this important Association was laid on Saturday, October 27, by Mrs. Hampson, the well-known evangelist, in the presence of a large company. The site cost £13,000, and the buildings, with furniture, &c., will absorb £20,000 more. It was stated, in the course of the proceedings, that the visit of Dr. Somerville to Australia gave a great impetus to the work of the Association.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Grateful thanks are rendered to those Readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have, during 1883, helped with their contributions the work in the Homes of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution.

A few facts connected with the work may interest such kind helpers. About 1,000 Young Women and Girls have been assisted during this past year, by the Homes and the Open-all-Night Refuge.

At times during the year, the difficulties arising from want of income were severely felt, but in the Lord's good time supplies came to hand. Many were brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The work of the New Year is now entered upon, in the hope that the Lord may direct in all things, to the saving of souls and bodies of poor Young Women and Girls during 1884.

Contributions may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or to 200, Euston-road, London, N.W. EDWARD THOMAS, Secretary.

THE CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR PRESENT.
DAILY LIGHT ON THE DAILY PATH.

In the very Words of Scripture. Two Volumes. Morning Hour and Evening Hour. Sold separately or in sets. "These two text-books have long been favourites, but we would call the attention of those who may have not seen them to the fact that they are devotional text-books containing only the words of Scripture. The text chosen as key-note heads the page, and other texts bearing on the same subject follow. They are very practical little books, and few more suitable gifts could be found."—Christian. Small Edition, each volume, French morocco, gilt edges, 2s.; Large Type Edition, each volume, cloth extra, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. "SCENES FROM THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS."
— A Poem —
BY RICHARD BALL RUTTER.
ANTIQUE STYLE.
TRÜBNER & Co., LONDON.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Treats some of the more striking episodes in Bunyan's Allegory in good and scholarly Spenserian metre," &c.—Graphic.

"The volume merits attentive perusal, and that and careful comparison will show that in pouring from an older to a modern vessel the essence is retained. The work is a fine specimen of typography by Mr. Bellows, of Gloucester, and is most handsomely got up in antique print and style," &c.
Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Even those who are most familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress, and who are most critical in the examination of such a work as that before us, will give Mr. Rutter's volume a warm welcome.

"Its pages have a sustained elevation throughout, and the various scenes have a distinct literary merit apart from the interest of the subject," &c.—Western Daily Press.

"'The Land of Beulah,' and 'The Description of the Celestial City,' are both very grand, and worthy of special notice," &c.—British Friend.

Issued Monthly. Price 1s. 6d. per Year.

EIGHTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

COMMUNICATION from CUPAR (FIFE).

Miss Ann McLaren, of Mid-Bondfield, who herself benefitted greatly from my advice, writes concerning a brother:—"I have heard from my brother in New Zealand. The Balsam you sent out has quite cured him. He says 'it is like a fresh start in life.' He speaks most gratefully of your kindness."

CASE of a WELSH INDEPENDENT MINISTER.

Rev. J. P. DAVIES wrote me in December of last year. He had suffered long with frequent spitting of blood, pains in the chest, and other symptoms. He continued under my advice until June, his strength increasing, cough diminishing, and general health steadily improving.

September 27 he writes:—"I am glad to inform you that I have enjoyed splendid health. I got cold, however, last week, through getting wet to the skin, and have consequently had a slight relapse."

In a fortnight afterwards he writes:—"I have recovered from the relapse. There is something beyond imagination in your medicine. For ten months before I consulted you I could hardly preach. Now it is a comfortable and easy thing.

"I am telling the Welsh papers that you are known to most of our leading ministers, and I shall feel it my duty to assist you in any way that I can.

"The Farm, Deri, Cardiff."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

HENRY MOORHOUSE, the English Evangelist.

"The record is full of interesting incidents from which counsel and encouragement may be gathered; and we heartily commend it to the attention of those who would know what may be done by workers somewhat off the ordinary recognised lines."
The Rock.

BIBLE READINGS BY HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We do not wonder that those who heard Moorhouse's Bible Readings found them full of power and suggestion. To him the Word of God was a sword—the only one worth using in spiritual warfare."—Liverpool Courier.

"This volume will be heartily welcomed by not only workers in the field, but by all who love to study the Divine Word. A careful reading must stimulate moral seriousness and earnest service for Christ."—Christian Commonwealth.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.

Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word 'seven' in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

PROTESTANT BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.

The attention of the benevolent public is respectfully invited to the claims of this Society, which may be briefly summarised as follows:—

The Society was founded in 1863 for the purpose of assisting the Blind poor of Great Britain and Ireland, by life pensions paid monthly at their own homes, through the agency of voluntary visitors.

This system of distribution, besides being the most economical to the Charity, is one that gives the greatest relief and gratification to the beneficiaries.

The Society has now upon its register 425 pensioners in receipt of allowances ranging from 10s. to 25s. each per month, and an approved list of 180 candidates seeking election.

In the selection of candidates no religious test is demanded, it being only required that they are in need of assistance, and their moral character is satisfactorily attested by responsible persons.

The only expenses of management are a nominal salary to the Secretary, a donation given to another charity for the occasional use of its board room, and the unavoidable cost of printing and postage. Hence nearly the whole of the moneys received go direct to the objects for which they are given.

Having barely sufficient funds invested to provide for one year's pensions, the Committee are compelled to rely from year to year upon the generous contributions of friends, and they appeal with all earnestness to those able to give for a share of their Christmas contributions.

Treasurer, N. J. POWELL, Esq., Devonshire House, Shortlands, Kent; Hon. Secretaries, Messrs. THOS. PEACOCK and A. S. DODSON; Secretary, W. E. TERRY; Office, 235, Southwark-bridge-road, London, S.E.

C. F. CARPENTER'S
HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT, BISHOPS TEIGNTON,
SOUTH DEVON.

Bishops Teignton is about two miles from the coast, and is one of the most beautifully situated villages in England. The climate surpasses that of Torquay, being more completely sheltered from the North-east, and having, from its position, a fuller advantage of the bracing air of Dartmoor. One of the leading London physicians, who has resided for some weeks at the Establishment, speaks of it in his testimonial in the highest terms. A complete suite of baths, under medical supervision; extensive private grounds; and, as far as possible, every Christian home comfort.—For terms and testimonials apply to C. F. CARPENTER, Bishops Teignton, South Devon.

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM.

Among the various nervous diseases, so intricate and intractable, and so alarmingly on the increase, we have had many cases of restoration to health when the patient had been pronounced incurable by skilled physicians. In short, it must, we think, appear patent to all, that whatever proof of the genuineness or usefulness of any remedy can be desired, has already been abundantly supplied by grateful patients on behalf of the Odo-Magnetic method of treatment. We shall enter upon a better state of things when the physician looks to nature chiefly for the principles on which to prescribe. Macaulay thought it not unlikely that remedial discovery might in the twentieth century add several more years to the average length of human life. If we are to realise this hope, towards which we have as yet made little progress, it can only be by the most perfect obedience to nature's laws.

It behoves us at all times to be extremely careful that we do not allow our prejudices to warp our judgment; but, before we condemn, let us apply ourselves to careful and unprejudiced examination, research, and inquiry, and, it may be, to adoption.

The subject here advocated has of late become very popular with many classes of the community, and, as a natural consequence, has forced itself on professional attention; and we earnestly trust it will receive that extended attention and support which it deserves. Great reforms in every department of religion, of politics and of science, have been demanded by the people before they have been conceded by the authorities. We are content to leave it to the acceptance of those readers who love truth because it is truth, reform when it is reform, and to the consideration of such as are interested in a great remedy because they need one, either for their own good, or the good of their fellow-men.

From Mr. J. GOVES, 4, Admiral's Hard, Stonehouse, Devon.

November 26, 1883.

"Your treatment has been the means of restoring me to good health from a state of debility from which I had suffered for over six years. Briefly, my symptoms were loss of appetite, an increasing sense of weakness and sinking, and consequent loss of flesh. My duties became burdensome, and failing to gain help from medical treatment, I knew not what to do, but I am glad that I sought your advice, for it has been greatly blessed to me, and I am now enjoying full, vigorous health, and feel that I cannot say enough in praise of such a remedy."

Mr. GARRATT will always be happy to reply to inquiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

COUNSELS AND THOUGHTS FOR THE SPIRITUAL LIFE OF BELIEVERS.

By THOMAS MOOR.

CONTENTS.—I. Full Salvation in Christ. II The Spiritual Conflict. III. The Life of Faith and Fellowship. IV. Justification, Sanctification, &c. V. Briefer Thoughts and Counsels for Daily Help in the Spiritual Life.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The author's vessel does not hug the coast of ordinary experience, but launches out into the deep waters of confident trust, assured faith, and intense consecration. Every paragraph tells of an experimental fellowship with Jesus, and a closeness of intercourse which fit it for becoming the guide and advisers of others. Certainly there is here no milk for babes, but strong meat for those who are of full age."—Sword and Trowel (Rev. C. H. SPURGEON).

"There will be doubtless a considerable sphere of usefulness open to such a book. It is pious and thoughtful, and cannot, we think, be other than productive of benefit to its readers."—Literary Churchman.

"This is a choice volume, by no ordinary scribe; a delightful combination of the good old Puritan doctrine and advanced spiritual instruction. The index, on the opening pages, awakens an appetite which is fully supplied in the rich fare throughout the book; and it seems to us impossible that any believer can rise from its perusal without a deeper sense of his indebtedness to God for the riches of grace he is here so sweetly reminded of as being provided for all his necessities in relation to life, conflict, and final victory. This is truly a book for the times, and we give it our strongest commendation, hoping that the entire edition may be speedily exhausted."—Footsteps of Truth.

The Christian.

FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP.

IN days gone by the stern character of the times was reflected in the almost savage representation of the Gospel of God. Theories of election and reprobation were carried to such extremes that our forefathers spoke of elect infants who were saved, and of non-elect infants in hell. The pendulum in our days has swung to the other side, and God is said to be the indulgent Father of all mankind. Love has been so interpreted as to do away with Law, and Grace has been conceived of as altogether ignoring guilt.

Let it be freely admitted that beings made in the likeness of God have a claim to call Him Father. The angels are called the sons of God, and if Satan be a fallen angel, the same relationship might be claimed for him. But the sacred writer withholds it, and says that "Satan came also among them" (Job i. 6). Possibly at an earlier time, when the Morning Stars sang together, Satan, yet unfallen, may have been included among all the sons of God who shouted aloud for joy. But by apostasy and rebellion he and his angels forfeited their right to the privileges of sonship, and could only be treated as criminal subjects of the Great King.

The Apostle quotes with approval the heathen poet, who says, "We are also his offspring," and himself admits that heathen men are the offspring of God. Matthew, writing concerning Jesus as King of the Jews, traces his genealogy to David and Abraham; but Luke, writing the Gospel of the Son of Man, traces it back to Adam, "who was the son of God." If we are the offspring of God, and if Adam, out of whose loins we all came, was a son of God, then must every son of Adam be also to that extent a son of God. And this, indeed, is recognised by the Lord Jesus in his Parable of the Prodigal Son. The modern exposition which would confine the application of this parable to backsliders and deny it to other sinners, is refuted by reference to the circumstances which called it forth. "Then drew near unto Him all the publicans and sinners for to hear Him; and the pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, 'This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them.'" Surely all the publicans and sinners were not backsliders! No: it was to justify God in receiving sinners that the three parables, the Lost Sheep, the Lost Money, and the Prodigal Son, were spoken; while the two which follow, the Unjust Steward and the Rich Man and Lazarus, completely turned the tables on the accusing pharisees and scribes, who are here described as unjust stewards defrauding God, selfish rich men careless of their poor neighbours, and doomed to hell, while Lazarus is carried to Abraham's bosom.

The true answer to the modern heresy which makes all mankind children of God, and therefore in a state of salvation, is not to deny that we are all his offspring, or that we are all sons of God by our descent from Adam, who was the son of God; but to show that fallen men are sons of God to the same extent, and only to the same extent, as fallen angels are sons of God. In both cases the privileges of sonship have been lost, and the transgressors can only be treated governmentally, and punished as rebels against the authority of God.

Our relationship to Adam seals our doom, for in Adam all die. When he sinned he was driven forth from the presence of God, his privileges of sonship were forfeited, and he must henceforth be treated, not as a member of God's family, but as a transgressor of the Law of his Government. We believe indeed that our first parents were not only clothed with the skins of slain beasts whose bodies were offered in sacrifice, but that, believing in God, and the atoning sacrifice of which those slain beasts were types, they were forgiven their iniquity, and made children of God in truth, by faith in Christ Jesus, however dimly they foresaw his day.

But being fallen creatures in the flesh, they could only transmit a sinful nature to their posterity, and Cain their firstborn, instead of being called a son of God, was "of that wicked one." For it seems to be a natural law that if we yield ourselves to the devil we become his children; so that not only have we, as children of Adam, lost our status as sons of God, but have become by nature children of wrath (Eph. ii. 3).

When the representative men of the representative nation claimed God as their Father, Jesus said, "If God were your Father, ye would love Me; for I proceeded and came forth from God. . . . Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do" (John viii. 33—47). So in the parable, the good seed, the righteous, are the children of the kingdom of their Father, but the tares are the children of the wicked one (Matt. xiii.). And again, John says in his first Epistle (iii. 8, 9), "He that committeth sin is of the devil. . . Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin."

Thus Scripture declares not only that as sons of Adam we have forfeited our sonship to God, but have become children of disobedience, therefore children of wrath, because children of the wicked one.

Nevertheless, God has not forgotten that we are his offspring. He has so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son that we, children of the wicked one, might become sons of God.

But this can only be through death. The first Adam and all his seed bear the utmost penalty of their sin in the atoning death of the Second Adam; and all who by faith receive Him become the children of God, children of the resurrection. The true sonship of God is in resurrection life.

Jesus is the only-begotten Son of God; that refers to his eternal sonship. He was born of Mary, at Bethlehem; that was his incarnation. He is the First-begotten, or Firstborn, from the dead; that is, in resurrection.

The incarnation of the Eternal Son of God did not redeem man, it only made redemption possible. His death and resurrection obtained our pardon and justification. But as Jesus Christ was born again out of death—declared to be the Son of God in power according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead—that He might become the Firstborn of many brethren, it is of evident necessity that we must also be born again, that we must die out of our old Adam life, and rise into the new condition into which Jesus Christ has entered by his death and resurrection—in order to become sons of God. "Marvel not that I said unto you, 'Ye must be born again . . . born of the Spirit.'" These are no figures of speech. Just as by faith in the Old Serpent our first parents and all their posterity became dead to God, children of wrath, children of the wicked one, so by faith in God through Christ Jesus crucified and risen do we become dead to self, dead to sin, and alive to God. As faith in Him that had the power of death brought death to us, so faith in the living God manifested in flesh, and now raised from the dead to die no more, brings to us everlasting life.

These are they who have been born of water and the Spirit, and have been translated out of the power of darkness into the Kingdom of God's dear Son. These are as many as, having been baptized into Jesus Christ, into his death have been baptized, that, like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life (Rom. vi.).

In Adam, our relationship to God is that of criminals before a righteous judge. In Christ, it is that of children to a loving father. In the former God can only condemn us; in the latter, "Behold, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

Capital Punishment.

SOME letters have appeared lately in The Manchester Examiner on Capital Punishment, from the pen of "Verax," which contain facts of great importance as helping the formation of right opinion on the subject. Advocates of the death penalty generally plead that its abrogation would lead to an increased amount of murder, but statistics as to countries where it is already abolished appear to prove the contrary. In Holland the punishment ceased in 1870; in the eight previous years there had been nineteen murders, in the eight subsequent years seventeen. In Belgium no execution has taken place since 1863, but the proportion of murder cases has been considerably less than before that date. So in Finland, and in the fifteen cantons of Switzerland where the death penalty is abrogated. The same statement applies to Michigan and other American States.

From the spread of some conviction on the subject, whether of humanity or of the uselessness of the punishment, it is evident that in countries where the sentence is still passed, a growing unwillingness to carry it out prevails. In Austria, for example, during the ten years from 1870 to 1880, 806 persons were sentenced to death, only 16 were executed. In France, for the same period, one-half the sentences were commuted. In North Germany, from 1869 to 1878, 484 were condemned, but only one was executed—Hödel, who attempted to assassinate the Emperor. Even in our own country nearly one-half of those sentenced to death have the sentence commuted. While such uncertainty attends the penalty, its force as a deterrent from crime cannot but be greatly diminished, and the argument based upon it is weakened.

Of course the ultimate appeal must be to Scripture and moral law, but the arguments here are, to say the least, anything but clear and indubitable on the subject. It seems, as "Verax" says, an anomaly for a judge to ask the Lord to have mercy on the soul of a culprit, while we show none either to body or soul, and certainly, as Christians, for us to plead for vengeance as our prerogative is out of harmony with the inspired record, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." Life is in God's hand, both to give and to take, and while to take it is manifestly no safeguard to society, it is equally sure that for man to say when it shall terminate is to accept a responsibility from which we may well shrink. The subject demands serious consideration, both from the moral and political standpoint. G.

THE POOL OF BETHESDA.

AN ADDRESS AT GLASGOW,

By PASTOR THEODORE MONOD.

(Read John v. 1—15.)

THIS narrative, with which we are all familiar, centres around three sayings of Christ. The first is: "Wilt thou be made whole?" the second, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk;" and the third, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee."

A QUESTION.

Around the Pool of Bethesda are gathered a great multitude of impotent folk—blind, halt, withered. Thus do we often see large assemblies of Christians who know but little of the power of Christ, and among them unconverted men who know not Christ at all, but yet have some desire to know Him. Man without Christ is blind, is halt, is altogether withered. These people at Bethesda might be healed if they stepped into the water, but only one of them could be healed at a time; and that is the great difference between them and us. Christ does not say to us, At such a place and at such an hour, if you can reach the point before the others, you shall be healed; no, He invites us all at any time and in any place. As regards ourselves, we have to blot out the word "first," and leave only the "whosoever" to stand.

But there is another important word—"whatsoever." "Whosoever, then, first stepped in, was made whole of 'whatsoever' disease he had." Oh, these two words, whosoever and whatsoever, think of them! We are for ever saying, "Oh, but my case is so very peculiar." Well, "whosoever" must include you; if you come to God He will receive you. "Ah, but if you knew how miserable I am—the peculiarities of my temperament, of my mind and heart, or of my family; I do not think that what is said here can meet my case exactly." Perhaps not; but the Lord can understand and can heal "whatsoever disease" is distressing you. In these two words we have enough.

Here, then, was a man who had had an infirmity thirty and eight years. It is not said that he had been lying there for thirty and eight years, but he had been ill for all that time. It was as if we were told of a man now suffering since the year 1845. I do not suppose there are any among us who would say: "I have been seeking for spiritual healing for the last thirty-eight years;" but some of you may be thinking, "It is long, very long, since I have been desiring some better thing—desiring forgiveness, healing, cleansing; and now it is rather too late for me. I have waited so long, desired so long, tried so long, that I am sick and weary of it. I have gone through so many explanations and heard so many exhortations, I do not think they meet my case." Think, then, of this man, who had an infirmity thirty and eight years. He sees a stranger passing along, looking at those who are sick. And lo, the stranger stops before him, considers him in silence, and with a clear and gentle voice makes the inquiry: "Wilt thou be made whole?"

A strange question he must have thought it to be: "'Wilt thou be made whole?' Who would not if he were in my position? Why, this is what I am here for." And, in fact, he does not answer the question directly; he only explains how it is he has not been made whole. Others had friends to help them into the pool at the favourable opportunity; but as to him—"Sir," he says, "I have no man."

We are in need of no man, in spite of what some Christians may teach on the subject. We can go straight to the fountain ourselves, by the grace of God.

"I have no man." Lamentable case, indeed! Well, that kind stranger first looked at him; then, knowing he had been there a long time, He spoke to him. Now, does not that meet our case exactly? To begin with, Christ sees us. We forget that, though it is the simplest thing in the world. I was reading in a child's story-book about a little girl and her brother. They were lost in the woods, and one said to the other: "Do you think God will remember us?" The answer was: "Why, of course, He will remember us, since He sees us." I cannot forget you as long as I see you, can I?

Christ not only saw this man, but knew that he had been there a long time. He knows all about you, because He knows everything; He knows more about your case than anyone does, than you do yourself. And, finally, he put the question: "Wilt thou be made whole?"

That is the question before us, or, rather, it is the question that Christ puts to each one of us to-night: "Wilt thou?" There is a great multitude around, but what about yourself? Some of you may be saying: "This is a large meeting—very encouraging." So it is, but let alone the meeting—Wilt thou be made whole?

"Wilt thou?" Not do you fondly desire to be, but, wilt thou? Is it your will? Are you decided about it? Is it the one thing you wish for? Will you have, or will you not?

You will say: "Of course I want it." Ah! then, the next thing is, "Wilt thou be made whole?" Whole, that is the question. He does not ask if the man would like to obtain some relief; if he will accept of a remedy that will make him forget his pain; or if he would like to go about on crutches. Will you be healed? that is the question. This poor man wanted nothing more, nothing better than to be made whole. A great many really have no will in the matter; they are not at all decided; they have not made up their mind. They will come to the brink of the pool; they will see others being healed; but instead of pressing forward, they draw back, and say, "Not yet." Why? Just because they understand the question as to being made whole, but they are not ready for it.

Sometimes, after a battle, the surgeon says to a soldier, "Your arm must be cut off, or you will lose your life." The man says he does not want to lose his life, but he had rather take his chance than have his arm cut off. So he keeps his arm and loses his life. He thinks the remedy is worse than the evil; that is to say, he is less afraid of the evil than of the remedy. Ah! how often that is the case with people as regards their soul's health. They are afraid that God will come and ask for a right arm or a right eye, and they say, "No, no; give me something to make me comfortable, something that will suit me, that will put me to sleep or half stupefy me. I am willing enough to go to meetings; that is very nice. But to be made whole—not yet, not to-day; I will think about it."

This is the first question, therefore: Will you let the Great Physician take hold of you, to do what has to be done, and then take care of you? Are you ready for that? Oh! if you are ready—if you can answer simply and sincerely, "Yes, Lord, I will be made whole," then one touch of Him, one word from Him, is enough to make you whole.

A COMMAND.

In the second place Jesus said to the man: "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." What did the man do? He might have argued, in the most logical and unanswerable way—He might have said: "That stranger is very kind, but he is altogether unreasonable. He says, 'Rise,' the one thing I cannot do. If I could rise I would not be here. He says, 'Take up thy bed'; why, my bed has to carry me all the day long, how can I carry it? I have not walked for thirty-eight years." If the man had replied in that fashion he might have remained there for other thirty-eight years. But what did he do? He trusted and obeyed. There was something in the voice of the Lord that made him say to himself: "He cannot have come to mock me; that would be cruel. He would not insult a poor man by asking him to get up and walk, if he could not do it; no good man would act thus." He felt that the stranger had not come to insult his misery. "Well," he said, "what does he mean by saying, 'Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.' He must mean that I am able to do it, though I did not think I was. I must be healed, though I do not feel that I am able to do it." So he rises without delay: "And immediately the man was made whole." When did he know it? He did not know it before he got the blessing; nor did he know it after he had felt it; he knew it in the very act of believingly making use of it. When he obeyed, the thing was done. As someone has said: "If God should tell me to jump through a stone wall, it is for me to jump at it; it is for Him to make me go through it."

So you will find it always. You are able to obey, because God never gives an order without giving strength to perform. In Psalm cxix. 66, we read: "I have believed thy commandments." It is a matter of faith first, and then of obedience. When God says, "Do a thing," it means, "You are able, by my grace, to do it." So the man got up immediately, and when he was made whole, he took up his bed and walked Then the people were down upon him at once. Instead of congratulating him, they said: "This is irregular; 'it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed on the Sabbath-day.'" He had his answer ready for them: "He that made me whole"—he did not know the name, and that is the way he designates the Lord; we may call Him so likewise, if He has made us whole—'He that made me whole, the same said unto me: 'Take up thy bed and walk.'" That was authority enough for him. So, if the Lord has healed us, forgiven us, accepted us, what can we do but obey Him afterwards?

AN EXHORTATION.

Finally, Christ Himself finds the man in the Temple, and says to him: "Behold thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing happen unto thee." In these words He showed the connection between sin and suffering; not always between a particular sin and a particular suffering. We have only to turn over the page to find that. Christ said of the blind man whom He healed: "Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents;" but, speaking generally, suffering is the fruit of sin. This man very likely knew that there was some connection between his sin and his suffering. At any rate, Christ bade him sin no more, lest "a worse thing" should befall him. What? A worse thing than being impotent for thirty-eight years? A worse thing. Christ spake such words just because He is love and mercy itself.

No man ever spoke of the doom of sin as Christ did. "I have just healed your body," He says, "but that is nothing. Sin no more, lest you lose your soul, and 'a worse thing come unto thee.'"

Now, my brethren, have we answered the first question: "Wilt thou be made whole?" Then comes the Lord's command: "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." What does this mean?" It means, do that thing which you consider impossible for you to do, but which you know to be right. That is the walk of faith; that is the obedience of faith; that is the great marvel of the spiritual life. That is the blessed experience that every Christian has gone through more or less frequently, but why should we not be repeating it continually? God is not mocking us with his commands; He gives us grace sufficient for every need. The Apostle says, in so many words, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." When, therefore, He bids you do a thing, do it. "Oh, yes," you reply, "I believe it for such and such acts of obedience, for such and such temptations to be resisted; but then there is one particular thing I cannot do, there is one particular temptation I cannot overcome." Well, what would you have thought of the impotent man, if, when the Lord had asked him whether he would be made whole, and told him to rise, he had answered: "O Lord, I wish to be healed of this little scratch on my finger"? You would have said he was out of his mind.

So a great many Christians put aside as out of the question the very disease from which they are suffering most. Why, you ought to begin with that! Christ comes most especially to heal you of that sin, whether it be temper, or pride, or sensuality, or slothfulness, or covetousness, or whatever other chain may have held you captive for many years. That sin is the very one from which the Lord is able and willing to deliver you first of all. Will you let Him heal you of that disease? Just say to your master—sin—well, say nothing to the sin; speak to the Lord, and say: "Thou hast bid me give up this sin; I will give it up, in the strength of Thy word; I will obey Thee." You will find that you can walk, after all.

And, lastly, the Lord gives you another word: "Sin no more." The whole Bible says this. In the very beginning of the book of Psalms we read: "Stand in awe, and sin not" (Ps. iv. 4). We have been reminded of the words of Peter: "He that suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin, that he should no longer live the rest of his time in the flesh, to the lusts of men, but to the will of God" (1 Peter iv. 1, 2). The Apostle Paul says as much in very plain words, in his Epistle to the Corinthians: "Awake to righteousness and sin not" (1 Cor. xv. 34). What else could he say? What else can we say? What else can God say to us?

In the first Epistle of John, we find three reasons given why that Epistle was written. The first is (1 John i. 4), "These things write we unto you that your joy may be full." But how could they attain to fulness of joy in this world? The answer to this is found in the Apostle's second purpose (1 John ii. 1): "These things write I unto you that ye sin not." The great enemy to joy is sin. But what is the way to be made free from sin? Hearken to his words again (1 John v. 13): "These things have I written unto you that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe in the name of the Son of God." Thus do faith, holiness, and joy go together; joy growing out of holiness, and holiness out of faith. "If any man sin," the Apostle says—mark how he puts it as the exception and not the rule—"if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." But the rule, the normal condition, the constant command is: "Sin not."

Let us now take to ourselves the words of the Lord which we have been considering. To his question: "Wilt thou be made whole?" let each one of us answer: "Yea, Lord, at any cost, and at this moment." Then, to his command, "Arise and walk, let us answer by immediate obedience, in the power of his might. Finally, let us take heed to his warning, which is also a command, and implies a promise: "Sin no more."

PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

"And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it."—ISAIAH xxx. 21.

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."—EXOD. xxxiii. 14.

WE have come to another milestone on life's journey. We would rest by it for a little moment, and in this solemn pause, endeavour to take a glance at the past, the present, and the future.

The past year—what a record of grace it has been? It was an untrodden path, and we remember how we feared to step out into the darkness, but God has brought us safely through. "A way in the desert!" He has made that for us. There were lions in the way, and, it may be, their shadow darkened our last New Year, but we were strengthened to go forward. We found that the lions were chained, and the "House Beautiful," with all its comforts and sweet fellowship, lay beyond them.

There have been dark bits in the way, the path of sorrow, but we were not left to tread it alone!—the dark shadow of bereavement, but there was the "appearance of the bow in the cloud." It was the token of the well-ordered covenant. We felt the stroke, but we knew it was a Father's hand, and its very pressure told us of his love. The hand that wounded and crushed was at the same time upholding and comforting! "Oh, the grace the Father shows!" We have had Elims too, palm-trees, and wells of water! Unexpected blessings and privileges—sweet resting-places, where weary pilgrims have been refreshed together.

Of the lessons we learned during the year, surely this is the sum, our own worthlessness and helplessness, and God's all-sufficient grace. "I am the Lord thy God, which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way which thou shouldest go" (Is. xlviii. 17).

Before turning from the past, we would raise one glad song of praise, and by this milestone set up another Ebenezer, and write thereon (even in the enemy's land), "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us!"

And now for the present. "I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me!" "My presence!" "Thou art near, O Lord!" One other lesson we have surely learned—to trust and to desire Thy presence. In this solemn passing hour we put our hand anew into the hand of Jesus, our leader and commander. With our feeble, trembling, but trusting hand in his, it is enough. He is able to keep us from falling; able also to lead us safely home, whether our journey be nearly done, or whether we have still a long way to go.

"I will not fear thee, oh, my God!
The days to come can only bring
Their perfect sequences of love,
Thy larger, deeper comforting."

"I will give you rest." This is present, but it is also future. "There remaineth a rest to the people of God" (Heb. iv. 9). The future is very bright! The telescope of faith brings its glories near. We look across the river to yon fair city, and anticipate its joys. The Father's house with its many mansions, the home-bringing of all the children, "our gathering together unto Him;" the white robes, made white in the blood of the Lamb; the holy angels, glad re-unions; "The King in his beauty"!—all that is lovely and holy and true, and we in perfect harmony with all.

Fellow pilgrims to the Canaan above, be of good cheer!

"The road may be rough, but it cannot be long."

Only a little while, and "our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem!" Looking back, we say, "Hitherto," looking forward, "Henceforth." "Thou shalt guide me by Thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory." B. WYSE.

Starting.

FAITH mounts the Royal car,
Begemmed with many a star;
And, dashing o'er the King's highway,
Dreams not of danger, come what may.
The reins she gives the King,
Leaving his hand to bring
His loved one to the palace gate,
The home of her eternal state.

She hears the silver bells,
Their music sinks and swells
In holy and harmonious chimes,
Tuned to the tones of other climes;
She looketh back and sees,
'Mid flowers and shadowing trees,
Bending with mercies ripe and rare,
A past most fruitful, rich, and fair.

She looketh down and, lo!
Pure as the virgin snow,
The very chariot gleams with love,
Mosaic from the streets above.
She looketh on, and saith,
Beyond the vale of death
She sees immortal verdure bloom,
Above the mists of gathering gloom.

Sometimes the dust will rise,
And dim the dove-like eyes;
But she speeds onward, waiting not,
Leaving the cloud behind, forgot.
The tolls, the hill, the dale,
Robbers that may assail—
She leaves all humbly to her King;
He drives, she needs but sit and sing.

"How far, O Faith, how far,
Ere angels stay that car,
Before the portals pearly bright,
Shining amid life's closing night?"
Faith smiles, but answers not;
Contented with her lot,
She leans her head upon his breast,
His wisdom must decide the rest.

THE BIBLE AND THE AGE.*

By Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR.

PRACTICAL CHARACTER OF THE BIBLE.

IF we remember that God has given unto us his word, that we may find in it Him, and not food for our curiosity, material for the exercise of our skill and erudition, relief from feelings of gloom, and security in the superficial acceptance of doctrines and promises,—then we shall use the Book for godly edifying in faith, and realise in our experience that it is profitable. The practical character of the Bible will then increasingly manifest itself to us. Practical in the true and full sense of the word, not in the conventional sense, which opposes it to doctrinal, and has reference merely to outward acts and habits of life.

Nothing shows more fully the peculiarity of our age than the meaning attached to the word "practical" in the sphere of spiritual life. In other spheres men fully appreciate the value of theory. The practical significance of mathematics, astronomy, and chemistry is admitted by all; we constantly witness it, that a single idea, the discovery of a single law, is the fruitful source of the most important and manifold results. But while the world is becoming more philosophical in everything else, in spiritual things it is becoming more childish and superficial. The knowledge of God, of his counsel, of his love to the Eternal Son, of Christ, his Divinity and humanity, of the work of the Spirit, of the Atonement, of Union with Christ, of the Kingdom, of the return of the Saviour,—in short, theology,—is considered a barren theory and speculation; the pointing out of isolated duties and outward works and habits, is deemed "practical." Life is expected from the dead, and a pure river from a polluted fountain. Morality, like a castle in the air, is constructed without the foundation of the fear of God. While Christ tells us, that to know God and Jesus Christ is Life, the world insists that theology—the knowledge of God—is abstract, and has no immediate connection with the reality of life. It is the old story, the philosophy of the old serpent, of being good without God; of being like unto God without knowing, loving, and trusting Him. Formerly God was believed to be the source of all good, and men who were not willing to obey Him, said, "We love sin:" now men say, "We love virtue, but we can have it without God."

The great motives which God places before us, viz., the return of Jesus and the glory which He shall give to his servants; the great power by which God moves the heart, viz., the light of his love, his revelation of Himself, the whole counsel of God, which apostles preached and through which men became the salt of the earth and the living epistles of Christ; —all this is not "practical" in the estimation of many: they do not recognise the Divine power, full of vitality, which this teaching possesses. And thus it is that they ascribe in reality more power to the word of man, to the exhortations of human wisdom and earnestness, to the oratorical enforcement of isolated duties and of ethical maxims (not growing out of "the Root"), than to the very words of God. They forget that God, after all, and God alone, is life; that He hath life in Himself, and his words have also life; and that his words bring with them not merely good things, but that which is the first and essential requisite of all good, viz., Life.

For the Word is living ("quick," Heb. iv. 12); and when it is recognised as the voice of God, it is powerful. Christ's words are spirit and life. They are therefore compared to the seed, which appears insignificant, but which, if received in good ground, soon shows its vitality. Often the seed springs and grows up, we know not how; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. The Word of God, received as such, does not remain in us as a dead and inert mass, a mere addition to our knowledge, but is continually active and growing in our thoughts and words, in our character and walk, bringing forth fruit, in some a hundredfold, in some sixty fold, in some thirty; while "again, it is written," that we are to lay aside everything that hindereth, and receive with meekness the engrafted Word; we are to keep the Word, to hide it in our hearts, to give heed that the enemy take it not from our memory and our affection.

Again, this Word, living and powerful, is as a sword; it possesses a dividing, separating, piercing energy, which penetrates into the very depths of man, and discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart. With a most faithful accuracy and searching minuteness it analyses our motives. It distinguishes between nature and grace, spirit and flesh, the old life and the resurrection life. It divides, where we in our blindness and self-sufficiency imagine that all is pure and pleasing to God.

Thus the word is a mirror, true and clear, in which we may behold our likeness. And as a mirror is for the purpose, that we should look not at it, but into it, so the Word is not used by us according to God's purpose, unless we look into it, to see in it ourselves; and all "objective" admiration of the Bible, as a wonderful mirror of the world and the Church, only increases our guilt when we neglect the subjective use. We are the subjects, "Thou art the Man." "Know thyself" has, from remote antiquity, been the counsel of human wisdom. But the precept forgets one great difficulty. "The heart is deceitful above all things." Who but God can know that mysterious fountain, out of which are the issues of life? God alone knoweth and searcheth the heart. We therefore need a mirror, such as man cannot provide. But while this mirror shows us faithfully our true condition, we behold in it also the face of the Lord from heaven, who is our righteousness, and whose beauty thus shines on his believers, so that the Father delighteth in them.

Seed, sword, mirror,—these are three aspects of the practical character of Scripture. In reading it according to God's purpose, in reliance on the Spirit, a wonderful influence is exerted on us. Impressions of an eternal character are received. The influence of the Lord is on the very heart, out of which proceed thoughts and works. Grace is our teacher, and its discipline is through the Word. And as God's dealings with us may all be comprised under the two grand lessons, our sin and need, and his grace and fulness, so the Word continually kills and quickens; takes away our own life and gives us the Resurrection Life; discloses to us our nothingness, and unfolds to us Christ's riches. Thus the ultimate end of Scripture is always Comfort. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people," is the motto of the Bible. But God's comfort is in righteousness and truth. Sin is condemned in the flesh; life is given through the righteousness of Christ. The consolation of the world and the natural mind is based on the imperfect view of sin (thinking it less evil than it is) and on a false view of the creature-life (regarding it with hope); it ignores sin and evades the cross; it does not humble man; it does not lead through death unto life. Not so God's consolation. It is the consolation of resurrection after the cross. And this is our temptation, to separate what God has joined. His promises and commandments; his blessedness and his holiness; the cross and the glory; his earnestness and his compassion; Christ representing us in heaven, and we representing Him on earth; this constant combination, so harmonious, so vital, so immediately commending itself to the conscience, Satan is always anxious to dissolve, and thus render our use of Scripture to the flesh—comfort, and to the spirit—terror; whereas God's method is terror to the flesh and comfort to the spirit, that we may bear about the death of our Lord, and that in us may be manifested also the life of Christ.

The Word makes us wise unto salvation. The Word teaches us what it is to be wise. For the world often mistakes cleverness and prudence for wisdom, and sometimes calls unworldliness folly. But Scripture teaches us that wisdom is from above, that Christ is our wisdom, and that the end of wisdom is salvation. Yet this wisdom embraces true prudence in all earthly duties and relationships. And if we are guided by the Word, if we seek God's kingdom and his righteousness, if we have our eye fixed on his promise, and our affections set on the things above, if we walk with Him in humility and faith, our minds will be clear and calm, our words sober, truthful, and kind, our actions straightforward and prudent; in our intercourse with our fellow-men we shall commend and adorn the doctrine of the Gospel. Oh, how beautiful and perfect are God's directions in Scripture! If we obeyed God in all things, temporal as well as spiritual, inward and outward, how blessed and attractive would our lives be! What civilisation attempts, and attempts superficially, God's Word realises, and realises radically.

What true wisdom would he possess and manifest who followed the Scripture rule! In his heart he loves God and hopes for heaven, loving and forgiving his brother and thinking no evil; his speech is yea, yea, and nay, nay; his words are in truth and kindness; in dress simple, as becometh one whose body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, and who knoweth what is the true ornament; in his behaviour taking the lowest place until he is bidden to go up higher; in business not slothful, yet not making haste to be rich, and not anxious about to-morrow; in sorrow not overwhelmed, in prosperity not elated; a man who instead of asking "Who is my neighbour?" always asks, "To whom may I be a helpful neighbour?" A lover of solitude, but ready to exhort and comfort the brethren as he has opportunity, and to visit the fatherless and widow in their affliction; solemn and earnest, yet anointing his face when his soul is fasting before the Lord; a man faithful in that which is least, just and benevolent to all, fervent in love to the disciples of Jesus; a man whose heart is in heaven, and in whose heart is heaven, who learns daily of Jesus to be like Him who is the Wisdom from above.

The Bible is the book for life, and only he who desires to use it for life can enter into its true meaning. The Bible is profitable, but only when we read as disciples whose object is to "learn Christ." The children of God thus read Scripture, not with the purpose of exhausting its fulness, but of receiving from it what they need for the present, though often they treasure up much which at the time is scarcely understood, but is unfolded in the future. In reading the Word in which Christ is the substance, the believer feels that the providence of the Father and the application of the Spirit make the Scripture to have a direct guiding, exhorting, and comforting meaning to him. He thus not merely sees green pastures, but God Himself maketh him to lie down in them, and he receiveth from the heavenly Shepherd what is salutary and refreshing for his soul.

IF TWO OF YOU SHALL AGREE.

TWO young ladies called on me one day in my study to ask what special work I could give them to do for Christ. They said they had felt of late that they were not doing so much for souls as they ought, and wished suggestions as to what they might undertake.

"We feel too timid to speak or pray in public meetings," said one; "besides, that does not seem to be all the work needed. Others do that, and yet there does not appear any sign of the revival and awakening for which we all are longing. We want to do something else; can you tell us what to do?"

"Have you tried to interest others in their spiritual welfare?"

"We have tried," was the reply, "but it is so hard to reach any that way that we have become almost discouraged; we don't seem to know just how. We are afraid, too; we make such blunders that we fear our efforts do more harm than good."

"Have you tried our Saviour's plan?" I inquired.

"Our Saviour's plan? What plan?"

"The united prayer plan." I answered.

"Oh, yes; we have united our prayers with others at the prayer-meetings; and of course we do not forget the church hour of prayer." (We had all agreed, at our last communion, to offer at least one petition each evening between eight and nine o'clock for a revival in our church.) "But cannot we do more?"

"Yes; take the plan our Lord gave, and plead that promise. Select some who are not Christians, and pray specially for their conversion. You will find the plan and promise in Matt. xviii. 19: 'If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.'"

"We never thought of that," said both. "We can easily do that, and it is just what I wanted," added one of them.

"Whom shall we select?" asked the other.

"Any whom you choose," I replied; "but you will pray with more interest, as well as anxiety, if you select some of your most loved friends."

"Won't you please select?" they asked.

In a few moments I thought of seven young ladies, friends of these two, and suggested them as special subjects for prayer. None of the seven were professing Christians, and, as far as I knew, not one was specially interested in spiritual things. All were moral, and all but one regular attendants of church and Sabbath-school.

"We will take these," said the two when I handed them a scrap of paper on which I had written the seven names, "and will try to work as well as pray for their souls."

Before they left we knelt in prayer; I as their pastor prayed for the seven, and that the two workers might know how, and be successful in their efforts to bring their young friends to Christ. After the young ladies left I wrote down the names of the seven, determining to watch closely the results following the united work and prayer of the two.

For a number of weeks the two continued to pray for the seven, and made special efforts to lead them to the Saviour, but apparently without success. Once or twice they spoke to me despondingly, but were encouraged and urged to persevere. They did not give up, but tried new methods to reach their young friends. A note was written to one of the number, urging her tenderly but earnestly to give her thoughts to her soul's welfare. A few days after, this young lady met the writer of the note, and asked:

"Won't you try to lead my sister Maggie to Christ? When she comes I will; I can't come and leave her."

With hearts full of hope and joy the two told me the request. Maggie was one of the seven. As soon as they could the two visited Maggie, and found her anxious to talk about her soul, and even more anxious that her sister be talked with also. It was then found that for several weeks the two sisters had, unknown to each other, been praying each for her own and her sister's salvation.

By this time a precious but remarkably quiet work of grace had begun in the church, and one after another of the unconverted were seeking Christ. Soon Maggie and her sister gave themselves to the Saviour; others followed, and when the next communion came more than thirty were ready to confess Christ before the world. Among that number were six of the seven for whom the two young ladies agreed to pray. Before a year had gone by the seventh was anxiously seeking the Saviour. She, too, is now a hopeful Christian.

This incident carries its own lesson. Do we try faithfully the plan our Lord gave in praying for souls? Is there not a power in this plan, a power that we cannot afford to lose? The promise in it is a broad promise. It is a deep promise. It is a full promise. It is a promise that will bridge many a chasm between us and our unconverted ones. Why not use it oftener?—American Messenger.

"Waiting for de Master."

IT is the custom of several young friends to visit a large lodging-house every Sunday afternoon with the "Words of Life." We have often been touched by the eager attention paid to the preaching by the poor friendless ones there. On a recent Sunday, after setting forth simply the Saviour's dying love, we sang that beautiful hymn,

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds," &c.

Everybody sang heartily, but especially a poor negro standing over six feet high. The Spirit brought this hymn home to his heart with marvellous power. When we came to the last verse, the poor fellow could contain his emotion no longer, the tears trickled fast down his black face, and with eyes radiant with heaven's beams, he waved his hand, as, with his old cracked voice, he joined in more heartily than ever to the verse commencing—

"I would Thy boundless love proclaim
With every fleeting breath."

On the Wednesday following (Boxing-day) we gave a Christmas dinner to about 240 poor people, mostly from the lodging-house. As soon as I entered the room, I looked, but in vain, for my black friend. I was not to search long, for a man came up to me, and said, "You remember the black chap as was a listening wi' us to you on Sunday?" "Yes, I do," I replied. "Well, he's dead, sir." "Dead!" said I. "Yes, sir. He's a lying dead." "What did he say before he died?" "Oh, sir, he said, 'I'se only a waiting for de Master to take me home,' and passed away." What a glorious testimony to the power of the Gospel! W. P. H.

For the Young.

OUR LITTLE DWARF.

"WHO is that odd little roundabout thing?" said I to Miss Jacombs, as we stood together watching the children enjoying their games at the Christmas treat. "That is Farhah, our little dwarf," was the answer. I had but lately come to Bethlehem; I had not yet made acquaintance with all the children in the school; indeed, the pronunciation of their names was in itself a difficulty to me. I had been attracted by Farhah's sparkling dark eyes and merry face above such a short, broad body: hence the above inquiry.

Little Farhah began to attend our day-school almost from the time it was first opened, and proved herself a clever, painstaking scholar. Her father had asked that she should be received into the boarding-school, and we much wished to take her, knowing the wretched life that lay before her in her own home. Of course she, being a dwarf, would never marry; after the death of her father she would have to live with her brother and his wife, and would be looked upon as a mere drudge to be at everyone's beck and call, learning nothing good and everything evil. At length a lady in England offered the money for her support. I shall never forget the child's delight when she was told that she was to come and live in school next morning. She said, "Please, teacher, had I not better come to-night?" We told her the next morning was soon enough, and then accordingly she appeared, very early, before breakfast was over. Such a queer-looking little thing, in one blue garment with a big white handkerchief tied over her head, and her face absolutely radiant with delight. She sat down with the other girls to breakfast, but was far too happy to eat anything.

She has now been in school for some time, and a more apt, intelligent pupil I have never had. But she scarcely grows at all, and will always be a dwarf, on which account she is often made game of in her own home, and is always glad to come back to school after the holidays. Her father said to her one day: "Farhah, you had better stay with me; what is the use of going to school?" "No, no," said she, "I must go back to my teachers!" We hope that when she is older she may be of use in the school as a teacher, or in some other way. And what a happy and blessed change for her, to have a useful life, with the love of the Lord Jesus to cheer her way, instead of being a laughing-stock and a drudge, retaliating on her tormentors by cursing them!

There are many unhappy and needy little girls in Bethlehem whom we should be glad to take and train, if it please God, for useful and happy lives, but we have no room. Land has been bought for building a larger and more suitable house than the one we occupy at present, and we earnestly ask for the money needed. Who will help us to teach these little ones, for the sake of the Saviour, who loves the little children of Palestine as well as those of England? The school in Bethlehem belongs to the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, and contributions for the Building Fund will be received by the Secretary, Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W. I am ready to give further information to any desiring it. (Miss) E. MARTIN.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

Mr. Moody at Pau.

WRITING on the last day of December to a friend in London, respecting Mr. Moody's visit to Pau during the Christmas holidays, Rev. G. Brown, Presbyterian Minister, says:—

I am delighted to have to tell you of Mr. Moody's visit. A gathering was arranged for yesterday (Sunday) afternoon in the large concert room of the Hotel Gassion, and the two principal English churches were closed, as was ours, on the occasion. Dr. Tait was unable from sickness to be present, and Mr. Rogers, the new chaplain of the original English church in the Rue Serviez, threw himself into the business with all his heart. The place was packed to the door—600 people were present and about one hundred more were unable to gain admittance. Many gay, careless folks, whom no one expected to see, came after all.

Mr. Moody spoke with much affection and power, taking for his text, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Though he spoke little more than half an hour, there was a word for all. Outwardly there was sustained attention, and every sign of solemn feeling; the depth and permanence of the impression remain to be proved. There has been no little prayer for a blessing from on high. At the close, Mr. Moody said he had been so much impressed with the meeting that he would be glad to meet again with any who desired it, on Wednesday afternoon. As the Scotch church will not seat more than 200 or so, we arranged to have this second meeting in the Grand Hotel. There a large saloon, opening into a salle à manger, is put at our disposal, where there will be seats for at least 400 people.

There never has been in Pau such a gathering as yesterday's to hear God's Word—indeed, I do not think so many British and American residents were ever brought together on any one occasion.

The Clapham Mission.

The evangelistic labours of the New Year were entered upon at Clapham last Lord's Day. The Wandsworth building has been transferred to an excellent site, abutting on Queen's-road, Battersea. A dense population resides within a short distance of the spot, and the neighbourhood is altogether favourable for such work. A preliminary conference of workers was held last week in the school-room of the Wesleyan Chapel, which adjoins the large hall. There was a large attendance of workers. The utmost cordiality and enthusiasm pervaded the gathering, which was presided over by Mr. H. M. Matheson, Chairman of the Central Committee. Mr. M. H. Hodder, who acts as Local Secretary for the south-west districts of the metropolis, detailed the arrangements, and several ministers, representing various denominations, led the devotions. An extensive work of visitation in the neighbourhood has been carried on, for the purpose of announcing the meetings and inviting the people to attend.

Sunday was the brightest day, atmospherically considered, that we have had in London for weeks past; and though there was abundance of mud under foot, no one had the excuse of staying away from the meetings on account of the weather. A fairly good muster of Christian workers greeted the Evangelists at the 8 o'clock gathering. Both Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were present when the meeting began, but the singer retired at an early stage, and was not present during the remainder of the day. Mr. Moody explained to the friends present that Mr. Sankey had received a cable despatch the evening before, announcing the death of his aged father, at Newcastle, Pa. Much sympathy was felt for Mr. Sankey and his family in view of this bereavement, which is the third of a similar kind he has had to bear during his visits to this country. Eight years ago a brother died; when the late Mission in South Wales was in progress, the mournful tidings came of the decease of a sister; now the angel of death has entered the family circle and removed its head. We are sure Mr. Sankey will have the sincerest condolences of our readers. His presence and voice were greatly missed at the Clapham meetings on Sunday, though Mr. Peploe Earl and various helpers in the choir did their best to supply the lack. Mr. Sankey was expected to attend all the succeeding gatherings of the week.

Mr. Moody seemed quite fresh and vigorous after his brief holiday respite; though our report of the meeting at Pau will show it was not all holiday. His morning exhortation to the workers was a very stirring one founded on the words, "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever." The address formed a fitting and excellent keynote for the work of the year. To a large company, presumably of "non-church-goers," at the forenoon meeting, Mr. Moody spoke on "Repentance."

The women's meeting in the afternoon was one of the profoundest interest. The Evangelist discoursed with great pathos and tenderness on "the love of God," impartial, unchanging, and unfailing. This address, so full of touching incident and appropriate illustration, never fails to deeply move a female audience; so it was on Sunday afternoon. The large inquiry-room at the rear of the hall was well filled with anxious, troubled souls, to whom Mr. Moody further explained, with most admirable simplicity and adaptation to circumstances, the way of life. Many responded to his call for decision. One woman intimated to the speaker that she felt herself almost too bad to be saved. This formed the basis of another exposition of the glorious truth that Jesus "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Personal dealing followed, and the meeting altogether was a very hopeful one.

The first evening meeting (for men) was as densely crowded as any that the London Mission has witnessed. The sombre, serried array of faces formed a very striking and impressive scene. Miss Sinclair sang, in a rich penetrating voice and with considerable feeling, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" Mr. Moody's text was, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost"—"one of the sweetest passages," as he said, "that ever fell from the Saviour's lips," and one that "sparkles like a diamond upon the bosom of Scripture." The vast throng listened with breathless interest and attention as the preacher gave reins to his imagination, and re-told in his graphically realistic fashion the story of blind Bartimeus, and of Zaccheus, in whose house the words of the text were uttered. The after-meeting was again large, and a good day's work was thus brought to a close.

The usual order will be observed during the two weeks' meetings at Lavender-hill Hall, except that the afternoon prayer-meetings this week at the close of the Bible Lectures will have reference to the special topics for the "week of prayer." Parents and guardians of the young in the south-west district will be glad to know that Mr. Josiah Spiers is to conduct the meetings for children at 3 p.m. on Saturdays, 12th and 19th inst.

The Stepney Mission.

By ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

My honest conviction is that there has been so evident a manifestation of God's own power and presence in the meetings that every child of God should have a new song in his mouth, even praise unto the Lord. My "old fashioned views," and expressed abhorrence of the rank sensationalism prevalent in the present day, are well known; I am, therefore, the more bold to avow my unqualified sympathy with the campaign our brethren are carrying on. There was nothing in any meeting I attended that could be objected to by any but the hopelessly prejudiced critic. Even the solo singing—which, as a general practice, I deprecate—is made by Mr. Sankey so evidently subservient to the honour of Christ and the winning of souls, that criticism is disarmed.

Mr. Moody's addresses were always clear, sound, expositions of the Word of God. Never were they weak, always full of life, and sometimes marvellous in their heart-searching power. His freedom from all "cant" is refreshing. His bold avowal of unlimited faith in God and God's Book is invigorating, and his evident determination "to save some" is an inspiration. To bring men to Christ is manifestly his "business." He intends to, he expects to, and instrumentally he does so.

The situation of the hall was a severe test. In the midst of a poor district, hidden entirely from sight, and away from any large thoroughfare, our brethren had no help from their surroundings. Taking these facts into consideration, and also the season of the year—the worst that could be picked for an East-end audience—the gatherings were wonderful. That the place was not full of an afternoon, will only surprise those unacquainted with the locality. We have very few who are free to spend an afternoon as they like. The great majority is a working, or "out of work," one. If the former they cannot come, if the latter they are too anxious to care to come.

In my judgment the Bible-readings were attended quite as well, if not better in proportion, than the evening meetings. They were seasons of much blessing, and the half-hour prayer-meetings at their close were times to be remembered. To a larger extent than before the right class was reached. There were fewer fashionable visitors, more of the genuine working class. That the poorest and most abject were not largely represented is no disappointment. I never expected them to be there as a mass. They must be gathered in by consecrated men of God going to them in their filth and semi-nakedness. The poor, however, were there, and there in hundreds, and to my certain knowledge a large proportion were rank outsiders.

It is early days yet to speak of spiritual results, as continuance is the only infallible proof of genuineness. Surely, however, it is no small matter for thankfulness that some thirteen hundred were sufficiently impressed to ask for prayer, walk into an inquiry-room, and welcome conversation with Christian people. To believe that only a few of these, if any, are genuinely saved requires more faith of a wrong sort than I possess. Should half of them turn out valueless, the remainder constitutes a grand haul, worth all the expense and effort a thousand times over. Any way, a noble testimony for Christ has been given, and that in itself is priceless. The Church of our Lord is not responsible for results, but faithfulness in her witness. The witness of our brother Moody is according to Scripture, therefore let every loyal-hearted subject of the kingdom drop cavilling, and take to praying. My firm conviction is that the work is of God. May He establish it to the honour of his own name.

A POSTSCRIPT TO THE STEPNEY MISSION.

One notable incident in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission at Stepney-green was the presence of several undergraduates from Cambridge University, some of whom had been led, when Mr. Moody visited that town, to dedicate themselves to God. They acted as stewards and as workers in the inquiry-room. On his last Sunday evening (Dec. 23) Mr. Moody announced that a meeting of young and elderly male converts would be held on the following evening, to co-operate with Mr. J. E. K. Studd, of Trinity College, Cambridge, in carrying on a week of evangelistic work at Beaumont Hall. As a result, a number met on Monday in the large building; it looked desolate after the gathering on the previous evening, but a spirit of earnestness prevailed. Mr. H. M. Matheson presided; Rev. G. S. Reaney, Rev. J. F. Kitto, and Mr. Studd gave encouraging and sympathetic addresses, the latter inviting those present to aid him in the services by bringing their friends and companions. Mr. Studd, it may be added, is one of the brothers so well known in cricketing circles, and is the captain of the Light Blues. He has entered very heartily into the Mission work and was the centre of a body of kindred spirits.

He held his first meeting on Sunday week, and on inviting those who had got good from the Mission to give their testimony, some twenty did so, one stating that he had come to scoff, but remained to pray. At the evening service Rev. G. E. Ford, curate of Stepney Church, conducted it, and Rev. James Juby, the chaplain to the Bishop of Bedford, delivered an address. Mr. Studd presided at the meetings on Monday and Tuesday evenings, and in the former Mr. Green and Mr. Guinness, jun., took part. The response, as regards the attendance, has not been at present so large as was anticipated; but the gentle, earnest, and persuasive addresses of Mr. Studd, together with those of his colleagues, and the curates of Stepney Parish Church, cannot fail to emphasise the good work which the American evangelists have accomplished in Stepney.—Christian World.

FOLLOWING UP AT ISLINGTON.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided at a meeting of clergymen and ministers last week at Priory Hall, Islington, summoned by the local secretaries, for the purpose of hearing a report concerning the results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission in that locality. In the course of the proceedings it was stated that between 40 and 50 lady visitors had been employed since the beginning of December in visiting inquirers and converts who had expressed the intention or wish to join a stated church or chapel. Although about 2000 visits had been made, the whole allotted ground had not yet been canvassed by the visitors. The district had been somewhat elaborately mapped out for purposes of visitation, and such of the converts as came from a distance had been written to; their replies, as indeed the large majority of other replies received, were eminently satisfactory, as testifying to the permanence of the impressions received.

Many interesting incidents have come to light in connection with these reports—especially with regard to the effect of the Mission work upon some of the inmates of the tramps' lodging-house in Holloway. The Chairman said that Islington would probably yield the largest number of cases of conversion of any district to be visited, which testified to the value of the key-note struck all over London at the opening Mission of the present campaign. The proceedings were concluded by a formal vote of thanks being accorded to Messrs. W. T. Paton and A. O. Charles for their services as local hon. secretaries during the Islington Mission.

We are informed that in the paragraph under this heading, in our issue of last week, there was a misstatement. The worker referred to as having been converted at Messrs. Moody's East-end Mission in 1875 was not at that time engaged as a public-house barman; he was, and had been for some considerable time, in the railway service at old Bishopsgate-street Station.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS.—Temperance men of all ranks and sections have been busily engaged, and sometimes keenly agitated during the year. The cause makes progress among all classes, but much harm is being done by the tardiness of our legislators, and, meanwhile, the drink traffic exerts its baneful influences. With these the Church is contending more courageously than at any former time, but their giant strength is not easily overcome, and the law, as it exists, is impotent to do more than curtail the mischief which is being done, and the misery being caused in the home, in society, and in the world. A great need of our country is that it should become sober; until then the "bitter cry" of the outcast will resound in our ear in an endless variety of forms.—Daily Review.

New Year's Breakfast to the Poor.

AT the Gray's-yard Ragged Church and Schools, James-street, Oxford-street, a breakfast was, in accordance with a yearly custom, given last Sunday morning to about 800 destitute persons. By a quarter past ten the several schoolrooms of the building and the main hall were packed closely with men, women, and lads, in all degrees of poverty and want. At that hour Mr. Ernest Tritton took the chair in the hall, and a preliminary repast of coffee and bread-and-butter having been served to each one present, addresses were delivered by Rev. E. W. Moore, Rev. A. C. D. Ryder, Rev. W. R. Mowll, Mr. George Hanbury, Dr. Routh, Dr. Habershon, and other gentlemen. The audience listened with marked attention, and they also, for the most part, joined in the hymns which were sung. During the morning Miss Mary Davies sang two solos, and, to judge from the expressions on the faces of her listeners, the charm of her voice was by no means lost upon them. The Chairman, in concluding the service with a few words, said he would give them two questions to ponder over, which were both practical and sensible: "Whose art thou?" and "Whither goest thou?" He further incited them to contrition and repentance, and contrasted the way of righteousness with that of wickedness.

At twelve o'clock breakfast was served round. Each person was supplied with a meat pie of a pound in weight, a large piece of cake, and as much coffee as was desired. The whole was served by a number of ladies and gentlemen who had volunteered their services, and among those present was Lady Colin Campbell. At the door of the building a large number of copies of the Gospel—the annual gift of Mr. John Morley—were distributed among those who had just partaken of the breakfast.

In addition to the Sunday services for adults, other agencies for the benefit of young and old are carried on at this Mission-house by the many ladies and gentlemen who have devoted themselves to the amelioration of the sad state of their neglected and wretched neighbours. There is a ragged-school in which from 250 to 300 children are gathered together for religious instruction every Sunday; five soup dinners are given; there are sewing classes, a Dorcas society, lectures for parents, Temperance meetings, and Mission services, a circulating library, a lads' club, a boot club, and a penny bank; and, finally, arrangements are made for boarding children in the country during the summer. An income of not less than £700 per annum is required to carry on the work, and a sum of nearly £200 is now owing to the hon. sub-treasurer, Mr. A. Woods.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON, it is understood by his numerous congregation, will, after his sojourn of some few weeks at Mentone, start for home some time next week. He is expected to arrive in London in time to prepare for the ministrations of Sunday, the 20th inst.

A NEW YEAR'S RECEPTION.—On Thursday evening, in response to an invitation by Mr. Geo. Williams, a large company met at the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, the occasion being the usual "New Year's social reception" of the members and their friends. Tea and coffee were served, after which a public meeting was held in the lecture-hall. Mr. Williams addressed the young men upon the three questions which Mr. Ruskin said every man should ask himself—"Where am I? Where am I going? What is it best to do under my circumstances?" The Rev. Richard Roberts, of City-road Chapel, said if one might venture to add anything to what such a man as Mr. Ruskin had said, he would put another question—"What am I?" Let the young men also consider their destiny, what they were capable of, what their possibilities were, and ask themselves whether they were living worthily of their privileges. Mr. Roberts counselled the young men not to let difficulties overcome them, but rather let them grasp circumstances and mould them to their advantage. The Rev. C. E. Ford, of St. Dunstan's, Stepney, also delivered a stirring address, and urged his audience to respect success in life only when attained through self-denial and enjoyed without self-conceit.

Workers at the "Strangers' Rest."

THE first of the monthly gatherings for the year was held on Friday last, and proved to be a time of real blessing. Mr. Leite Rozas gave the address. The work has been manifestly owned of God during the past year, and still greater things are looked for in 1884. The condition of the neglected children of Ratcliff Highway is pressing on the minds of the workers. Any friends with the gift and desire to work amongst the little ones would be welcomed on Sunday afternoons, when one of the rooms would be at liberty for a children's service.

The premises are being repainted throughout, and a few Gospel texts for the walls would be very acceptable. Next Friday it is intended to give a free tea with Gospel addresses to 200 or 300 of the men from the common lodging houses.

The Report of the work for the past year has just been issued, and our readers are referred to it for a detailed account (illustrated by some striking cases) of a quiet but truly Christ-like and fruitful Gospel work. Copies will be gladly forwarded post free, on application to the Hon. Sec., Mr. J. T. Isaac, "Strangers' Rest," Ratcliff Highway, London, E.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan in Dublin.

THESE evangelists, says The Belfast Witness, commenced their mission in the Metropolitan Hall, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin, on Sunday week. The mission will be continued every day (Saturday excepted) for a fortnight. The attendance at the meetings during the past week has been good. A special feature in connection with these meetings is a male choir, in addition to the ordinary choir composed of both sexes. In an able, well illustrated, and telling address on the first evening, Major Whittle presented to his audience the striking contrast there was between the present and future state of the godly and the ungodly, urging his hearers to seriousness by the flight and uncertainties of time.

In the afternoons Major Whittle is giving a series of Bible readings. At one of these Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang, "How far is it called to the grave?" the refrain being, "We're almost there." The singing was exquisite, the words very touching. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan also sang the words of Scripture as found in 1 John iii. 2—"Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." Even the most familiar words seem to possess greater sweetness and meaning when joined to the singing of these evangelists, as more than one person has testified. Major Whittle's address, says a local writer, could scarcely be surpassed for eloquence and sound doctrine. The subject chosen was taken from Eph. ii. 1, "Dead in sins," and Rom. vi. 2, "Dead to sin." At the close of the evening meetings inquiry meetings are held.

SOUTHSEA MISSION.—Mr. John Denning, Ebenezer Cottage, Southsea, has issued his annual letter giving account of Mission work carried on by him at Southsea by means of evangelistic services in halls, tents, &c. During the past year many have been led, not only to the meetings, but to Christ, and are now living to his praise. He asks prayer for the Mission, and states that the pecuniary support of the work is supplied by the voluntary contributions of the Lord's people.

STOKE NEWINGTON.—During the past year much lasting good has been the result of work in connection with Matthias-road Mission. The "Working Men's Temperance Sociable," held on Saturday evenings, has been the means of reclaiming men from intemperance, and has also led to real conversion to God in several cases. Those who give themselves to this work are anxious to provide a library of wholesome and entertaining books for the men. If any friends can spare suitable books, they will be thankfully received and acknowledged by B. DUMVILLE.

Notes and Comments.

THIS (Thursday) evening, Jan. 10, at Exeter Hall, Mr. Richard Heath will give the first of a series of lectures on "Poverty in relation to Art," showing that the highest art is not the child of wealth and luxury, as is usually supposed, but of religion and poverty.

The following quotation from the pen of Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, taken from The Christian Intelligencer, is painfully true, and calls for serious reflection. It strikes at the root of an evil which threatens to speedily bring down judgment on the house of God:—

"The Church of God is to-day courting the world. Its members are trying to bring it down to the level of the ungodly. The ball, the theatre, nude and lewd art, social luxuries with all their loose moralities, are making inroads into the sacred enclosure of the Church; and, as a satisfaction for all this worldliness, Christians are making a good deal of Lent and Easter and Good Friday and church ornamentation. It is the old trick of Satan. The Jewish Church struck on that rock. The Romish Church was wrecked on the same; and the Protestant Church is fast reaching the same doom. God will not bless a Church that drags down his heavenly things into the dust—that gilds vice, calls it Christian, and then indulges in it. But his holy vengeance will assuredly come and strip such a Church of its pride, and make it eat the bread of affliction."

"Our good minister," writes a warm-hearted abstainer, "wears a blue ribbon, but at the head of his Sunday-school is a rich young brewer, a subscriber to the Brewers' Defence Association, who is thus not only a defender of the faith, and an instructor of Sunday-school teachers week by week, but also a champion for the drink, and determined to use all possible efforts to protect its interests." We need make no note or comment on the powerlessness of testimony which has no backbone in it. People who are not thorough are worse than useless in any cause; they are like unsound links in a chain, and no chain is stronger than its weakest link. No Sunday-school should be superintended by a liquor-manufacturer or merchant.

Rev. Thomas Richardson, of St. Benet's, Stepney, whose Bible and Prayer Union has been the parent of many others has enrolled in that great company of regular students of the sacred page no less than 186,550 persons scattered throughout the civilised world. In his Monthly Notes for January, Mr. Richardson says:—

"Our Union by December 1st had enrolled 186,550 members. Since our last issue we have added 70 new members from foreign parts, including Ceylon, China, Egypt, Jamaica, and Morocco. Members write to us as follows: 'Since I last wrote I have travelled many hundreds of miles, have been surrounded by all kinds of fellow tourists, and have been in a variety of circumstances. I have been by the side of the dying, watching night and day. In all these circumstances I have never once omitted my daily chapter. It has been my joy in sorrow, help in weakness, directory in perplexity, and my unfailing resource in every period of my life experience. How much I owe to this persevering study of the pure Word of God I cannot possibly calculate. Would that millions participated in the privilege.' —'I have been in the habit of reading the daily chapters in my millinery workroom for the last three years, trusting that our Father would use them in the salvation of the young girls in my employ. A few months ago one of them confessed Christ, and was received into church fellowship; and I believe that the earnest conversations we used to have about the chapter that had just been read was one of the means of helping her to come out on the Lord's side.'—'The Bible and Prayer Union has opened up more clearly the great plan of salvation to my mind, and made me thirst more for a closer walk with my God.'"

Canon Liddon, in his sermon preached in St. Paul's Cathedral on the last Sunday of the year, said:—

"Believers could not be insensible to or contemplate without alarm the fact that among persons, including some in the most cultivated circles, the work of Christ and the existence of God were being questioned with a deliberation, a publicity, and a pertinacity unknown before since England had become Christian. Such a condition of things could not remain without grave results to human life and society."

The Canon's statement receives ample confirmation from an article in The Nineteenth Century for the current month, written by Mr. Herbert Spencer, entitled "Religion, a Retrospect and a Prospect." Seldom have we seen so terribly coarse and sweeping an indictment against Christian faith as some passages of that article contain. That such gross misstatements of the Christian's creed should come from any cultured writer is sad in the extreme; that they should find favour in the educated society of a so-called Christian land is even sadder still. "Grave results" indeed must follow from such affronts to the God of heaven.

One admission made by Mr. Spencer may be wisely reproduced, and its significance carefully considered. He says:—

"Those who think that Science is dissipating religious beliefs and sentiments seem unaware that whatever of mystery is taken from the old interpretation is added to the new. Or rather, we may say, that transference from the one to the other is accompanied by increase; since for an explanation which has a seeming feasibility, Science substitutes an explanation which, carrying us back only a certain distance, there leaves us in presence of the avowedly inexplicable."

"The world by wisdom knew not God." So is it to-day, and yet multitudes allow themselves to be deluded into acceptance of theories, speculations, and negations, which so far from freeing or enlightening the mind, only increase its bondage, and darken its counsel. In Christ alone can be found the light and life of men; happy all who, forsaking the "oppositions of science falsely so called," are found sitting at his feet.

Posting letters on Saturday in order to Sunday delivery is an evil that Christians at any rate should set their faces against, firmly and practically. They ought to be clear of complicity with all desecration of the Lord's Day. By refusing, as we know many do, to receive letters on the Sunday, they might also help on much needed reform in this direction. Such action on the part of Christian men and women would greatly help to form and strengthen public opinion against Sunday deliveries, and so hasten their discontinuance.

A correspondent writes concerning the wisdom and necessity of employing firmness in the discipline of children, both boys and girls. He justly says that parents are often at fault in this respect; they let their children have their own way at home, and then pack them off to school to get rid of the trouble of training them. He rightly argues that in such cases for parents then to refuse the schoolmaster or mistress the power to undo the mischief they have done, by the infliction of deserved punishment, is an injustice to both teacher and scholar. Disobedience to parents and contempt of authority are distinguishing features of our times, and require to be dealt with most firmly and seriously. If unchecked they cannot fail, as our correspondent says, to be to the hurt of the children, the parents, the Church, and the State.

A continuous meeting for prayer in connection with the Social Purity movement will be held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday, Feb. 5, the day on which Parliament opens; the proceedings will extend from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., various friends taking the presidency each successive hour. A public meeting, presided over by Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., will be held in the hall on the following evening.

Dr. Brachelli, the Austrian Director of Statistics, has recently issued a new edition of his Die Staaten Europas, in which statistics are given for 1883 of the Christian faiths of Europe. The twenty-six European states have an aggregate population of 329,876,320, but of these 156,040,000 are classed as Catholics, 80,367,000 as Oriental, and 79,450,000 as Protestant. There are 6,445,000 Moslems, and 5,984,000 Jews, while 447,000 are classed as of no religion, or of very minute sects. The Church of Rome has in Europe 111 archbishops, 484 bishops, 29 abbots or minor prelates, and 181,960 priests, beside a vast array of "religious" men and nuns.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe will give addresses at the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday, 15th inst., on "New thoughts upon Outcast London, and how to provide fresh dwellings;" and on Wednesday, 16th inst., on "The desirability of reverting to apostolic methods in evangelising the heathen." The meetings will commence each night at half-past seven o'clock. During the meeting on Tuesday evening, a brief valedictory and dedication service will be held in connection with the departure of a member of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, together with other friends, for China. Ladies as well as gentlemen are heartily invited to both meetings.

The Lord Chancellor, in reply to a letter from the Town Council of Newark requesting to know why an appointment to the Bench recommended by them had not been made, has said that his only reason was that it is his invariable rule not to appoint any gentleman to that office who is connected with the liquor trade. On every ground the country is to be congratulated on having at the head of its legal profession and jurisdiction one who can take a stand so firm and noble on the side of moral principle and social justice. It is not the advocates of Temperance only who can rejoice in the publicity of this statement by the Lord Chancellor, but all lovers of right legislation have cause to do so too.

M. Clermont-Ganneau wrote to The Times recently an interesting account of the discovery of two inscriptions of King Nebuchadnezzar, just made by M. Pognon, Assistant Consul of the French Republic of Beyrout. They are engraved on the rock in the Wadi-Brassa, one of the wildest valleys on the eastern slope of Lebanon. They are written the one in archaic, the other in cursive cuneiform characters, and form a whole of nineteen columns. The find is of deep interest, as proving that Lebanon furnished the King of Babylon with wood for his sumptuous palaces and temples. M. Ganneau vouches for the genuineness of these inscriptions, copies of which will shortly be published, and their contents more fully developed. It is a fact of no little significance, that in these days of scepticism and rationalistic irreverence for the Word of truth, so many ancient testimonies to its records should be brought to light.

The Local Government Board has issued notices to the London Vestries and other responsible bodies, relative to the dwellings occupied by the poor in districts such as those to which so much public attention has been called of late. The power of local authorities to deal with the sanitary condition of premises within their areas is clearly set forth and confirmed. Their responsibility to vigorously exercise the right to regulate the water supply, to see that proper cleansing is applied, and also to fix the number of persons who may occupy any house, or any part of a house, with other details of a most important and practical kind, is fully urged. An immense improvement must be made forthwith in reference to the homes of the poor if the instructions given are duly carried out. It behoves all persons interested in social questions to bestir themselves, and to see that in their respective districts those in office are awake to their duties. The issue of these notices places the whole community in a position of responsibility and power.

While it is quite true that merely to change the external surroundings of the indigent poor is insufficient to remedy their abject condition, yet it should be remembered that overcrowding, filth, darkness, and foul air are morally as well as physically deteriorating. It is impossible to exert wholesome moral influences in the midst of circumstances such as compel indecency, and constant disregard to the commonest instincts of morality or even humanity. Sir Charles Dilke deserves the greatest credit for the assiduity with which he has examined the facts of the case, and the celerity with which he and his colleagues have followed up the results of his personal investigations.

The Wesleyan denomination in the metropolis is preparing to take active measures for meeting the spiritual destitution of the people in some parts of London. A committee has been appointed to concoct plans for special Mission work, and general attention is being earnestly given to the whole subject. £25,000 has been promised toward the erection of chapels suited for destitute districts, and effort is being made to increase the amount to £50,000. The conviction appears to be gaining ground that suburban wealth and gifts for service should be employed diligently on behalf of City areas where masses of people are found neglected and unreached by Christian labour and concern. Herein we may all rejoice.

We are glad to see that that excellent monthly journal, known as The Christian Church, has entered upon the New Year with fresh vigour, and renewed resolve to hold on its course of intelligent defence of and contention for "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." In its opening article of the current number, under the heading, "Our Mission," the editor gives a fair and accurate, but sadly ominous, picture of the present state of the theological world, and says: "We believe firmly that true evangelical religion is the only preservative of the moral life, and of the happiness of individuals and nations." With this conviction we thoroughly coincide, and so wish our contemporary ever increasing influence in upholding the interests of Gospel truth against the vapid and meaningless ideas so freely circulated in many religious papers, and by other means.

With reference to the statement in our last number (which was based on information gathered from several contemporaries) that the Church Missionary Society had decided to exclude all girls from their schools in China, unless the parents consent to unbind their feet, we are informed by the secretaries of the Society that the Home Committee have come to no such decision, nor have they even considered the subject. A rule of the kind has only been passed by one local committee in one province in China. In another province the matter has been considered by the native Christians themselves, and resolutions passed by them condemning the practice of foot-binding; but no rule has been adopted.

The Civil Service Prayer Union has extended its efforts beyond the metropolis. It appears by the report recently circulated that branches have been formed in other towns, and that this work is to be pushed vigorously foward. Civil servants are to be found in all parts of our widely extended empire. It will be no small gain if those among them who are serving God can be knit together in a holy fellowship of believing intercession and loving service. Members of the Union have the advantage of a well-arranged basis for common prayer, for quarterly meetings for all who can gather at them, and of a quarterly paper through which all, however distant, can speak to one another. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, Harrow, Middlesex.

Mr. Mitchell, a member of the Glasgow School Board, has been making some investigations into the moral condition of that town, the results of which are startling. He found thirty-four single apartments (not lodging-houses) with ten persons resident in each of them; 122 single rooms, with 9 persons; 401 single rooms, with 8 persons; 1047 single rooms, with 7 persons, and 2401 single rooms with six persons resident in each. A father, mother, and five or six children, are quite commonly fallen in with in one house, but one of the most disgraceful characteristics is the manner in which grown-up boys and girls, and even young men and women, herd together in the same apartment. The houses he found to be close and unhealthy; no conveniences exist for the ordinary decencies of life without going down long stairs to back courts. From this and other causes the rooms are frequently reeking with a malodorous stench. Poverty, grinding poverty, met them at every turn. Strong drink stalked like a demon everywhere, bringing misery and poverty and degradation in its train.

Many Christian people think and speak of the Brahmo Somaj, and of Chunder Sen and other of its leaders, with a favour and commendation which betoken either a want of acquaintance with their real principles, or else an unhealthy laxity of regard for true Christian doctrine. The prominent members of that sect must not be regarded as half enlightened inquirers after truth, but as highly cultivated rejectors of the Gospel of Christ, who declare that Christian Missions are a failure, the Christ our missionaries proclaim a Western Christ, and not one they can receive. If Rationalism and Socinianism can be looked upon at home with complacency, then the position held and the influence exerted by the Brahmo Somaj abroad may be regarded with hopefulness and pleasure. But as, neither here nor there, these oppositions to the claims of Jesus Christ upon the implicit faith and homage of men can be for one moment accepted in lieu of complete reliance upon His name, lovers of truth need to guard against lending to false systems any influence or support.

Our issue for next week will be a DOUBLE NUMBER (price 2d.), and will contain reports of the leading addresses delivered during the present WEEK OF PRAYER.

Dr. Munro Gibson will resume his lectures at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday next, at 8 p.m. Subject "The Symmetry of the Bible. Old Testament." Ladies invited.

The second volume of a work involving extraordinary toil, patience, and perseverance, has just been published, being Dr. Ginsburg's new edition of the "Massorah," compiled from manuscripts, and alphabetically and lexically arranged. The publication of this work has been justly spoken of as amounting to an entirely new departure in the domain of Hebrew scholarship and scientific Biblical criticism. The labour bestowed upon the transmission and preservation of the Hebrew Scriptures by the Massorites is well known to all who are acquainted with Jewish history, and in the providence of God has been the principal means of handing down to us the sacred text. But, hitherto, their work has been so scattered, divided, and misunderstood, that no complete edition has ever been compiled. Dr. Ginsburg has, however, devoted himself to this truly Herculean task, and when his third volume is issued containing a complete translation of the Hebrew text, with critical and explanatory notes, he will have furnished the world with an invaluable and indispensable guide to the correct study of the Old Testament Scriptures.

The light thrown by the careful study of the Massoretic text on the Word of God may be judged of by the following instances, which we quote from The Times, which has given a review of Dr. Ginsburg's book filling more than five columns:—

"In Genesis vi. 3, the text as it stands in the Authorised Version is scarcely intelligible—'And the Lord said, my Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh;' the true Massoretic reading, however, 'for because of their erring he is flesh,' expands and explains the sense by exhibiting with greater clearness the dependence of death upon sin. Again, in Genesis xviii. 22, for 'but Abraham stood yet before the Lord,' the Massorah reads, 'but the Lord still stood before Abraham,' which is in accordance both with the following verse and with the opening of the chapter. Another significant change may be noted in 1 Kings i. 18, where Bathsheba remonstrates with David for allowing Adonijah to usurp the kingly power in the place of Solomon, to whom David had promised the succession. The Authorised Version runs, 'And now, behold, Adonijah reigneth; and now, my Lord the King, thou knowest it not;' the Massoretic version gives 'and thou, my Lord the King, knowest it not;' the meaning is the same, of course, but the force and directness of the remonstrance are greatly improved. Or, again, in the sublime discourse of Wisdom in Proverbs viii. a material and significant change may be noted in verse 16, where instead of 'By me princes rule and nobles, even all the judges of the earth,' the Massorah has it, 'By me princes rule and nobles, and all who judge righteously.'"

ALNWICK.—Mr. A. L. Wolfe continues to carry on his mission to the lost in this northern town. The meetings both indoor and in the open-air have been attended with great blessing. Striking evidences of this are seen in the changed lives of some who were almost considered hopeless, and in the many happy homes which, a few months ago, were dens of sin. Mr. Wolfe asks the prayers of the Lord's people for blessing on his labours.—JOHN WALLACE.

EVANGELISATION IN FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

SIR,—The marked change which has taken place in Geneva since the fall of M. Heridier, the author of the unjust measure of interdiction and expulsion against the Salvation Army, may be judged from the fact that our Geneva Corps held its anniversary meeting in the large Casino Hall, where the work commenced this time last year. The meetings now go forward unmolested, under the direction of English and Swiss officers, and are accompanied with great blessing. Our officer writes: "During the last fortnight we have seen the power of God manifested in a remarkable manner in the salvation of twelve people of different nationalities."

From the Canton de Vaud we have also good news. Five of our Vaudois converts had been summoned, tried, and fined considerable sums of money for having met to pray in spite of the decree. They appealed to the Cantonal Tribunal, claiming their constitutional rights. This high authority declared in their favour, quashed the unjust sentence, freed them of their fines, and decreed that the authorities must pay the costs. The Journal de Genève, commenting upon this event, said: "The poor decree has been shot in the wing, and must soon fall." So with the new year comes the dawn of restored liberty, and in Vaud also our comrades now meet without gendarme molestation.

Miss Blundell, the well-known editor of the Rayon du Soleil and Ami de la Maison, who has been on a visit in the Canton de Vaud, and was present throughout the two days' trial, thus concludes a long article:—"As to the little band of Salvationists, they retired into a neighbouring room, where they held their usual meeting, which was particularly blessed. It is worthy of note that in this neighbourhood the greater part of the converts are men—great big fellows, powerful-looking peasants, who from being openly worldly, and many of them brutal and hard drinkers, have become gentle as lambs, kind to their families, upright, honest, returning good for evil, and if they had wronged anyone formerly, they made restoration. The change in their lives burns the conscience of their old companions in sin, and consequently the opposition is very great: it can be justly called persecution."

The Tribune de Genève, in a late number, contains the following true story, under the heading "The blessings of religion": "F——, a soldier of the Armée du Salut, Rolle division, had, several years ago, set fire to a large rick of hay belonging to one of his neighbours, out of vengeance. No one had ever been able to discover the author of this cowardly action. Well, a few days ago, F—— having become a fervent convert of the Armée du Salut, presented himself before his former enemy, and declaring himself the author of the fire, restored the value of the burnt hay, adding that his position as member of the Armée du Salut did not permit him to leave this world with a crime upon his conscience."

In Neuchatel the authorities still pursue their unwise course of oppression, utterly setting at nought all the guarantees of the Anglo-Swiss treaty. They have just expelled another one of our female officers for attending several meetings while on a short visit. When summoned before the Prefect she refused to leave, declaring she had done nothing worthy of banishment. He asked her to go away quietly, so as to avoid any unpleasantness. She refused to leave, saying that the authorities ought not to do anything which they were ashamed to do publicly, and must bear all the consequences of their illegal and oppressive acts. Finding that she had not left, a gendarme came and took her by train to another town. The work is now going forward with great blessing in Neuchatel under two Swiss officers. One of them writes with a heart overflowing with joy, and tells of many professed conversions.

In Paris Miss Booth has commenced a series of meetings for the upper classes. On Sundays they are held upon the fashionable Boulevard des Capucines, at the very head quarters, we may say, of gay Godlessness and elegant infidelity, and at the hour of all the week when the Boulevard is the most densely crowded. At the first meeting the hall was filled: at the second it was crowded to excess. The audiences have been of the very class which Miss Booth had desired to reach, described by a well-known Parisian writer, who was present with several other literary men of note, as "a special public, and quite different from that which fills the Quai Valmy hall—a public reserved, cold, sceptical! salle d'amateurs! the most refractory milieu for mystical effusions!" But the Spirit of God spoke, and we have had the joy of seeing these audiences listen with the most profound and respectful attention for upwards of an hour at a time. Nearly the half of the audience remain for the prayer-meeting. Letters of sympathy and encouragement come in, showing that a wide door has been opened among the better classes, while the work goes forward at the same time among the poor in La Vilette.

A comrade writes from Nîmes: "We visited seven villages, and held eight meetings: we had a blessed time. My heart did ache in some of those villages; people followed us miles to hear of salvation. If we went in to visit some sick person the house would soon become filled, some of them crying and asking whether we could not stay longer. They said they had a sermon preached every three weeks. Poor creatures! they are hungering and thirsting for salvation."

From Valence we have just received accounts of some striking cases of conversion; there, also, the work has extended to a number of villages in the departments, where many souls have been saved, and avant-postes are now established.

It is with feelings of profound gratitude to God that we look back upon the year that ha now closed. In spite of the extreme difficulties which we have encountered in consequence of the numerous untrue statements circulated with reference to this work, hundreds of souls have been saved. Tens of thousands of tongues have pronounced the word salvation, and have been obliged to look upon it under a new light, as a matter of such vital, eternal importance as to necessitate its being forced upon their notice. During these twelve months, under the blessing of God, the number of our officers has doubled, the number of subscribers to our paper En Avant! has trebled, the number of our stations has increased fourfold. Nine young men and women—French, Swiss, and Italian converts of the work—have consecrated their whole lives and time to God, and are now labouring as officers in various stations. We look forward to this new year with hearts full of hope, and in confidence that it will be marked with unprecedented blessing.

127, Quai Valmy, Paris. A. S. Clibborn.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan have concluded a Gospel Mission at Oldfen-lane, Coningsby, Lincolnshire. The week-night and Sundays' meetings were crowded, and much blessed of the Lord.

Bradninch, Devon.—Mr. Thicknesse continues to labour successfully among the people in their homes and in the Mission hall. On New Year's Day a bountiful tea was given to all the aged poor.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding services during the past few weeks in Kilburn, Devonshire, Somersetshire, and Wimbledon, where much blessing has been given. He is now holding nightly meetings during the present month in the East-end of London.

Rev. J. Mountain writes from Port Elizabeth, South Africa, on Dec. 5: "My health is improving, though very slowly, yet sufficiently to give me good hopes of being able to resume work in the beginning of February. We are staying at a Moravian Mission Station, where we have every comfort an invalid can desire, and where we have cheering Christian fellowship. We purpose staying till the end of January."

Relief of Persecuted Jews.

SINCE my last communication on this subject we have heard of the arrival at Cyprus of the gentleman whom the Committee have placed in charge of our poor Jews, and of the work to be done for and by them. His report of the land granted by Government for the Colony, is that we are in possession of an extensive tract of land on the hills near Paphos—that there are upon it numerous wild olive and carob trees, which, when grafted, will be very valuable. There is a fair proportion of land fit for corn, and much more very suitable for vineyards.

But this land, so valuable in itself, both for the quality and for the healthiness of the site, needs much labour in clearing and cultivation. The Colonists, who had gone through so many hardships, and had suffered much from illness, have now been many of them again disabled by illness. When the British authorities assigned the allotted land the season was already very far advanced. It was near the end of September before the second party—having performed Quarantine in another part of the island—joined their brethren who had arrived a fortnight before.

The British authorities kindly placed them in the only village near at hand, where a few little cottages were obtained for the women and children. This village, however, is at the foot of the hills, on the top of which the Colony land lies. The rainy season soon set in, and our people have endured much discomfort and consequent sickness. The doctor speaks of them as in "a very low state, needing food, and more clothing and comforts for the winter." These our agent is providing for them as fast as possible. As soon as cottages and other buildings can be put up on the site of the future village, we may hope for great improvement in health and strength.

The committee are most anxious to press forward the building work with all speed. The clearing of the land will be gradually done as the people are able to do it.

Need I say that we are but at the beginning of a very great task, but also of an undertaking which may bring innumerable blessings to these and other persecuted sons of Israel. We need help for present support, for building and clearing, for clothing and necessaries of many kinds. We have not asked for Christmas gifts while the needs of our poor at home have been the subject of benevolent effort. But now we venture again to lay before Christians the great needs of these persecuted Jews.

Let it not be supposed that the persecution are over. These are a few recent incidents. A Jewish child was sent on a message to the master (a Christian) of the school which he attended. The master was absent. Two of the schoolboys (Russians) said, "Let us shoot the little Jew." Taking down a gun, they actually shot the Jewish child dead, then and there. They carried the body out and buried it in the garden. The oldest of these boys was thirteen.

At another Russian town some drunken soldiers attacked the Jews with their weapons, killed the Chief Rabbi, and wounded many before they could be stopped. At Ekurinoslav, in the recent attack on the Jews, 701 Jewish families were pillaged, with loss of about £45,000. At another town less property was destroyed—eighty families were ruined; but the cruelties inflicted were greater.

From Roumania we hear of an officer beating to death a Jewish private in his regiment, because the poor fellow had stayed an hour too long in synagogue at the Solemn Service of the New Year—a most important fast. No proceedings were taken against this officer, or anything done at the date of the report. Jewish persecution is being continued. We ask for means to continue such relief as can be given.

E. A. Finn, Secretary.

In Memoriam—Lord Congleton.

"THE LORD GAVE."

A VESSEL unto honour for the clay
Upon the Potter's wheel had so been wrought,
That scarcely in the porcelain of to-day,
We recognise the same the Master sought,
In purchasing the yield
Of this world's field.

Yet so He moulded it with his own hand,
And so He filled it with his Spirit's grace,
That flinty rock, and earth, and desert sand
Furnished a vessel for his holy place.
A cup to bear and hold
His burnished gold.

And when affliction's flame its work had done,
Burned in the Master's name, and fixed the hues
And patterns, which the High and Holy One
Designed upon his workmanship to use.
To many a pilgrim tent
That cup was sent.

Ofttimes a thirsty one of Eastern land
Drank from that vessel living waters sweet;
Ofttimes the Master took it in his hand
To pour the stream upon his wanderers' feet.
Took it, as Gideon of old,
God's light to hold.

And many a weary warrior saw that light,
And glorified the Lord our God, in heaven,
And many a stalwart foe was put to flight,
Who elsewise from the field had ne'er been driven. Oft was the traveller's way
Cheered by its ray.

And often did its golden lettering
The message of the Lord of Hosts proclaim.
And from that cup the ointment poured forth,
The precious ointment of the Saviour's name.
Thus more than we could crave
Jehovah gave.

"AND THE LORD HATH TAKEN AWAY."

And He hath taken: e'en that cup He took Off from the service-board, and laid aside,
And then the pitcher at the fountain broke;
But like the iron that floated on the tide,
That cup restored shall be,
O Lord, by Thee.

Yes, He hath taken. Publish it in Gath!
The mighty hath not fallen: nay, he rose;
For though the earthen vessel fell to earth,
The treasure from the vessel Jesus shows
Safe in his own right hand,
In yonder land.

Yes, He hath taken; yet not all, not all
Of that which once we called our lost one's own
We wander now through a funereal hall,
When only empty hatchments mock our groan,
But where to sight revealed,
Hung sword and shield.

The Lord hath taken; but not all He gave;
Of his free bounty only part reclaims;
Hath He not left the bravery of his brave,
And living features of those blessed names,
All photographed in light
To meet our sight?

Yes, He hath taken; but the ointment sweet
The broken alabaster left behind,
Fil'eth the house around the Saviour's feet,
And still its fragrance floateth on the wind,
And passeth not away
With that cold clay.

"BLESSED BE THE NAME OF THE LORD."

And blessed be thy name, O Lord, our God!
We bless Thee for thy giving and thy taking,
We bless Thee for thy staff and for thy rod,
We bless Thee for our sleeping and our waking,
And for each link so bright
'Twixt day and night.

We praise Thee for the cup and for the treasure,
Praise Thee for wine so pleasant to thy taste,
That thou unto Thyself didst lift the measure:
Let not our cold affections count it waste
That thus our loss should be
So gained by Thee.

And when that precious dust again shall waken,
Emerge in beauty from the forming mould;
In thine own image we shall see it shapen
For service in the Temple—all of gold;
Then each full cup shall be
All, all for Thee.

CHRISTIAN COMMERCIALS.

ACCORDING to the general opinion of those who know, the work of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association is making rapid progress. The eleventh annual meeting of the Association was held in the Pillar Hall, Cannon-street Hotel, London, E.C., on Thursday, December 27.

Mr. JOHN MACGREGOR (Rob Roy) presided at the devotional meeting at 4 p.m. The tone of the meeting was as earnest as the Chairman's address was practical. Members of the Association, we are told, had lively recollections of Mr. Macgregor's conduct of a like meeting some years ago, and were, therefore, quite prepared to be helped and encouraged in their spiritual life and daily associations by the soldier and traveller under whose calm exterior so much of pathos, humour, thrilling adventure, and "sanctified common sense" repose.

The Chairman thought that when speaking to a body of such intelligent people as those before him there was no requirement of eloquence, nor even of rounded periods. Commercial travellers, in their business, heard quickly and understood in a moment. He would, therefore, at once proceed to give them a few thoughts. Human life had ever been compared to a pilgrimage. It was so represented throughout the Old and New Testaments, and Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress was the expression of a universal sentiment. This introduction easily made way for the speaker to allude to travellers through the world. We can do no more than just indicate the points which followed. Travellers must make a start—a good start. The City of Destruction Bunyan compared to the world; travellers must come out of the City of Destruction. The prodigal son had said, "I will arise;" travellers must say so, and do it too. Law, the "schoolmaster," was critically and clearly explained; unity, recruits, resistance, enjoyment, thanks, and praise, were all pourtrayed and illustrated by the speaker's personal observation of and participation in events in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. The large company listened, and it is hoped profited by the teaching; and when the short address was followed by prayer and praise, all must have felt that it was good to be there.

A tea and conversazione followed, after which Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, President of the Association, took the chair at 6.30 p.m. Prayer was offered by Mr. J. Jackson, member of Committee.

The report, read by Mr. J. W. Thatcher, the secretary, stated that about £470 had been received towards the Special Fund of £1000 for placing more libraries in commercial rooms of hotels, and more Bibles in hotel bedrooms. The new members for the year numbered 117, or a full total of something like 2000. Bibles had been placed in various hotels about the country in parcels varying from 6 to 70. The Library Fund was certainly receiving more support than usual, both from hotel proprietors and commercial travellers. Ten new libraries had been sent out, valued at £20 each; four had been renewed, and one new library had been despatched since the close of the financial year. The libraries scattered throughout the kingdom now number 142. The Committee suggested that gentlemen desiring to help this work could, upon subscribing £10, nominate any hotel to receive a library. A truly Christ-like part of the work was that which relieved necessitous cases amongst commercial travellers, or those dependent on them. The success which had resulted to On the Road, the organ of the Association, far exceeded expectation.

Mr. WILLIAMS expressed himself as being deeply thankful to God for the growth of the tree that they planted eleven years ago, and as a proof of his great sympathy with the work which the Committee were doing he promised £100.

Mr. HENRY LEA, late President of the Association, and chief representative of Messrs. Huntley & Palmer, of Reading, spoke highly of the effect of the Association for good upon the tone of "the road" generally, and earnestly commended the idea of the Benefit Society for Commercial Travellers. Mr. Morgan, speaking of the Bible Fund, said it was a great thing for the Association to have been instrumental in placing between 9000 and 10,000 Bibles in as many commercial hotel bedrooms. Mr. Arnold Pye Smith followed, and offered the sum of £50 to the Association if any other person would give or collect a like amount. Mr. W. G. Reynolds, hon. treasurer of the Leeds Branch, spoke of the progress of the work in Leeds, and urged the necessity of forming branches in the six great centres of industry of this country.

Mr. Henry Holme, hon. secretary, and Mr. G. C. Davies, late Chairman of the Committee, spoke of the need of every member of the Association being an evangelist for Christ in the commercial rooms up and down the land. Mr. W. Verry, an old and well-tried member of Committee, followed, and handed up the sum of about £16, which he had collected on account of the Beneficent Fund.

The Chairman read out a list of subscriptions and donations received or promised, which amounted to more than £240. During the evening a choice selection of sacred music was rendered by a choir of ladies and gentlemen, who gave their services freely. Altogether, this meeting was one that will be remembered by all who were present for its brightness and earnestness.

Frenchmen in London.

ON the last evening of the year just closed we witnessed a somewhat novel, but deeply interesting, gathering of young Frenchmen in Exeter Hall. About sixty of our foreign brethren were gathered for social intercourse and prayer. Short addresses were given at the tea table by the young men to their fellows, and, adjourning to the Lower Hall, they listened with the deepest interest to the earnest words of Rev. J. M. H. Du Pontet de la Harpe, the Swiss Pastor; Rev. Descœndres; Messrs. Brauem (Secretary), F. Terrisse, and others. The last half hour of the old year was spent in reading Psalms xxiii. and xc., and in fervent prayer for the Lord's blessing in the untrodden future. The proceedings were in French throughout, and we much enjoyed listening to the hymns from Songs and Solos, sung as we have often heard them in the Paris meetings.

A Bible-class for French young men is held in Exeter Hall every Thursday at 7.30 p.m. The Secretary, Mr. Alfred Brauen, 114, Beaufort-street, Chelsea, S.W., gives a cordial invitation to all French-speaking young men.

LEEDS RAILWAY MISSION.—Through your kindness on a former occasion we obtained many kind helpers for this Mission, and there has been much blessed fruit for the Master. There are still some hundreds of railway officials without monthly packets. We feel sure at this time Christians will kindly comply with our request by either helping us to extend the work or undertaking to send, at their own expense, a penny Gospel paper and a few tracts monthly, also a letter when convenient. Communications to be addressed to Mrs. Cambie, 32, York-road, Hove, Brighton, who will forward any number of names for correspondence, with full particulars.

Pioneering in South Africa.

DEAR SIR,—As many of the readers of The Christian are personally acquainted with Mr. George Angus, formerly of the Congo Inland Mission, we would ask them to unite with him and with us in praising God for permitting him to reach Rock Fountain in safety. He has come to us with the view of settling at Hope Vale, one of the two out-stations we are preparing to open, and rejoices in the prospect of spending his life in giving the Gospel to the heathen of South Africa.

In a few days we purpose to start together to build the first house at Hope Vale, which joins a large native location, or tract of country, set apart by Government for natives to live in. It is about ten miles north of Rock Fountain, and is in every way a most suitable site for missionary operations; the people for miles round had never had the Gospel preached to them until I first itinerated amongst them.

The site of the second out-station is an equally important centre for Mission work; it is quite as neglected as Hope Vale, and, like it, joins a large native location. It is about ten miles south of Rock Fountain. We have named it "Eluxolwein," which means "where peace is:" it is named as nearly as possible after the Mission we helped Major Malan to found amongst the Amagcalekas. About two months since I encamped in the waggon at Eluxolwein, while I built the first part of a stone house, from which there is a magnificent view of hill and forest country. We hope to erect a school-house and other buildings, and to place a native evangelist and schoolmaster there, as God gives us the means.

There are many signs of encouragement in connection with our work here at Rock Fountain. There has been a greater desire shown to listen to the Gospel than ever before, and a larger attendance at the day-school, where gratifying progress has been made. The parents of the scholars have at last shown a real interest in the improvement of their children, who seem much pleased to learn, and expressed regret when the holidays began during the ploughing time. We are in great need of a larger school-house.

When will the Christian Church awake to a true realisation of her growing responsibility to the heathen world, and more especially to the heathen of our Colonies? Year by year they are in rapidly increasing numbers acquiring the vices of the white man. Hundreds of unprincipled people are drawing them by example and by temptation wilfully placed in their way into the vices which so stain our civilisation, while a missionary here and there is striving alone to lead them to God and virtue. I cannot but feel that it is not according to the mind and will of Christ that the prayer, effort, thought, and money, of those who love Him should be to so large an extent given to home work, while the heathen world is by so many, comparatively speaking, forgotten. Are we each honestly doing all we can, not to spread the Gospel in our own land alone, but to give it to the whole world? Elbert S. Clarke.

Rock Fountain Mission, Ixopo, Natal, Nov. 17.

THE MILDMAY MEDICAL MISSION Report gives a pleasing account of its last year's work among the poor. The skill of the medical gentlemen, he careful attention of the nurses, and the preaching of the Gospel, have resulted in many cases of recovery from severe illness and healing of souls.

DEAF AND DUMB.—Those who feel specially interested in these afflicted brethren and sisters will be glad to know that Mr. James Paul, Kilmarnock, Argylshire, is endeavouring to alleviate their lot, through the medium of a magazine devoted to their social and religious elevation. He would be glad to hear from any who can co-operate.

IN the midst of much determined opposition to the Gospel, and many peculiar trials attendant on a work like ours, it was a great relief to leave it all for a few days to listen to the very helpful addresses of dear Mr. Müller delivered at Bangalore. It was our privilege to be present at all his meetings, and also to meet him several times in Bangalore. The teaching of such a matured saint would be valued anywhere: how much more in a country like this, where such privileges are rare! What good was done in the great cantonment of Bangalore eternity alone will reveal. Missionaries and believers of all denominations listened to him with eager delight.

We had the joy of taking him and Mrs. Müller back to Colar with us. Our friends can easily imagine what pleasure it gave us to have them with us. We were sorry Mr. Müller could only stay a short time, but we listened to the three addresses he gave here with much profit. He strengthened our hands in the Lord, and his wise counsel was very valuable. I think we had the privilege of taking him over the first native town he had seen in India. Our orphans were drawn up in rank to welcome him, and again when he left. As the carriage moved off they started a farewell hymn, and so the happy visit terminated. Mr. Müller showed his entire sympathy with our work in a way we little expected. Although he has been in India but a short time, he is well known, venerated, and universally loved.

Mr. Müller gave one address to educated natives in Bangalore. He was giving an account of his gigantic work in Bristol, and how the Lord had graciously supplied all the means necessary. One young native gentleman rose and said: "Reverend sir, may I ask a question?" Mr. Müller told him it was not a time for discussion; but being assured that he did not want to argue (as is their custom), he was allowed to put the question. "Sir," he said, "I want to know how the money comes. Does God send it directly down from heaven?" This gives an idea how strange Mr. Müller's story seems to the heathen natives of India, even to the most educated of them.

We would earnestly ask the prayers of our dear Christian friends for our difficult work among these heathen people.—Yours faithfully,

W. Alfd. Redwood.

Colar, Mysore Territory, India, Dec. 11.

P.S.—I would take this opportunity of thanking, most sincerely, some anonymous friend who sends me The Christian.

WORKING LADS IN EAST LONDON.—Mr. Henry Hill, jun., has sent out the seventh annual report of the Working Lads' East End and City Institutes, and it is a most encouraging record, not only for the statements made as to what has been achieved among this important class, but for the plans proposed in extension of the work. It is carried on, as Mr. Hill remarks, at the very minimum of cost; those who help may therefore be sure that any money they may subscribe to it will be spent to the utmost possible advantage. Mr. Hill's address is, 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

NEW TEMPERANCE CLUB.—A Provisional Committee of some twenty gentlemen, including several names well known in Temperance circles, has been formed to promote a new club for gentlemen, to be called the "Metropolitan." Premises have been secured in the immediate vicinity of Ludgate Circus, and the exclusion of intoxicating drinks will be a ruling principle. A change in the proprietorship of the City Club, which has hitherto been conducted on Temperance principles, has led to the introduction of alcoholic beverages in that club, the result being that a considerable number of Temperance men feel called upon to attempt to prove the practicability of maintaining such an establishment on strictly Temperance principles for the accommodation of young men and others employed in London, and for country visitors, at a nominal rate of subscription. The hon. secretary of the movement is Mr. John Kempster, of 3, Boltcourt, Fleet-street, E.C., from whom preliminary information may be obtained.

Medical Students in Chicago.

DEAR "CHRISTIAN,"—I am always interested in your weekly messages from "the old country," and you may be glad to have a word from this side—a word bearing upon one particular line of work—that among medical students. In Chicago there are seven medical colleges, with an aggregate of fourteen hundred students. In these colleges there are to be found young men who are "out and out" for Christ, while many others have not had sufficient spiritual food of the right kind to make them strong.

The Young Men's Christian Association conceived the idea of doing a special work among these students, and organised a committee, the chairman of which is a respected physician, a graduate of one of the colleges, with a student from each of the colleges to complete the organisation. At the commencement of the college year a neat card of "greeting" was printed and put into the hands of each student; later on a reception was tendered them in Farwell Hall by the Association—about seven hundred being present. Brief addresses were given bearing upon the work of the Association, &c.

The latest, after the organisation of weekly prayer-meetings in two of the colleges—meetings conducted and supported by the students—was a "Medical Students' Missionary Conference," on Sunday afternoon and evening, Dec. 9. The afternoon session was opened with a devotional service by Mr. I. E. Brown, State Secretary of the Illinois Y.M.C.A. Following him, Rev. Dr. Henry M. Scudder gave an address on the work of a medical missionary. Dr. Scudder was thirty years in India. His father was a missionary; six brothers were missionaries, and he now has two sons missionaries. He declared, "I would be in India to-day if it were God's will;" but his health has failed; still, he is pastor of one of Chicago's largest churches.

After the afternoon session had adjourned the ladies repaired to the ladies' parlour, where they interrogated Mrs. Gray, who was a missionary for ten years in Persia, while the gentlemen pointed questions at Rev. H. M. Scudder, jun., who is just now here visiting from India.

The evening session was addressed by Rev. H. H. Jessup, D.D., of Beirut, Syria, where he has been for thirty years—much delighted with his work and the future prospects for the cause of the Lord. He showed in his address bright promises and prospects for a Medical Missionary, and urged the young men to take up the cross. One hundred students and Christian workers attended a consecration service in the parlours, at the close of the evening service. Many held up their hands when the leader said, "All who are willing to have the Lord show them their duty, and make them willing to follow the duty, raise their hands." Then followed a season of earnest prayer. Christians are praying for God's blessing upon this meeting. Six hundred students attended the afternoon session, while between seven and eight hundred were present at the evening session.

Let Christians put up a cry everywhere for God's blessing upon this work among the medical students. Some three or four students are only waiting to finish their course in order to enter the field. G. T. H.

LONDON BIBLE WOMEN.—Earl Cairns has written a brief but sympathetic preface to a volume just published by Messrs. J. Clarke & Co., from the pen of Mr. Holden Pike, under the title of "Darkest for the Perishing: the Power of the Bible in London." To those who feel the importance of looking at all sides of the question that now engages the attention of the statesman and the philanthropist, this record of what a few noble Christian men and women have been enabled to achieve in God's service amongst the thousands or even of hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children who have been produced in, or gravitated into, this great metropolis, and who constitute perhaps the most difficult element in the question, will be read with the deepest interest.—Christian World.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SICILY.

WE recently published an article on evangelization in Sicily. Later news from Signor Varnier is deeply interesting, and confirms the hope that the work is of a permanent character.

NEW YORK.

Rev. Jacob Freshman is labouring earnestly and successfully among the 80,000 Jews of this city. He has two Sunday-schools in the midst of a large Jewish population, and preaches the Gospel in the Cooper Union. A committee of advice assists him in furthering the work of the Lord among the sons of Abraham.

SWITZERLAND.

Alarmed by the inroads of immorality, many Christians are going out into the highways and compelling the "unfortunates" to come in to the feast prepared for them by the Heavenly Father. A remarkable impulse, too, has been given of late years to Sunday-school work.

A correspondent writes from Geneva to The Times: "On Christmas Day a Protestant service was inaugurated in the village of Lancy, a Catholic parish half an hour distant from Geneva. The official church of the place went over, ten years ago, to the Old Catholic fraction, and it is the parish council of that body that offered it to the Protestants. The few disciples of Father Hyacinthe, the founder of the Old Catholic or National Catholic movement, who have not ceased to take an interest in religious matters, will very likely attend the Protestant service rather than their own, and in the course of time the Old Catholic service will be suppressed, to the great satisfaction of the congregation. To reform Catholicism is an impossibility, and our Reformed Catholics will be most happy as soon as they no longer have the care of making their new Church cut a figure. This is the first step towards the fusion of the Anti-Infallibilist Catholics with the Protestants."

GENEVA.

A three days' conference was recently held for the promotion of holiness among Christians of all denominations, and to promote the evangelisation of unreached masses of the population. The afternoon meetings were crowded by Christians anxious for growth in grace, and in the evenings 1500 people, belonging to a class who never enter a place of worship, pressed into the hall of the Reformation.

An encouraging Temperance meeting was held two days after, in which interesting testimonies were heard; among others, from a proprietor of vines, who employs none but Temperance men in his vineyard, and from a happy Christian man, once drawn out of the very depths of dipsomania by the power of God. There are in Switzerland above 3000 abstainers, among whom are 1000 reformed inebriates. Intense resistance is still made by all classes of persons, but the cause is steadily making headway.

WEST AUSTRALIA.

The Rev. D. Shearer, of Perth, W. Australia, begs to acknowledge, with thanks, the receipt of tracts, papers, and periodicals, also various copies of THE CHRISTIAN, kindly sent regularly by friends. There is great need for much of this kind of literature in West Australia, and Mr. Shearer will be always glad to distribute any kindly sent him. Will friends of the Gospel pray much for its success in this colony?

COPENHAGEN.

Three years ago an Englishman, Mr. Wright, commenced to gather the children together in some of the most thickly populated districts. He taught them to sing and so made his way into the homes of the people. This work is now known as the "Court-yard Mission." The workers and members parade the streets, hold meetings, and gather into rooms a spiritually destitute though attentive people, to hear the Word of God.

SPA, BELGIUM.

A Christmas festival for children was held in the chapel built at Spa by the late Miss Beamish's exertions. Mons. Nicolet is pastor. Never, since the day of the opening of our chapel, writes M. Nicolet, had it been so crowded. There were nearly 300 persons of all classes and all ages. I think that in the audience there were at least 200 Roman Catholics. I naturally took advantage of this good opportunity to speak of the great gift which God in his mercy bestowed on mankind by sending Jesus Christ into the world. I am persuaded that this festival will under God's blessing determine many persons to come and hear the preaching of true Christianity, and that they will decide to send their children to our Sunday-school. Already the children of a large family have been promised to us at the beginning of the year.

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

ON Sunday evening, December 30, Mr. Wilkinson baptized at the Conference Hall two Jews and one Jewess, on their clear confession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Many Jews and Jewesses were present. On Thursday, January 3, in the German schoolroom, Leman-street, Whitechapel, the annual tea and meeting of the night-school was held, when over 200 Jewish children gathered round the tea-tables. Prizes and presents were largely distributed. It was indeed a happy gathering, and full of promise.

On the following evening, in the same place, another wonderfully interesting meeting was held. About 200 Jewesses had tea, and listened most attentively to Gospel hymns and addresses for about two hours and a half. Mr. Wilkinson presided. Short Gospel addresses were given in German and in English by Dr. Dixon, Dr. Marshall, Mr. Field, Mr. Noble, Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. Adler, Mr. Hulbmillion, and Mr. Baron. On a call for a show of hands on the part of those who dare entrust to Jesus the soul's interests to all eternity, thirty hands were boldly uplifted. It was indeed a time for praising God.

REV. C. WORBOYS, late of Finsbury, writes to a contemporary announcing his arrival in New Zealand on Nov. 8. He says: "My first impressions are decidedly favourable. The climate is excellent, magnificent scenery, a wild profusion of lovely flowers of every kind, with an abundance of fruit and food. There is an air of prosperity about the place: have not encountered a beggar yet. I do not say there is no poverty, but I have not met with it. There is plenty of work, with liberal wages and short hours, eight being a day's work; but I understand they do work while they are at it. Agriculturalists and mechanics, especially carpenters and smiths, would do well to come out. Those who can only hold the pen, serve behind the counter, or engage in fancy trades, had better remain at home, unless they are disposed to adapt themselves to altered circumstances, and by labour contribute to the wealth and well-being of the community."

WORKING MEN'S LORD'S DAY REST ASSOCIATION.—This Association has issued a New Year's address reviewing the present position of the Sunday question. The most important event, says the address, relating to Sunday observance during the past year has been the unexampled opposition given to Sunday opening of museums by trades unions, working men's clubs, Oddfellows, Foresters, and similar working-class societies. A resolution to open the national collections on weekday evenings will be proposed in Parliament next session, and the association will support this resolution in every way. Satisfaction is expressed that the London Road Car Company has during the year discontinued Sunday traffic. The British Cab Company also abstained from Sunday work. The committee report that the parcel post is not worked on Sundays. Reference is made to the total Sunday closing of public-houses in Scotland and Wales (except to travellers), and in Ireland except in five principal towns. The address concludes with a notice of the dangers threatening the Sunday as a day of rest by the action of the various Sunday opening societies, and with appeals for co-operation in the efforts made to grapple vigorously with these organisations.

Midnight Meetings.

THE Committee of the Midnight Meeting movement arranged a series of Rescue Meetings in all the leading parts of the Metropolis on the last nights of 1883 and the first of the New Year. The arrangements were made by Mr. J. H. L. Christien, aided by a goodly staff of willing workers, whose zeal has been again conspicuous in seeking out, as far as possible, all the poor outcast women, in order to bring them under the sound of the Gospel.

It has been sought—on this occasion especially—to make the area of operations as extensive as possible. Islington and Highbury in the north, Kennington in the south, Bayswater in the west, Mile End and Bow in the east, formed the limits of the Mission. In each of these districts there was an extensive distribution of a specially-prepared letter tract, written by a lady greatly interested in this benevolent work. In addition a letter-tract was widely circulated, addressed to immoral men, on the sin of unchastity. The Mission work was not confined to the streets, but notably the common lodging-houses in the Mint, Southwark, Westminster, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, and St. Giles', were visited, and hundreds were gathered out from these localities, to attend the meetings held.

At more than one of the meetings the increased number of girls of tender years—many of them probably not more than 14 years of age—was most painfully present, and to this class, particularly as being more hopeful and reclaimable, especial attention was directed.

The scenes witnessed on these occasions, at both the midnight and morning meetings, were of such a character as to command the sympathy of every Christian man and woman. Here were present, in large numbers, listening patiently and gladly to the proclamation of the grace of God through our Lord Jesus Christ, many young girls and mere children, living in a state of vice and degradation too painful to be described, and bearing in their faces the marks of ill-usage and suffering, which a life of sin almost invariably entails. It would have rejoiced the hearts of the lovers of Christian pity and forgiveness to have witnessed the eager and willing demeanour which characterised many of these poor sin-stricken and suffering creatures. Already some very encouraging instances of reclamation have been met with.

A WORD FOR MOTHERS.—If there is any one person in the wide world I have a great respect and admiration for, it is a mother who has trained a large family for God and for eternity. I have now in my mind a mother in America who has twelve boys, and nearly everyone of them is preaching the Gospel. It may be that during the long years she was training them she felt as if she was not accomplishing much for Christ. Probably few on that Continent have done so much for the cause of Christ as that mother.—D. L. Moody.

GOLDEN LANE MISSION.—The annual meeting of the members of the Golden-lane and Hoxton Mission Church, was held on Monday week at the Costers' Hall. Out of a roll of 261 members some 160 sat down to a bountiful tea which Mr. W. J. Orsman, the voluntary evangelist and superintendent of the Mission, with other friends, had provided; and after tea a pleasant evening was spent, the congregation then dispersing to meet again in larger numbers later on for the midnight service. One pleasing incident in the evening was the presentation by Mr. Orsman of a number of books of a superior class to the teachers and workers associated with him in the Mission.—Christian World.

PUBLICANS AND CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.—The minister of the Established Church at Portobello is at issue with his session and congregation with reference to the admission of publicans to the communion. He insists that the presence of those engaged in the sale of liquor in a Christian congregation has a demoralising effect; but, somewhat inconsistently, he will permit publicans at present members to remain in the church. That he has got himself into hot water goes without saying. The publican element threaten to withdraw from the congregation unless a full apology is forthcoming, and altogether the conscience-stricken Scotch minister is in a pretty fix.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Public Schools' Scripture Union.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to bring this Union under the notice of those of your readers who have sons or nephews at any of the large Public Schools. It has already been the means of much good; at several of the Public Schools there are a few members, and at two or three, as at Westminster School and Christ's Hospital, a goodly number. The branch at Westminster School numbers 50 or 60 members, and, I believe, some of them meet at a Bible-class weekly.

The Hon. W. J. Scott, of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Mr. S. Martyn Bardsley, of Christ Church, Oxford, have now joined me in the secretaryship of the Union, and by their influence and that of several other friends at the two Universities who aided in our seaside work last summer, I trust we shall, during this year largely extend the Union.

We feel it to be very important that members of the Union in the same school should be known to one another, and with this view we propose to form a central register of all the members. Mr. G. A. King (of Winchester and Corpus Christi College, Oxford), a member of the committee of the Children's Special Service Mission, is undertaking this part of the work, and he hopes to write occasionally to some of the members, and to put those whom he finds in the same school in communication with one another.

It would surely be of immense advantage for the sons of Christian parents, and for all boys who have been under Christian teaching, who are at the same school, to have some bond of union by which they could be brought together and be led mutually to help one another in the battle against evil, which must be fought at every large school. The Public Schools' Scripture Union seems to offer exactly the bond that is needed. To a little boy just going to the school an introduction to a band of earnest lads older than himself would be invaluable.

No doubt there are a very large number of Christian friends who know of some public school-boy whom they might influence to join this Union. All who are earnest enough to read the daily portion (the same portion as that read by the Scripture Union for children and young people) are invited. No time could be more favourable than the present, when we are at the beginning of a new year, and when boys are at home for their holidays.

I may add that we have also a "School-boys' Scripture Union" for boys above twelve in private boarding or day schools.

Yours very faithfully,

18, Paternoster-row, E.C. T. B. Bishop.

UNION HALL MISSION.—On Christmas morning a good company of the Lord's people came together at Union Hall, for praise, prayer, and addresses. A tea-meeting was held on Bank Holiday, and a goodly number were present, after which we had a large open-air meeting. Gospel addresses were given in the hall by Christian friends from different parts of London. The Watch-night service was well attended. The readers of The Christian will rejoice to know that we are being permitted to witness blessing to souls in the different localities of the halls, and that on the whole the work is in a prosperous condition.

MR. T. E. MURPHY.—It has been arranged by the Committee of the Irish Temperance League that Mr. Murphy will address meetings at the following places:—Stirling, Scotland, January 11 to 18; Monaghan, 22 to 24; Carrickfergus, 29 to 31. Since Dec. 1 he has addressed meetings at Larne, Belfast, Portaferry, Kirkcubbin, Cork, Bandon, Waterford, Moneygall, Shimane, Newtownards, Coalisland, Newmills, Kilrea, Killyleagh, and Downpatrick. On Friday evening last Mr. Murphy presided at a Temperance demonstration in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, which was densely crowded, the proceedings being most enthusiastic throughout. Mr. Murphy expressed the great pleasure he had had in labouring in Ireland, and the love he felt towards those who had aided him in his work. The Secretary stated that not less than 100,000 persons had signed the pledge in that country through Mr. Murphy's labours.

A BITTER CRY.

Sir,—May I be allowed to call the attention of your readers to a bitter cry which has reached me this Christmas? It comes from the class of small shopkeepers, laundresses, and dressmakers, who cannot get payment of money justly due to them. I have heard of two small shops lately closed whose owners were made bankrupt from this very reason. One poor dressmaker worked hard to get a dress finished for "a lady," but the latter left town and "quite forgot" to pay her, leaving the poor woman in the greatest poverty and distress. Will ladies and housekeepers generally bethink themselves if they cannot make two little rules which would be for their own true happiness and benefit as well as for those they serve: (1) Never to order anything which they cannot pay for; (2) to pay for everything at once if practicable, and, if not, weekly. V. M. S.

KEEP CLOSE TO SCRIPTURE.

Dear Sir,—A recent issue of The Christian contains a report of some lectures, in which the speaker is stated to have made two or three assertions now often heard and soon adopted; and, therefore, in offering a few remarks, I quote neither place nor name, as if the teaching was special to them.

One statement is: "The martyred dead, and all departed saints, will have part in the first resurrection. But the rest of the dead—who are they? The lost ones, the wicked dead."

Now, if we turn to our Bibles, we shall read, Rev. xx. 12, as follows: "And I saw the dead, the great and the small, standing before the throne; and books were opened: and another book was opened, which is of Life." "And (v. 15), if any was not found written in the Book of Life he was cast into the lake of fire."

Hence it appears that while some "are accounted worthy to attain to that age and the resurrection from the dead," there is yet a Book of Life of others also.

Another statement is that the word translated "judgment-seat" in 2 Cor. v. 10 should be rendered "tribunal." Now whether the Greek word be translated judgment-seat or tribunal strikes me as of little moment in itself. But it becomes of moment if the hearer is to understand that the ideas in the words judgment-seat are diminished, or the force is lessened. The same word is used when Paul says, "I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat," and also for the judgment-seat on which Pilate sat when he tried Christ. Therefore nothing can be stronger, more august, more serious. The danger is, lest, after letting in a meaning of less weight, we go on to harmonise it by some variation, and so finally the keen cutting edge of the real truth is rounded off.

I think I see such effect in the further statement that "all accounts will be settled, cleared, and gone for ever," and "we shall leave the tribunal clear." Let us not deceive ourselves. The verse does not say, "we shall leave the tribunal clear." The words are, "that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." And if we find it difficult to fit such a truth into our scheme of theology, let us receive the truth, and await God's time for harmonising all his revelation.

And once again: "What if we have to judge our own kin, if unsaved? Think of that, fathers! You will have to acquiesce in the 'Depart, ye cursed.'" Of course, supposing the first word "if" covers all that is said, the application is based on a supposition. But surely there is solid truth enough in the Scriptures for us to exert any amount of earnest entreaty without sowing imaginary ideas, and then applying them. The Word of God says: "I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away." If we ourselves should realise such a scene vividly, and then speak accordingly, the truth will tell better and more powerfully on ourselves and others through its own intrinsic solemnity, than when it is encumbered with the superadded suggestion that we may have to decide upon the eternal destiny of anyone.

Let us at the commencement of this year resolve to keep closer, and yet closer, to the Scriptures, ever inquiring, "What does the Spirit of God teach?" So shall the light of truth flash more powerfully in us and from us.

"SCIENTIFIC" MIRAGES.

Sir,—In The Times of Dec. 24 I observe a notice of the lecture by Dr. Fowler, at the London Institution, on Whales and their Origin. He states that "the evidence is absolutely conclusive that they were not originally aquatic, but sprung from land mammals of the placental division." Such authority, of course, has its weight, though it would have been more satisfactory had the said evidence been furnished, that it might have been liable to cross-examination. The statement is at variance with that of Moses, who is otherwise well informed.

The Professor is somewhat at a loss as to "the particular group of mammals whence the whole family of Cetacea arose. One of the methods by which a land mammal might have been changed into an aquatic one is clearly shown in the still surviving stages among the carnivora." He then, after disallowing the opinions on this subject of other naturalists, "considers it far more reasonable to regard whales as derived from animals with large tails, such as the beaver, or American otter." The argument seems strange to one unaccustomed to this species of reasoning! It rather carries us back to our early days, when papa's walking-stick was transformed into a goodly horse, on which we rode with great complacency and confidence. To make no difficulty about diversity of size between beaver and whale, what of the transmutation of bony teeth into elastic whalebone—the bark-eater into a fish-eating animal? It does seem rather strange that this industrious and intelligent architect should leave his home occupations, and his fresh water, to go and live in the briny ocean, where all his intelligence and industry would find no scope, and where his sole employment would be to swim about and swallow fish! Were one of our race, even the Professor, thus to conduct himself, we should scarcely admire his wisdom, even though his tail were to extend to the cetacean dimensions.

I have observed two little words growing into much favour of late among our literati—"may," and "might"—introduced in this way: An explorer in the dark, with uncertain footing, wishes to account for something he fancies he can just discern. At first he says to himself, "it may be, or it might be so-and so," according as his fancy suggests. Presently he advances a step; his may becomes "it is possible"—in another stage it becomes "it is probable"—then, "it cannot be anything else"—finally, "it is certain." Thus are our facile minds led on from nothing more substantial than a mere conjecture, through a mirage of conjecture, into the conviction that gossamer thread is a railway train; or a blade of straw a pyramid solid as the rock itself.

Buckle, who seems not to have read Euclid, in his History thus sketches what seemed to him the proper mode of ratiocination: "You have an idea. Launch out boldly with it into the air. As you float along, look down, and if you perceive anything that will give support to your idea, drop upon it a scaffolding pole. Soar away onwards till another such thing is discerned. Another pole. And so on, till your idea is supported to your satisfaction." A convenient process, by which everything in opposition to the opinion is overlooked, unnoticed: a process by which eyes are not opened, but blinded.

Another savant may perhaps prefer the contractile to the expansive theory, and tell us that a whale, having wandered with its mate up one of the American rivers, had settled itself there, and perceiving that there were plenty of trees, but no beavers to eat them, had considerately changed both its habits and its bulk, and become the parent of all the beavers in that part of the earth, and elsewhere.

Whether the learned Professor is in a mirage, or whether, mindful of the season, he was pleasantly preparing his audience for the transformations of the pantomimes, is unknown to Senex.

THE SOUTH LONDON TABERNACLE, erected in the Peckham-road, under the auspices of the London Baptist Association, was opened on New Year's Day by a dedicatory service, when the sermon was preached by Rev. J. P Chown. The building is the outcome of a movement begun three years ago to meet the spiritual needs of the rapidly-growing population of Camberwell and Peckham. A small congregation was gathered together, first in an old chapel, and subsequently in the hall of the Institute for the Blind. The structure, in its present state, provides accommodation for 750 persons; the addition of galleries will, in due time, make the accommodation equal to 1200. The cost of the present building is £5000, towards which £3000 has been contributed.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE GOSPEL TRUMPET. Drummond's Tract Depôt. Attractive alike in style and contents, this volume will be the delight of many a home.

WAYSIDE SPRINGS FROM THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE. By THEO. L CUYLER, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. Truly invigorating are these springs. We cordially advise all pilgrims to tarry awhile and drink.

A MESSAGE TO GIRLS, by R. A. Y. (Partridge & Co.), exhorts young women to a noble Christian life, and shows how that life may be obtained and lived.

MEMORIALS OF FRANKLIN HOWORTH. Hodder & Stoughton. This book is aptly entitled the Triumph of Christ. It is the record of a saintly life of no ordinary type.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE'S ANNUAL FOR 1884 (1s., 337, Strand, W.C.), contains many well-written articles on various phases of the Temperance question, as well as statistics of progress.

MR. C. R. HURDITCH has issued his "Message for 1884" (4s. per 100). The "London Sheet Almanack" and the "London Pocket Almanack" will be found useful for reference. J. F. Shaw & Co.

THE EDUCATIONAL ALMANACK FOR 1884. 6d. 19, Warwick-street, London, S.W. This is a useful manual for teachers. Much useful information connected with the scholastic profession finds a place in its pages.

SHORT ANECDOTES ON TEMPERANCE. By A. ARTHUR READE. National Temperance Depôt. Temperance lecturers will hail this little book with delight. Short, pithy, and telling, these stories will prove a perfect vade mecum.

LIFE IN A LOOK. By Dean BALDWIN. Hodder & Stoughton. In these days of vague and slipshod theology it is refreshing to meet with such a little book as this. It has the true Gospel ring throughout.

THE "CHRISTIAN WORLD" YEAR BOOK FOR 1884. 1s. 6d. J. Clarke & Co., Fleet-street, E.C. This handbook furnishes a full alphabetical list of ministers of all the nonconforming churches of Great Britain and Ireland, with much cognate information. A calendar for engagements, &c. is added.

THE "ALDERLEY SERIES" OF TRACTS, by Rev. A. R. M. FINLAYSON (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling), are beautifully illustrated. The narrative Gospel stories are well told, and likely to be read with both interest and profit. (6d. per packet of 50.)

GRACE AND TRUTH, FOR OLD AND YOUNG. Horner & Son, Paternoster-square. 1d. Another new monthly magazine. The first number contains Gospel articles with illustrations, and pages for believers, by Mr. J. Denham Smith, Mr. F. Shuldham Henry, Mr. George F. French, and others. Without recognising any special niche it can fill, we trust it may become a useful monthly visitor in the home circle.

THE PARABLES OF JESUS. By SIEGFRIED GOEBEL. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. Messrs. Clark have, by the publication of their "Foreign Theological Library," greatly contributed to the advancement of biblical learning. Thirty or forty years ago Germany was, to most evangelical Christians in this country, what Nazareth was to the Jews in the time of the Apostles. The Messrs. Clark have done much to change this. They have given us many "good things" from Germany; they have shown that, while some German writers have been destructive of the Truth, many others have been its ablest defenders and builders-up. The present work is one of the latest of their series, and, though less original and striking than some others, it is certainly not the least valuable. It is a model of cautious and careful exposition. If we compare it with such writers as Trench, Alford, Stier, and Olshausen, we find that it differs from them mainly in its thorough examination of the words and phrases employed by our Lord, while they have spent their strength chiefly in developing and illustrating the ideas which they suppose to have been contained in the parables. Some of these ideas Herr Goebel rejects as the product of "caprice," handed down from the Fathers. Imagination has no place in the exposition. His supreme and controlling conception of his work is to find out and set forth exactly what Jesus hath spoken. Whoever sympathises with him in the desire to know this, will derive valuable aid from his book. It may be well to observe that the author assumes the possession of some knowledge of the Greek of the New Testament on the part of his readers.

DEVOTIONAL MANUALS. Woolmer. Those of us who have known and loved dear old Thomas à Kempis for years will recognise much similarity in this production of his Protestant brother in Christ.

LETTERS FROM SOUTH AFRICA, A CHILD OF THE DAY, AND MOONIATTA (Messrs. J. & R. Parlane, Paisley, 1d. each), relate to Gospel triumphs in the Mission field, in connection with the Free Church of Scotland.

ZIONWARD. By Rev. G. EVERARD. Drummond's Tract Depôt. The books of this deservedly popular author are too well known to need commendation. These plain, practical addresses to believers ought to prove a "help on the way" in the experience of many.

FRAGMENTS GATHERED. By S. ASHBY. (S. W. Partridge & Co.) A small volume calculated to instruct, comfort, and encourage. The fragments are gathered from the Word of God, explained in simple language, and intended to assist those who have but little time to search the Scriptures for themselves.

EVENING CALM is a pamphlet by Mr. J. M. WEYLLAND (Partridge, 5s. per 100), containing extracts from the letters of retired city missionaries and giving account of the money paid to pensioners of the Mission—men who have laboured long and well deserve the rest from toil this pamphlet speaks of.

CHRIST THE FIRST AND THE LAST. By the late T. HARFORD BATTERSBY, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. These sermons, selected from those preached during the last ten years of his ministry, form a fitting memorial of the beloved and lamented author, whose name and influence will long be held in loving memory by multitudes of Christians in all parts of the land. They are rich in unction, and refresh the soul of the reader by their full and gracious expositions of Gospel truth. Our readers will not be disappointed if they obtain a copy with the view of deriving from it special spiritual profit and blessing. The sermons are worthy of a place in every Christian home.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN SWITZERLAND. By JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER. 4s. 6d. Dyer Bros. THE SALVATION WAR, 1883. 8, Paternoster-square. Those who observe and follow the movements of the Salvation Army will find in these volumes much welcome information with respect to its present position and progress. Mrs. Butler's full, graphic, and deeply engrossing narrative of recent Army experiences in the Swiss Republic is of course written from the point of view of an ardent sympathiser; nevertheless, many who do not feel able to endorse all the Army tactics and teachings, will read it with undoubted practical interest. It ably records an important chapter in the modern history of the struggle for religious freedom. "The Salvation War" is the official yearly bulletin of the evangelistic operations of the Army, and also furnishes the annual financial statement. Emanating from headquarters, the report has perhaps more of the couleur de rose about it than if it were written by an unbiassed independent observer.

SOME JANUARY MAGAZINES.

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.'s budget of monthlies is a pretty complete library in itself. Taking first those that are of a strictly religious stamp, we have Part 46 of Bishop Ellicott's New Testament Commentary (7d.), which brings us up to Peter's First Epistle. The exposition of James v. 13—15 will probably not meet the views of modern believers in "faith healing," but as a whole the copious notes in this Commentary seem to us to be marked by wisdom as well as extensive critical knowledge. Archdeacon Farrar's illustrated Life and Work of St. Paul (7d.) draws near its close; the current part deals with "the Epistles of the captivity." In Doré's Illustrated Bible (part 45, 7d.), we notice in the engraving representing the return of the prodigal son a striking divergence from the text; instead of the father running to meet the returning wanderer "when he was yet a great way off," he sits in the midst of a group of attendants and appears to be in a fainting condition. Roberts' Holy Land (1s.) has a special interest for such as love to dwell in fancy on sacred scenes. Dr. Wylie's History of Protestantism, which is again being re issued, ought to serve as an antidote to modern hankerings after the beggarly elements of Romish superstition. The Magazine of Art (1s.) is usually a marvel of beauty and a storehouse of information on matters artistic. Among the other periodical issues from the house of Cassell & Co., each having a definite and special value, are the Concise Cyclopædia; World of Wonders; Old and New London; Greater London; Peoples of the World; Popular Educator, &c. &c.

OPEN DOORS is a new monthly magazine conducted by Mrs. Meredith (Elliot Stock, 2d.), in which is incorporated her "Record of Christian Labour." It is intended to advocate the claims and report the work of the Nine Elms Mission and its branches. THE CHURCH MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCER (Salisbury-square, E.C., 6d.) has a lengthy and suggestive article on "Education as a Mission Agency." Some of the points touched on deserve careful consideration. THE INDIAN FEMALE EVANGELIST (Nisbet & Co., 3d.) is full of interesting articles on Zenana work in India, and of the self-denying labours of Christian women who are seeking the salvation of their sisters in that empire. OUR OWN MAGAZINE, the monthly organ of the Children's Special Service Mission (48, Paternoster-row, E.C.), has entered upon the new year with a variety of good articles for the young. Mr. Bishop is anxious to issue 100,000 copies monthly this year and asks the co-operation of all interested in the Lord's work among the young.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR twelve days' evangelistic services at Brayford, Stoke Rivers, and Bratton Fleming, in North Devon, by Mr. G. Parker and Rev. A. Sprague, commencing Jan. 6.——For special services during this week by Rev. W. J. Millar, on the South Side, Glasgow.——For special services for children at Congregational Church, Stonehouse, near Stroud, Jan. 12 to 18, by Mr. Opie Rodway and Rev. Alfred Jones.——For blessing on a Mission at Newton Stewart, N.B., from Jan. 6 to 25, by F. E. Marsh.——For services to be held by Messrs. Mateer and Parker, from Jan. 14 to 27, at Stratford-on-Avon.——For Mission to Young Women on the third and fourth weeks of January, by Miss Fergusson Abbott, at Birkenhead.

Mission Appeals.

MARINERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—Mr. FRANCIS SHELTON, 19, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, would be thankful for help for the work of this Society. There is much need, both in connection with the Mission and among the poor. The Society is doing a good work, and is worthy of support.

HADDON HALL AND GREEN WALK, BERMONDSEY.—Mr. W. OLNEY, jun., has succeeded in building a commodious and useful hall, &c., for Mission work carried on in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle, for which he still requires about £1300. Mr. C. H. Spurgeon writes a special appeal on behalf of this. Contributions may be sent to Mr. T. H. OLNEY, 9, Falcon-street, E.C.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.—This northern place of entertainment, we are informed, was in danger of falling into the hands of infidels for Sunday concerts, when Mr. W. Catlin came to the rescue. He undertook to pay £10 fortnightly, in advance, for rent, and hold Gospel services on the Lord's Day. There have been remarkable cases of blessing. Mr. Catlin's funds are exhausted, and if friends do not render speedy help, the services will have to be relinquished. Mr. Catlin's address is 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Jan. 13, Dan. ii. 14—23; Jan. 14, Dan. ii. 24—36; Jan. 15, Dan. ii. 37—49; Jan. 16, Dan. iii. 1—12; Jan. 17, Dan. 13—21; Jan. 18, Dan. iii. 22—30; Jan. 19, Dan. iv. 1—17.

MR. W. FORBES has lately been giving addresses on Gospel Temperance in Brooklyn and New York. He expects to return to England about the middle of this month. Communications should now be sent to 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, N.

AN EAST-END CHURCH.—The report issued by Rev. A. J. Robinson, of St. Mary's, Whitechapel, gives a full description of the numerous agencies at work for the spiritual and moral improvement of the people. There seems to be nothing overlooked by Mr. Robinson and his large staff of coworkers. There are Y.M.C.A., schools, Temperance societies, classes, and a Jewish Mission, hard at work. The report may be had at the School Press, Gower's-walk, Whitechapel, E.

OPEN AIR MISSION.—The annual prayer-meeting of this Mission was held at Exeter Hall on the 3rd inst. About a hundred members were present. Mr. G. Kirkham, Secretary, stated that so far as the report of the past year's work had been received there was much to encourage the workers: year by year the work increases both in the opening of fresh doors for the preaching of the Gospel and in results. Much more could be done if more workers and more helpers were forthcoming. Rev. Dr. Gritton presided, and spoke a few kindly words of encouragement. Colonel Puget gave a brief but suggestive address on the lessons to be drawn from the cloud, trumpet, and prayer in connection with the church in the Wilderness.

Home for Aged Christian Blind Women,

90, JUNCTION ROAD, LONDON, N.

DEAR FRIENDS,

Having acquired a freehold property for £1,250, £500 more is urgently needed at once, for the enlargement and alterations of the house. The Committee have resolved not to proceed with enlargement until two-thirds is raised. The present number of immates is 24, the last admitted being in her 89th year.

If 1,000 Christian Readers will only send 10s. each the necessity is met, and 30 of Christ's aged and afflicted blind children will find a comfortable home until their Saviour call, "Come up hither"

Contributions received by Rev. J. R. WOOD, Honorary Secretary, 56, St. John's Park, N.; HENRY and ANN BRIGHT, Hon. Superintendents, 1, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway, N.; and by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

REPORTS SENT ON APPLICATION.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

President—THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

This Society was established in 1862, to supply Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Artificial Limbs, &c., and every other description of mechanical support to the poor, without limit as to locality or disease.

53,320 Appliances have already been given.

Contributions are earnestly solicited. Bankers—Messrs. BARCLAY & Co., Lombard Street.

ROBIN DINNERS
IN THE
DUBLIN RAGGED SCHOOLS.

Not only at Christmas, but every day, the poor little children in the Ragged Schools need to be fed.

More than a thousand every day get a warm meal.

"And shall we not to-night,
Amid warmth and light,
Not think on the poor ones He bids us feed?
When the starving children the Saviour sees,
'Ye are caring for Me when ye care for these,'
He says; and looks, in His wondrous pity,
On the hungry babes in the sinful city."

Contributions will, at any time, be received by Mrs. ELLEN SMYLY, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D. L. Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."
The Methodist.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

Patron—THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

This Society is employing a large number of godly and earnest men as Scripture Readers, who labour among the poor, under the superintendence of the parochial Clergy, and carry from house to house the Word of God.

The Committee earnestly appeal for £1500 in Donations and New Annual Subscriptions before March 31, to reinstate the small Reserve Fund without which this most necessary, religious, and social work among the masses must be seriously curtailed.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

AND ALL

OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

Containing ONE HUNDRED and THIRTY-THREE SELECTED CASES. May be had from ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER-ROW, E.C., or from Mr. Congreve (the Author), COOMBE LODGE, PECKHAM, S.E.

EIGHTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS with ULCERATED THROAT.

Mr. CHARLES POCOCK, of 3, DUKE-STREET, BATH, commenced my treatment in June last.

For six years he had suffered from chronic bronchitis, and for twelve months with the throat. In such a case there are special instructions required, which I sent by letter.

I received a letter from him dated September 10, in which he says, "I had suffered from chronic bronchitis for six years, and with ulcerated throat for twelve months, with most distressing cough, shortness of breath, peculiar expectoration, and loss of flesh. I had surgical advice, with no good result. I was persuaded to use your valuable Balsam, and found relief in a few days. I used the liniment you prescribed for me for six weeks. I am thankful to God, and shall confidently recommend your treatment to fellow-sufferers."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Treats some of the more striking episodes in Bunyan's Allegory in good and scholarly Spenserian metre," &c.—Graphic.

"The volume merits attentive perusal, and that and careful comparison will show that in pouring from an older to a modern vessel the essence is retained. The work is a fine specimen of typography by Mr. Bellows, of Gloucester, and is most handsomely got up in antique print and style," &c.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Even those who are most familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress, and who are most critical in their examination of such a work as that before us, will give Mr. Rutter's volume a warm welcome.

"Its pages have a sustained elevation throughout, and the various scenes have a distinct literary merit apart from the interest of the subject," &c.—Western Daily Press.

"'The Land of Beulah,' and 'The Description of the Celestial City,' are both very grand, and worthy of special notice," &c.—British Friend.

DUBLIN MISSION HOMES & RAGGED SCHOOLS.

The friends of the DUBLIN MISSION are reminded that the time has come for closing the accounts, and that a good deal is still needed to meet the last Quarter's bills, and they are earnestly asked to remit their usual Subscriptions, or to send any help they can, to who will gratefully receive, and acknowledge their contributions.

MRS. SMYLY,

35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin,

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. THE PROVINCES.

The Committee have arranged, by God's help, to carry the GLAD TIDINGS OF SALVATION to all the Fallen Women in the Provinces this year, particularly GARRISON AND SEAPORT TOWNS, and the large CENTRES OF MANUFACTURE.

There are still MANY TOWNS in which there is scarcely any Missionary effort made on behalf of the Fallen.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing towards the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with Mr. J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

G. WILSON McCREE,

Office—8A, Red Lion Square, London, W.C. Financial Secretary.

Office—29, Ely-place, London, E.C.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

PROTESTANT BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.

The attention of the benevolent public is respectfully invited to the claims of this Society, which may be briefly summarised as follows:—

The Society was founded in 1863 for the purpose of assisting the Blind poor of Great Britain and Ireland, by life pensions paid monthly at their own homes, through the agency of voluntary visitors.

This system of distribution, besides being the most economical to the Charity, is one that gives the greatest relief and gratification to the beneficiaries.

The Society has now upon its register 425 pensioners in receipt of allowances ranging from 10s. to 25s each per month, and upon approved list of 180 candidates seeking election.

In the selection of candidates no religious test is demanded, it being only required that they are in need of assistance, and their moral character is satisfactorily attested by responsible persons.

The only expenses of management are a nominal salary to the Secretary, a donation given to another charity for the occasional use of its board room, and the unavoidable cost of printing and postage. Hence nearly the whole of the moneys received go direct to the objects for which they are given.

Having barely sufficient funds invested to provide for one year's pensions, the Committee are compelled to rely from year to year upon the generous contributions of friends, and they appeal with all earnestness to those able to give for a share of their Christmas contributions.

Treasurer, N. J. POWELL, Esq., Devonshire House, Shortlands, Kent; Hon. Secretaries, Messrs. THOS. POCOCK and A. S. DODSON; Secretary, W. E. TYRRY; Office, 235, Southwark-bridge-road, London, S.E.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D. L. Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration." The Methodist.

SOUL-WINNING:

QUALIFICATIONS FOR IT.

AN ADDRESS BY MAJOR WHITTLE.

"Any one who reads the New Testament, especially the Acts of the Apostles, must see that the great reason for the Church existing on the earth is—to win souls. When Churches get to the point that they are not winning souls—when souls are not being born again—they get to the point mentioned in the third chapter of Revelation, 'I will spue thee out of my mouth.'"—EXTRACT.

The Life of GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

By J. R. ANDREWS,

Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell to the Death of Charles I."

In cloth (with Portrait), 1s.

Superior Edition in large type, for Presentation, cloth, bevelled boards (with Portrait), price 5s.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."—Methodist Recorder.

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM.

MAGNETISM is one of Nature's most energising and tonic restoratives, which strengthens the vital force of every organ, inducing buoyant and healthy action; and we contend that the sustaining influence of Odic force upon the nervous system, although imperceptible, is, nevertheless, as much a matter of fact as the assimilation of food is to the physical economy. If it be supposed that Odo-Magnetic treatment is in any sense a stimulating or artificial process, we have only to reply that, according to our present knowledge, it is impossible to make use of a more natural means of recuperation. If, after the crops have failed from drought, we avert fruitless harvests by irrigation, is that unnatural? If, when it is almost impossible for a delicate patient to encounter our London fogs, he decides to rusticate in a more southern clime during winter, does he adopt an unnatural course; or in any sense stimulate his vital force unduly? By employing Odo-Magnetic influence externally, we do not go out of our way to obtain anything, or set aside the ordinary course of daily life to seek health, for although complete rest and a bracing atmosphere may doubtless do much towards effecting a restoration, yet, in an enfeebled condition of body, there is a necessity for the employment of some more energetic and radical, but not less natural, means of invigoration—namely, to surround the patient with the Magnetic or Electric atmosphere in such a gentle form that it shall be appropriated by the system with the same freedom as pure air, and produce that functional action of the organism, which is absolutely necessary in order to restore perfect health. Such an ally, with the recuperative force, we have in the magnetic aura or atmosphere evolved by our Odo-Magnetic garments.

From Miss A. WAINMAN, 105, Anne Street, Burnley.

"January 3, 1884.

"When I applied to you for your advice, I did so feeling that it was my last hope; I was really tired of my life, and I think had I not been helped by your remedy, I must have given up all expectation of ever finding relief. As I told you when I first wrote, I was without animation—almost like a stone, devoid of feeling. Medical treatment and nursing had no beneficial effect, and though my friends assured me that nature would have its way and work a cure in time, I felt it hopeless to anticipate this any longer, and I told them it was something to give me life I wanted. Medicine I took madly to obtain relief. When I adopted your advice, all medicine was dispensed with, and I placed myself entirely in your hands. I am thankful now to say that I feel as well as ever I did in my life, and am enabled to attend work again, which I never thought I should do. I feel that I have had a wonderful escape of death, which I owe, through God, to you: may He ever bless you and your work. I have known many who have tried your treatment, and have found it effectual, and I have myself advised others to adopt your treatment."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

IT has surely been of the Lord that the Evangelical Alliance has given permanence to the invitation issued by the Missionaries in Lodiana, in the fall of 1859, to set apart the first week of the ensuing year for united and universal prayer. For twenty-five years this happy suggestion has been carried out, and annually with growing success and widening area of influence. It may now be said that all the ends of the earth are bound together by its means in one golden chain of loving sympathy and prayerful devotion around the throne of the heavenly grace. This year we are glad to know the arrangements of the Alliance have been taken up with even greater ardour and on a wider scale than before. The meetings in the various parts of London have been largely attended, richly enjoyed, and eminently calculated to produce abiding and gracious results. Both at Steinway Hall and at the Centenary Hall a spirit of fervour, unity, and devotedness has prevailed, full of promise as to blessing which shall follow.

The subjects which have been prominently before the minds of the suppliants at the various meetings have been practical, varied, and of pre-eminent importance to the Church and the world. It was fitting that praise and thanksgiving should lend their influence to the first day's proceedings. Amid all the dark and troublous aspects of affairs which may be beheld, there is abundant cause for grateful acknowledgment of Divine favour and longsuffering shown to the sons of men. We are living in times of wondrous manifestations of the Holy Spirit's power in the conversion of souls, and the spread of light and truth in all parts of the earth. The grace of God shines all the brighter to the earnest and believing mind through the gloom and darkness which on all hands are ensbrouding the nations. Confession of sin has appropriately been called for, and prayer for renewal in faith, consecration, and zeal earnestly presented. Alas! how sadly has the Church failed to present before the world the spectacle of a united, consistent, and Christ-like body of converts to truth and righteousness. Divisions, departures from the faith, coldness of heart, and selfish indifference to the woes and wrongs of others, have but too deeply marked its course and hindered its testimony. Our own nation, too, how signally favoured of God, yet how fearfully full of impurity, covetousness, and forgetfulness of its obligations to Him who has been its benefactor and guardian through centuries of progress and enlightenment. Surely we may hope that so widespread a humiliation and confession as has been called forth in the week just passed will lead to much quickened perception of duty and return unto the Lord.

The families of God's people, the youth of our schools and colleges, together with their parents, instructors, and guides, have been brought afresh and with deep concern before God. Are we not bound to be on our watch-towers, looking out for many an answer to supplications, long delayed, but sure to follow in due season if only we are steadfast in our faith and hope in God? The Church, too, with all its deep need of revival, its manifold corruptions, and strangely cherished rivalries and sectarian distinctions, surely this year we shall see a growing spirit of oneness, and of purity on the part of its members. Missions at home and abroad have been spread out before the God of the whole earth, and evils long standing in the way of the advance of truth have been mourned over and Divine power invoked to break them down and triumph over their hitherto impassable barriers. All nations have thus been brought into the light of his countenance whose eyes are in every place beholding the evil and the good.

It now remains for those who have thus gone boldly and unitedly before the Throne of Grace, to follow out the dictates of faith, the impulses of that Divine Spirit by whom their prayers have been prompted, and the aspirations which they have cherished. For all who have waited thus upon God, beyond a doubt blessings large and free are in store, and in proportion to their faith shall it be seen that a week of prayer is succeeded by a year of abundant cause for heartfelt praise.

SAINTS AND SAINTHOOD.

NO term employed in Scripture to denote the true people of God, is more familiar to the Bible student than that of saints. It occurs nearly one hundred times in its substantive form, and most frequently in the New Testament, all the Churches being addressed as composed of those to whom the title belongs. Yet no designation has fallen into such disuse or become less popular than this, scriptural and expressive as it is. The Church, except in rare instances, fails to claim or employ it, unless as applied to "the spirits of the just made perfect," or contained in formal and timeworn creeds; while the world for the most part uses it as expressive of derision and reproach.

A correspondent, referring to the clause in the so-called Apostle's Creed, "I believe in the communion of saints," asks us where they are to be found, and says he knows no community of people willing to so speak of themselves; all of every section whom he has spoken to on the subject disown the title as suited to their state. It is by no means an unimportant question to raise, why a title so glorious, significant, and Biblical, should be in these days so widely ignored?

What does it denote? In the Hebrew the word most often used (qadosh) signifies one set apart, separate, holy. The other word employed (chasid) means kind, pious. In the Greek the word (hagios) again means holy, either as separate and set apart, or in actual character. There is assuredly in these meanings of the words nothing to make a believer on the Lord Jesus Christ hesitate to accept the title, and wear it as his chief adornment and honour. "Know ye that the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for Himself." Although in reference to the most ungodly and evil among men, it may be said of believers, "Such were some of you," yet with no less confidence may it be added, "But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the Name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God."

Practically also the word is true of all who are really indwelt by the Spirit of Christ, and actuated by faith in Him. "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil, whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." There can be no true justification where there is not a consequent sanctification. Every one born of the Spirit is therefore a saint both as accepted and sealed of God, and as living a life of conformity to his will in proportion to the light received and grace bestowed. There is nothing implied in the Word which ought to be regarded as special or beyond the attainments of each and all of those who are Christ's.

The hesitation to adopt the term which so many show is attributable to various causes. By some it is misunderstood. They regard it as indicative of absolute perfection, applicable only to such as are sinless. They say: "We are sinners as yet; traces of the old nature remain with us; our hearts wander from God, and are often cold and dull; we come short continually of what a saint should be." To some extent this is true of the best among the people of God on earth, but it is no reason for disowning the name of saint. The same was true of the Christians of Apostolic times, and must be of all so long as we are in the flesh. Conflict and temptation, infirmity and defect, are inseparable from mortal life. But here the preciousness of Christ to the believer is seen: covered by his grace and righteousness, cleansed by his blood, justified through faith in Him, we are accepted before God, and realise with humble, thankful joy the truth that "by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." In the confidence of holy faith the soul can sing:—

> "O Love, thou bottomless abyss,
> My sins are swallowed up in thee!
> Covered is my unrighteousness,
> Nor spot of guilt remains on me,
> While Jesu's blood, through earth and skies,
> Mercy, free, boundless mercy, cries!"

Yet is there no licence for sin, no making provision for the flesh, for in proportion as faith realises the grace of God in the propitiatory work of Christ sin becomes hateful, and the believer looks upon it with abhorrence and resentment. Others disown the title because they are conscious that although they profess to be Christians they are not really consecrated to Christ. There is an alarming amount of half-hearted profession in these days; multitudes delude themselves with a form of godliness while they deny its power. Church and chapel going, sectarian zeal and party spirit, are made to take the place of true Christian living, and earnest, prayerful devotion to God. In all such cases the idea of saint-hood is, of course, at war with the whole tenor of the life, and its adoption out of the question. Probably to this more than anything else is it owing that the speaking of Christians as saints has so fallen into disuse. In proportion as the standard set up by the great Teacher has been lowered, and the leaven of corruption has been mixed with the meal of righteousness and truth, the glory of saintliness has been dimmed, and its very name deprecated.

In others lack of holy boldness to enter into the holiest, and to lay claim by faith to the full privileges of a child of God, may account for hesitancy to accept the name. But whatever reason may be assigned for its discontinuance, there are far stronger reasons why it should be employed as it was in the Early Church, and as it is in the inspired Word as characterising all true followers of our Lord. If they are not saints they ought to be, and one advantage of a frequent use of the word would be that it would serve to keep before us the fact that we are called to be saints, and that only as we are so is the great end of our calling of God answered. Were it more commonly applicable to the various communities of believers, hasty profession, insincere avowals of faith, and inconsistent claims to be regarded as Christ's, would be less likely to be made. Separation from the world would be seen to be binding on all who bore the name, and the distinction between the Church and the world would become more apparent.

Notes and Comments.

THE following extract from the preface to a recently published edition of a book written by M. Hegard, Professor of Philosophy, of Copenhagen, and regarded aforetime as a sceptic, is worthy of careful attention. It is another testimony to the worthlessness of all confidences in anything less than the Word of God. The Professor says:—

"The experiences and sufferings of my life have shattered the foundation on which I formerly thought to build. Filled with a sincere faith in the excellence of science, I believed I had found in it a sure refuge for all eventualities. This illusion has vanished. When the tempest came, and my heart was plunged in sorrow, the cables of science snapped like threads. Then I seized upon the succour which many others had laid hold of before me: I sought and found peace in the faith of God. Since then, while I have not abandoned science, I have assigned it a different place in my life."

The Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society have signalised the commencement of the new year by reducing considerably the prices of the Scriptures in the English and Welsh languages. Remembering that for some time a Bible has been obtainable for sixpence, it is a problem difficult to solve how it is possible to further reduce the cost of their publications without serious loss to the funds. But the Word of God cannot be made too accessible to the poor of our land, and doubtless this new effort on the part of the Society to bring it within the reach of the very poorest, and to make it easily procurable by old and young in any type, will lead sympathisers with its noble work to increase their liberality in its aid.

Mrs. M. S. Osborne forwards us a copy of her cheering and deeply-interesting little book, "Under Canvas; or, Another Year of Work among our Soldiers at the Cape." As a record of Christian work in a sphere of special importance and interest, it is worthy of wide attention and concern. Its testimonies to the gracious power of God, in connection with the work done at the Home in Cape Town, and in the encampment at Wynberg, are touching, and help to quicken faith in God as sure to bless earnest effort for his glory. Larger accommodation for the Mission is urgently required, and we trust means for providing it will soon be forthcoming. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Osborne, 12, Camden Hill-road, Gipsy Hill, S.E.

Among the "centres of spiritual activity" recently reviewed in the Pall Mall Gazette the Synagogue of the Jews has just been described by the Rev. Dr. Adler. Its claim to be regarded as a practical and busy section of the religious community is fully confirmed by the Doctor's statement of its actual work and influence. Twice daily, not only in the principal places of worship, but in the numerous small ones to be found in the narrow and crowded streets and lanes of Whitechapel and Spitalfields, service is held early in the morning, and at a late hour in the evening, so that the working-man may be able to seek divine blessing on the labour of his hands. Mission work in the sense of aggressive propagandism, we are told, is earnestly deprecated, but vigorous measures are employed to preserve members of the Jewish faith from apostacy and infidelity. It is still true concerning the seed of Israel, that "they have a zeal of God, though not according to knowledge."

In the matter of education our Jewish neighbours claim to be specially alive, and eminently successful in their operations. The largest school in the kingdom—probably in the world—is their Free School in Bell-lane, Spitalfields, where 2800 children form the average daily attendance. Dr. Adler quotes, with a degree of pardonable pride, Mr. Mundella's remark in the House of Commons, concerning the private aid afforded to this school, and the supervision exercised over it, viz., that "in this respect the Jews were very much better than the Christians: the West-end Jews did their duty to the children at the East-end." Besides this vast Institution many similar though smaller schools are established in various parts of the metropolis. At Lower Norwood 230 Jewish children are fed, clothed, and taught in the Orphan Asylum there, and a Home for the Deaf and Dumb is sustained at Notting-hill. There is also a Board of Guardians for the Jewish poor, which aims at charitable relief, and expends a large sum in assisting emigration and encouraging industry. Altogether, the two great ends of Jewish religious teaching, which Dr. Adler says are the knowledge of the law and the dealing of loving kindness, seem to be practically and zealously pursued.

The exclusiveness of the Jews is proverbial, but it appears that their resolve in reference to the appropriation of the Montefiore Commemoration Fund, which is now being raised among them, is to set up an unsectarian memorial of their devoted champion and advocate. It is proposed to devote it to the establishment and endowment of a Convalescent Home at Ramsgate to be open to all creeds.

Another "centre of spiritual activity" described in the columns of this enterprising journal is the Wesleyan Methodist church, Barry-road, East Dulwich, the writer being the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. In his lively and interesting sketch, Mr. Hughes very modestly refrains from hinting at the powerful influence he himself wielded as pastor of this young and energetic community, in bringing about the state of things he describes. After recounting the various organisations at work at Barry-road, he says:—

"The supreme solicitude of Barry-road, however, is that the joys of Christianity may be brought home to every human heart. They systematically support every phase of home and foreign Missions. Their children, too, are trained to this. Last year the girls and boys raised £70 in halfpence to send the Gospel to the heathen. The little girls sustain a 'Busy Bee' for Zenana work in India. It is estimated that this church, which does not contain one rich man, has already contributed £6000 to the work of God at home and abroad, in addition to the £8500 which it has raised towards the cost of its building. All this is the work of nine years. How can so rapid a growth be explained? First and chiefly by the fact that the Christianity of this church has been from the first of an enthusiastic and aggressive type. Its evangelistic efforts culminated four years ago in an 'eight days' mission' on a large and elaborate scale. Literally every house in the neighbourhood was visited, and in the course of the mission several hundreds of persons, in all walks of life, were brought to Christian decision and to the joyous knowledge of Divine forgiveness. That mission filled the church, and it has continued full ever since."

In consequence of a serious affection of the throat, the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was unable to conduct the Mission services at Great Queen-street Chapel, W.C., announced in our last, and which are now in progress. We are glad to hear, however, that Mr. Hughes is recovering. His place is filled by Rev. Edward Smith, of Manchester.

The death of Mr. Augustus Benham, of Chandos-street, and Bromley, Kent, removes a good and useful man from the field of Christian service. He was for twenty-seven years an hon. secretary of the Sunday-school Union, in connection with which he worked most energetically for the promotion of religious education. Indeed, Mr. Benham was well known in most circles of philanthropic and religious endeavour. He was only in the fifty-eighth year of his age. Such men leave behind them a blessed memory, and are sorely missed and wanted by those who have been their fellow-workers.

From Calcutta we learn of the death of Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, the leader of the well-known sect called the Brahmo Somaj, or Theistic Church of India. Many in this country will remember his visit to England in 1870, when he addressed many audiences in London and the provinces. He was a remarkable man, and had his mind and heart been opened to the reception of the pure and simple verities of the Gospel of Christ his influence in India would have been a vast power for good in the interests of truth. As it was he promoted many social reforms of a desirable character, and did much to loosen the bonds of Brahminical creeds, but his religious beliefs and efforts tended rather to mystify and darken the truth than promote its highest interests.

Much care is required in investigating the facts of the case in reference to the London poor. The facts are bad enough in all conscience; they need no exaggeration, and it would be a pity any repression of zeal should arise from mistaken action on the part of any interested in dealing with them. The statement made in The Times of the 3rd inst., relative to parts of Southwark, as seen by a Brompton deputation, for instance, was as follows:—

"All these places are under the shadow of the parish church, within a circle of a hundred yards of it, and yet all the people met declared that no ministers of religion called upon them, except the priest upon the Roman Catholics, that they shared no benevolence, that the only signs of a religious life brought to any was an occasional tract thrown in at the doors, and that they were utterly forgotten by God and man—except by the rent collector and School Board visitors."

The parish referred to is that of the Rev. Burman Cassin, M.A., whose evangelical spirit and labours cannot be too highly spoken of. Writing to The Times concerning the above quotation, Mr. Cassin observes:—

"In fairness to the band of devoted workers there and myself I indignantly deny that the poor are unvisited and unhelped. For the last six years no part of my large parish has been so thoroughly worked, and no really deserving case has been passed over. That alluded to, and severely commented on, is well known to me, and at a proper time and place I can satisfy any candid mind upon it."

Dr. Andrew Mearns, of the Congregational Union, also writes as to the same district:—

"There are five missionaries connected with the London City Mission labouring in the neighbourhood. I have met with none more faithfully doing their work or better known or trusted by the people. All the places mentioned in the article are regularly visited by one or other of these missionaries and by other Christian workers as well, for house-to-house visitation is a branch of work carried on in connection with every place of worship in the neighbourhood and with every Sunday-school. A great deal of Christian and Temperance work is carried on at the 'Fawn-house,' and their agents go into the neighbourhood and do work from house to house and room to room as well."

That West-end churches should lend a helping hand to those who labour for the poor and destitute masses in the East and South is so desirable and praiseworthy a step, that we trust organised inquiry and aid will be arranged so as to arrive at accurate knowledge of the need, and definite application of suitable means for relief. Clearly it will not do to trust to the independent testimony of those needing help.

One of the good results of the attention called to "Outcast and Horrible London" will be to strengthen the hands of the London City Mission, which has done far more than many are aware to improve the condition of London during the past thirty years. To London flow streams of poverty and of vice from all parts of the land; therefore, the provinces may fairly be looked to for help in the maintenance of Christian agencies in the metropolis.

Bournemouth has set a good example in the recognition of this. A drawing-room meeting, attended by a large number of influential ladies and gentlemen, has recently been held, at the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Futvoye at their residence, Merrow, Wimborne-road, the main object being to provide two additional missionaries for the East of London. Towards the cost—£160 a year—£140 has been promised, a good portion of which is to be continued annually. If any of our readers wish to share in this good work, they are invited to communicate with the above-named gentleman.

Major and Mrs. Evered Poole are conducting Missions as follow: Bath, January 18, 19; London, 21; Taunton, 22; Teignmouth, 24; Torquay, 24; and Plymouth, 25. Prayer is desired on their behalf for all these places.

The contemplated union of the various Methodist sections in Canada is an event we in this country cannot but regard with satisfaction, and many, we should think, with a feeling akin to envy and longing desire for similar fusion into one of the several branches of the Methodist family in the home-land. The churches in the far West now aiming at unity are the Methodist Church of Canada, the Methodist Episcopal, the Primitive Methodist, and the Bible Christian, their total membership amounting to 168,940. At a Conference held recently in Belleville, at which a majority of representatives of all these denominations were present, unification was resolved on, and June 1, 1884, the time appointed for the resolution to be put into practice. Every such amalgamation is to the glory of God and the advancement of truth.

A letter from Miss Hesba Stretton appeared in The Times of the 8th inst., in which the writer says: "Few people have any idea of the extent of active cruelty, and still more of cruel neglect, towards children among our degraded and criminal classes." The subject has been recently brought before the notice of the public by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts and Miss F. Devonport Hill, but as yet no organised effort to deal with it has been made. In Liverpool a "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children" has been started, and in one month eighty-six children have come under its protection. That there is much suffering and hardship entailed on the children of the vagrant and other destitute classes cannot be doubted, and a national society for their protection is an unquestionable necessity, and would soon command wide sympathy and support.

It may seem late in the day to ask, "What is the Gospel?" but we shall be obliged to any of our readers who will send us the briefest possible definition of what they understand as constituting the Gospel.

All who have read or heard of the missionary travels in Central Africa of the courageous devoted young worker, Mr. F. S. Arnot, of Glasgow, will be glad to have tidings of him; we have received the following note from his father, Mr. W. Arnot:—

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to many inquiries about the safety of my son, F. S. Arnot, who went out as a missionary to the Upper Zambesi—will you allow me to state that a letter has been received from Shoshong, addressed to the wife of a missionary presently in London, that Mr. and Mrs. Coillard and my son were expected there, from which it appears evident that the Shoshong friends know of his whereabouts."

One of the speakers at the Centenary Hall, last week, expressed regret that such opportunities as are afforded for united action by the Week of Prayer should not be more frequent than once a year. It would be well if organised union in prayerful co-operation could be made more general and constant, at any rate, throughout our own land. But it should be borne in mind that in London and many other large centres of population, as well as in smaller spheres, opportunities are provided for daily united prayer by our Y.M.C. Associations and other Christian institutions. These in many cases languish for want of wider sympathy and hearty support. It is not so much more meetings that are required as more readiness to forego prejudices, and to come with one accord and one mind "to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

It is highly important that Christian men, whether among employers or employed, landlords or tenants, should seriously consider their relation, as servants and disciples of Christ, to the social questions which are more and more importunately pressing to the front. It is impossible to avoid connection with them, and it is difficult to view them outside the region of party politics and selfish interests. The position taken by Christian men is of importance, not only to themselves as responsible to the Lord for even-handed justice, social righteousness, and holy principles of action, but as affecting others, and helping on the cause of truth, in opposition to error, spoliation, and sin. Never was the call for active endorsement and faithful practice of the teaching given by our Lord in his Sermon on the Mount more urgent than in these days.

Mr. S. Smith, M.P. for Liverpool, has been speaking at the Town Hall there on what he deserbed as two programmes at present before the country for the good of the poorer classes. One was that of thrift, temperance, prudence, industry, and the cultivation of the moral virtues springing out of Christianity; the other was robbery upon a gigantic scale. In reference to the latter, Mr. Smith said he thought it was time the people of this country should turn their minds to the consideration of those socialist and anti-Christian doctrines publicly preached, and receiving a kind of patronage from men who had little idea of the logical lengths to which they proceeded. Such doctrines could only lead to the destruction of liberty, and the denial of the sacredness of life and of the family relation. Such a word of warning and instruction is timely, and calls for general attention and thoughtful concern.

Quite informally and unexpectedly on Sunday night the Lord Mayor and his daughter, the Lady Mayoress, joined the evangelistic meeting at the Grand Theatre, Islington, conducted by the City branch of the Y.M.C.A.; and at the after meeting his lordship gave a simple and persuasive Gospel address, much appreciated by the audience. It is gratifying to find the Chief Magistrate of the City of London personally engaged in the work of the Gospel among the poorest of his fellow-citizens. The friends interested in these meetings would be glad to secure more male voices for the choir; the singing commences at 6.30 p.m.

Bishop Ryle last week convened a meeting of all the clergymen who have been ordained by him since his consecration to the See of Liverpool, the purpose of their assembling being edification, devotion, and social intercourse. Canon Girdlestone addressed those present on the "Work of the Ministry," and urged the importance of faithful adherence to the fundamental truths of the Gospel. Such action in reference to the younger men of the ministry is highly commendable, and forms an example which might be followed with advantage by the senior pastors of all the churches. Young ministers often find it hard now-a-days to hold their ground against the many difficulties and disputations which threaten their faith and steadfastness.

The meeting advertised a fortnight since in our columns in connection with the formation of the City of London Lay-preachers' Association was held at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on the 8th inst., at which about sixty were present, including Mr. R. Burn, on behalf of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. Gawin Kirkham, representing the Open-air Mission, Mr. J. Wood, of the Evangelisation Society, and Mr. Elvin, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Association, all of whom heartily confessed their interest in the new Society. A number of workers enrolled themselves as members, and it is proposed to hold another meeting shortly. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. S. Ireland. In another column it will be seen that the "Christian Instruction Society," of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, is prepared in the same way to supply preachers for any churches or halls needing them.

Speaking at the opening of a new public School in Glasgow last week. Mr. Mundella declared boldly in favour of a thoroughly sound religious education as opposed to a merely secular one. He said he rejoiced that the children would be taught that fear of God which is the beginning of wisdom, and which would raise up for Glasgow a liberty-loving, loyal, and God-fearing people. He also advocated an increased effort to give the children of the poor some refinement and taste, something to make life worth living, and expressed his hope that ere long we should have five millions of children within our schools in Great Britain all taught to sing from notes.

We are glad to observe that Dr. Barnardo is able to announce the re-opening of the new Edinboro' Castle for Monday, 28th inst., when the Earl Cairns is (D.V.) to take the chair. Our friend has had a hard struggle to complete this work, and we are sure he will have the sympathy of all our readers, and the presence of those who may be in London on the 28th.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

AGAIN and again comes back the question, Wherein lies the secret of these men's influence? Why do the people throng to their meetings, and why do they sit so spell-bound from first to last, whether to sing hymns, to join in prayer, or to listen to the preachers who sing or speak the Gospel? We reply, the twofold open secret is the Divine Spirit and human sympathy. These were the most prominent features in the Lord's life and ministry. Anointed with the Holy Ghost, He went about doing good. The Holy Spirit, who brooded upon the face of the deep, bringing order out of the chaos, who garnished the heavens and prepared the earth to be a dwelling-place for man, works through human sympathy. There is more meaning than we perceive in the frequent and hackneyed petition that "the Spirit may go from heart to heart, like oil from vessel to vessel." By a common attraction the publicans and sinners drew near to hear the Lord Jesus. The people thronged Him. The common people heard Him gladly. They hung upon Him for to hear Him. We see the Divine Spirit and human sympathy in equal measure in his taking up the little children in his arms and blessing them, in his tears at the grave of Lazarus, in his looking down upon Jerusalem and weeping over it. In each of the three recorded instances in which He raised the dead to life, the human sympathy is in perfect accord with the Divine power. He might have raised them without a word, but his human sympathy must also go forth in speech: "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise!" "Talitha cumi!" "Lazarus, come forth!" He was his personal friend, and He called him by his name.

In each of these cases, again, there is the outflow of human sympathy in that which follows the miracle. The young man was a widow's only son; therefore, Jesus delivered him to his mother. Jairus's little daughter required food, and lest, in their wonder and thankfulness, they should forget the child's need, He commanded that something should be given her to eat. When Lazarus was buried he had been bound hand and foot with grave clothes, and He bid them, "Loose him, and let him go."

The consciousness of the human sympathy of the Son of God underlies the narratives of each of the Evangelists. Thus Matthew tells us that when the men of Gennesaret had knowledge of Him, not only of the Divine power which rested on Him, but of Him himself, they brought all their diseased ones, and besought Him that they might only touch the hem of His garment; and as many as touched Him were made perfectly whole. That is where the power lies. We have in modern days learned the use of this word touch, and we say that a man has touch of the people, or that he has lost touch of them. And so says one of our poets, "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." It is this touch of men that more than anything else explains the "eager anxious throng" which crowds these nightly gatherings

And as a consequence of this, another characteristic of these meetings is their naturalness. There are preachers who address the intellect, others who appeal to the conscience, some play upon the emotions, others are nothing if not sensational. But just as the seven colours are blended together in colourless light, so here, appeals to heart and conscience, hope and fear, emotion and sensation, all harmonise, so that none of them is conspicuous, though all are there.

A remarkable and valuable opportunity is being afforded to ministers and evangelists of observing Mr. Moody's management of these vast crowds. Said a very able and many-sided man who was sitting one night upon the platform, "One could learn a score of important lessons by observing the superintendence of this meeting." In preaching, in dealing with individual souls, and in the arrangements as to externals, Mr. Moody has had, in the providence of God, a unique training, and a very varied and wide experience, from which other men may profit. In justice to themselves and to their people, those especially whose calling it is to preach the gospel and to win and shepherd souls, should not lose the opportunity of gathering up what may be learned from the few men in a generation who, like Whitefield or Wesley, Charles Finney or William Dawson, William Taylor or D. L. Moody, are raised up to do a great and special evangelistic work. They may be quite sure that those who enter heartily into it, and identify themselves with it, who are anxious to help anxious inquirers, and still more anxious for those who are not anxious for themselves, will reap the fruit and gather in the sheaves, while others are complaining that they have had no harvest, and that their best workers have been drawn away to other and more living ministries.

Then how much of the influence of these meetings is derived from the double gift of sacred poetry and song! Is there no lesson to be learned from this? How often an able minister has got half through his sermon before he and his hearers are at home with each other; whereas, in the half-hour or more spent in singing, now by Mr. Sankey alone, now with the choir, then by the whole congregation, the truths contained in the hymns have so influenced the minds of both preacher and hearers, that when Mr. Moody speaks they listen with their minds prepared and already occupied with thoughts and feelings in harmony with his expositions and exhortations.

We are more impressed than ever with the important and essential part which the Holy Spirit assigns to the service of song. "Preaching" is a much more comprehensive word than our technical use of it would lead us to suppose. It simply means to proclaim or declare the glad tidings; whether this be done by speaking to an individual, by addressing a congregation, or by uttering the good news in song. Our ordinary worship is far too stiff and formal: the charm of these meetings is that they are so unconstrained and unconventional.

Lavender-hill Hall, Clapham.

IT has often been to us, as to many more, a marvel that Mr. Moody is able, week after week, month after month, and year after year, to bear the constant bodily strain involved in his work, without even a temporary visitation from some of the many ills to which our flesh is heir. Our variable climate has now and again, though even in his case with rare frequency, interfered with Mr. Sankey's free use of his vocal powers. Never till last week, so far as our recollection goes, has Mr. Moody been absent from the services, in this country, on account of indisposition, for a single day.

It was, therefore, with a very unusual feeling of surprise and disappointment that we found the preaching Evangelist absent from his post on the afternoon of Wednesday last week. Happily, his ailment, though painful enough in itself, was not a very serious one. For some days a tooth abscess had been troubling him, though, probably, no one who listened to his discourses could have guessed it. Up till Wednesday he had endured the discomfort, but that day matters reached a crisis, and he was obliged to succumb. The offending tooth was extracted, and on Thursday afternoon Mr. Moody was once more in his accustomed chair by the organ, apparently none the worse. Such an event, though it may be unimportant in itself serves to remind us that Mr. Moody is mortal like other men; at the same time, it will intensify the feeling of gratitude to God, which must be in the minds of many, for having dowered the Evangelist with such a full measure of bodily health and strength, so that for many years there has been no break in his valued and valuable ministry.

Mr. Moody's absence notwithstanding, this was one of the best and most refreshing we have ever attended. Early in the proceedings Mr Sankey rose and said: No one more than those on the platform can feel greater disappointment at the fact that Mr. Moody has been taken away from us for a time. This week we say is the Week of Prayer, and it seems as though God had taken us at our word. So let us tarry awhile to praise and pray. It may be that the Lord Himself will speak some word to us instead of sending it through the lips of his absent servant. Mr Sankey then sang with great power "Only an Armour Bearer," the audience heartily joining in the chorus.

During the meeting much fervent prayer was made, not only for Mr. Moody, but for the progress of the work; many thanksgivings also went up for the tokens of rich blessing already observed in connection with the Clapham meetings. It has been noticed that the tide of spiritual blessing and of manifest result began in Lavender Hill Hall, almost from the very beginning and in unusual measure. It may not be easy always to gauge and estimate in their due proportions the human elements of success in such work. We know, however, for a fact, that there was much preparatory breaking up of the fallow ground in the Clapham and Battersea districts, by united prayer and active visitation. It is no interference with the doctrine of God's sovereignty, to believe that to these causes may be attributed in no small degree the seeming ease with which the people's hearts are reached.

One of the hymns sung by Mr. Sankey on this afternoon was that grand one:—

"Behold what love, what boundless love,
The Father hath bestowed
On sinners lost, that we should be,
Now called the sons of God."

Before singing it he said its theme—the wondrous love of God—carried his mind back across the sea to what took place in his own country some years ago. It was then that Mr. Moody learned more fully that blessed truth about God's marvellous love in the gift of his Son. Mr Sankey went on to tell, amid the hushed attention of the vast congregation, of Mr. Moody's first visit to this country, of his meeting with the late Mr. Henry Moorhouse, at Dublin, of Mr. Moorhouse's subsequent visit to the United States, of his preaching for Mr. Moody in Chicago, of the wonderful impression he made by delivering seven successive sermons on the one text, John iii. 16, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" of the remarkable way in which Mr Moody himself was affected by them, and of the revolution which a clearer view of this glorious truth worked in his mind, and his subsequent evangelistic methods. As Mr. Sankey proceeded with his interesting and touching recital, the whole company was deeply moved, and the effect was heightened as he said in conclusion: "I wanted to impress on you the truth that it is the story of Jesus' love that is going to wi human hearts. It was the only thing that reached me. People might preach to me about sin and the terrors of the law without my being much affected; it was the story of the love of God in Christ that broke my heart, and brought me to Him in the years long gone by." Need it be added that, with hearts thus softened and prepared, the congregation seemed to receive with a double appreciation Mr. Sankey's message in the song so grandly and sympathetically delivered.

After Mr. SKAITH, one of the ministers on the platform, had given a brief, earnest exhortation on the power of prayer, and the need of being filled with the Holy Ghost, another very interesting was given by Mr. M. H. HODDER. A few years ago, he said, I visited Baltimore for the purpose of attending a Y.M.C.A. Convention there. There were Christians assembled there from all parts of the United States and Canada, and several had gone from this country, a distance of 4000 miles, to be present. At the first meeting the question was: Who should be president at the Convention? It was expected that a friend from Canada would be chosen. At that time Mr. Moody had been conducting evangelistic services for eight months in various churches throughout the city; with one accord it was agreed to ask Mr. Moody to act as president. For many of you may remember that he first entered Christian service in connection with the Y.M.C. Associations of America. At an early meeting of this Convention it was suggested that on the last day of its sittings the delegates should take a little recreation, at the invitation of a friend in the city, and many were looking forward to it with a special interest. Mr. Moody, however, said that we could not spare the Saturday afternoon, and that we would devote the time to waiting upon God for power from on high. He wanted also, he said, to talk to us about the power of the Holy Ghost for service. So every mouth was closed and all agreed to look forward with special interest to this as the most precious season of the whole Convention. When the time came our friend gave us a wonderful address on the Power of the Holy Ghost, and the necessity of his presence in our hearts as workers for Christ. The delegates and others filled a large church—some 1500 to 2000 were present. At the close of the address, which was very intense and was heard with rapt attention, he said: Now we cannot do better than fall down on our knees and ask God the Holy Ghost to come and take full possession of us all here. As one man that mighty company went down on their knees before the Lord, and the Holy Ghost fell on multitudes in a most wonderful manner. After silent prayer a dear, warm-hearted German brother, Rev. F. von Schluembach, began to pray. He broke down and could proceed no further, while all over the large company there was an intense desire to receive such a blessing as had never been experienced before. Many testified afterwards that they had never before had such a blessing from God in all their lives.

We have been disappointed in some respects this afternoon, but why should we not, before we separate, seek that the Holy Ghost may come and take entire possession of each heart, turning out everything that hinders his in-dwelling power and presence.

Before the close of the meeting, Mr. Sankey referred briefly to his recent bereavement, in the loss of his father, and also to the death of his sister, nine years ago, and that of his brother last year. All these friends, he said, had left behind them a good testimony as to their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and therefore, while he sorrowed at their departure, he looked forward with joy to a reunion with them in the better world, where partings are unknown. He then called on any who wished to be prayed for to rise, and a considerable number did so. He offered earnest prayer on their behalf, and though the general meeting was dismissed, many remained to be personally conversed with.

An immense multitude came together in the evening, and to these Dr. McEwan, of Clapham, delivered an earnest evangelistic address. During the evening Mr. Sankey read a telegram from Mr. Moody, saying that the troublesome tooth was gone, and he hoped to be at the meetings next day. He requested that as his message to the meeting, Rom. x. 13 should be read: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." It is an interesting fact that during the after meeting a young man said to one of the workers that he had accepted Christ when this telegram was read; he had in his heart called on the name of the Lord, and he believed he was saved. Thus Mr. Moody's absence was, at the least, the instrument of blessing to one soul.

Being the week of united prayer, Mr. Moody's three afternoon Bible Lectures during the past week were on the subject of prayer. The address delivered on Thursday afternoon is given at length in another part of this issue; two subsequent addresses given on Friday afternoon and last Sunday morning, dealing with the same important question—Why our prayers are not answered—will be given in succeeding numbers.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND McGRANAHAN.

On Thursday last these friends closed for the present their evangelistic endeavours in Ireland. As we stated last week, their final services were held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, where God owned their labours.

They reached London on the evening of Friday, the following day, and last Lord's Day found them in harness again at Clapham. Major Whittle's voice was heard in prayer at the early meeting for workers; during the day Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan seconded Mr. Sankey in presenting the Gospel message to the people in song. In the evening the great tabernacle was quickly filled to overflowing. The surplus flocked into the new and spacious Wesleyan Chapel near by, till every rood and almost every inch of space—aisle, pulpit, stairs, and all—were crowded. Major Whittle assumed the charge of the meeting, and at an early stage called on his singing companions to give their song sermon from John iii. 16. With voices blended in thrilling and beautiful harmony, this sublime passage of scripture was wafted on the ears of the crowded congregation. The repetition, in swelling and triumphant strains, of the last phrase, "that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life," was singularly fine and impressive. The whole anthem is a splendid sermon, which, in its attractive musical form, will linger long in the minds and memories of those who hear it. Later on, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang the better known melody, "I shall be satisfied." The music of both these pieces is composed by Mr. McGranahan. It is a very rare thing to find the gifts of composition and execution combined in one man to the same degree as in Mr. McGranahan. He and his wife will prove a very notable acquisition to the evangelistic forces in our midst, in their special department.

We may truly say the same of Major Whittle. His discourse on Sunday evening on "Decision," was one of most incisive and heart-searching power. It was founded on the challenge of the prophet Elijah, "How long halt ye between two opinions?" A graphic recital was given of the scene on Carmel, the application being made at the various stages of the narrative, to those who are seeking satisfaction in sin or in worldly pursuits and pleasures. The appeal to young men and women to instant decision was terribly solemn, and appeared to create a very marked impression. Among several anecdotal illustrations was the following:—

A man in America came home one evening and found that his wife and child, with his sister-in-law, had been attending a religious meeting. His wife and her sister were Christians, but he was not. The meeting had been a very enjoyable one, and his little girl began to prattle to her father in her own way about it. He did not wish to hear about it, and so he stopped her. She looked up as if grieved; she could not understand it. In a little while she began to talk of it again. He stopped her again, and said: "Your mother, your aunt, and you can go your own way, and I will go my way." The little girl said, "Papa, which way are you going?" The man drew back from the table, as if startled by the question. The Spirit of God had been striving with him all through the time the special meetings had been going on. Bursting into tears, he said, "Wife, which way am I going? My child has asked a question that has come home to my heart. Pray for me." They knelt right there and prayed; the man sought and found the Lord.

At the close of the Major's address a meeting for young men was held, a large contingent of these coming in from the large hall, at the end of Mr. Moody's discourse. A perfect chorus of brief but emphatic testimonies came at the call of Major Whittle, who interspersed suitable words of exhortation and encouragement. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang with much pathos, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" after the Major had related a pathetic incident in connection with the singing of the hymn in America. Many young men stood up as desiring to be prayed for, and altogether an excellent start was made of the work among young men; it is intended to continue the meetings for them every evening during the week at nine o'clock, with Major Whittle in charge.

There was a second overflow meeting in the Baptist Chapel.

The meetings in the large tabernacle during the day were marked by the profoundest interest and encouragement. Large numbers flocked into the inquiry-room, morning, afternoon, and evening, and there can be no reasonable doubt that many decided to follow the Lord fully.

Kept by the Power of God.

"He constrained his disciples to get into the ship."—MARK vi. 45.

"Kept by the power of God."—1 PET. i. 5.

HAD it been but a quiet sea,
On which stars and moonbeams shone
Over the waters of Galilee,
The bark had sped swiftly on.
Constrained by the Master to launch on the lake,
Why suffered He tempests and clouds to break?

Had it been but a quiet sea!
Ah! so we shiver and fear;
But over the waters of Galilee
The Lord had never drawn near,
If waves that rippled and winds that sighed
Had wafted the boat to the other side.

He saw them from the hill,
No darkness hides from Him,
Toiling in rowing with steadfast will,
Tho' the hope, indeed, was dim.
O weary heart! 'tis a word for thee,
Christ watcheth the toiler on life's dark sea.

A quiet resting hour
As the old year dies away,
Fresh casting the soul upon Jesu's power
At the dawn of the New Year's Day.
And now He bids us go forth once more,
Breasting the waves to the other shore.

How shall we face the way?
How shall we brave the blast?
The hands that row are feebler to-day
Than they were in the journeys past.
But He only asketh the best we can do, [through.
And our prayer pierceth tempest and billows

Let Him not pass us by
As we strive the shore to win;
Let Him hear our cry as He draweth nigh,
Unasked He enters not in.
But his hand at the helm, whatever betide,
Ere we know, have we won to the other side.

Kept by the power of God,
Our sailing orders we read;
Tho' swelleth the tempest, tho' rageth the flood,
Our watchword in every need.
Our song of rejoicing, our glad shout of praise,
When the voyage is past and the perilous days.

[Thoughts from a New Year's Sermon, by the Rev. W. G. Burroughs, Mariners' Church, Kingstown.]

A LETTER TO A "FREETHINKER."

[We have received the following letters, which seem to us well worthy of publication. We certainly hope that the remarks of the first writer as to the methods adopted by Christians "in their attempts to convert Freethinkers," are of very limited application. We cordially agree with him in thinking that "the more excellent way" of winning unbelievers is to "lay siege to their hearts."]

DEAR SIR,—May I draw your attention to the accompanying letter, the production of a young lady not much over twenty? It is my misfortune to be what is called a "Freethinker." I usually keep this matter to myself, but a chance observation on the subject escaped me in a letter to Miss H——, and elicited the communication I now send you. I have read addresses to sceptics, almost to weariness, but nothing that has impressed me like Miss H——'s letter. Its great charm is its simple, unaffected style; while its close reasoning and vigorous grip of the subject, from the writer's point of view, bring out the Gospel with wonderful distinctness. In these days, when so many thinking men are driven in the direction of Freethought, I am glad to see any successful effort to combat it; although the torrent may be too strong for me, I am glad to see others escape it. . . .

I know it to be the fact that some Christians, in their attempts to "convert" Freethinkers, sometimes carry their strivings after effect beyond the bounds of decorum. They scoff and sneer as though they believe that they can force conviction into people as unruly or idle schoolboys are sometimes coerced into learning their lessons. The intention may be good, but the language often employed seems to me the reverse of Christian. I tell those who really desire the conversion of Freethinkers that they must first lay siege to their hearts. . . .

Very cordially yours,

DEAR MR.——,—I thank you for your letter, and the sympathy you express therein for our cousin's death. I do think sudden deaths are warnings; don't you? I am sorry that you say you find consolation in Philosophy. I think if I were dying and knew it, that if a philosophic treatise were handed to me for comfort, I am afraid it would prove anything but consoling.

A young girl, a friend of mine, about a fortnight or three weeks ago suddenly broke a blood-vessel, and was in a dying condition for some days. And yet, as she lay bleeding to death, she had perfect peace and joy—not in Philosophy, though, but in the fact that the Lord Jesus had forgiven all her sins. Now, I don't think it possible for a dying girl to be deluded. Mind, she was perfectly conscious and sane, and could assure and comfort those who were nursing her. Do you think Philosophy can comfort anyone dying? If it can, how is it that philosophers do not teach their doctrines gratis? It would be a real charity, for die we all must. Philosophy may do a great deal, but it leaves us at death's portal—there it stops.

You rather puzzle me when you say you can see no evidence of God's existence. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. i. 1). Is there not proof of the earth? Don't we live on it, eh? Did He not create the sun, moon, and stars? The Bible says He did; can't you see them? Again, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." Can you behold the heavens—say on a lovely moonlight night when the sky is spangled with stars—and philosophise their existence? They do exist, don't they? Science says, yes; but how came they there? I am not shocked at your views, but I am sorry; and if I could prove to you the reality of the Bible I should be only too happy to do so. I will try to undertake the task—that is if you really want me to.

First of all, in dealing with Christianity, this fact immediately presses upon our minds: if Christianity is a delusion, then in reality we are in the blackest darkness possible as to a future existence, for no reasonable being could believe in any other religion—that is, in comparison, say, to Mohammedanism. A glance into the evidences of that religion will soon convince us of its ridiculousness. Christianity is either one of the grandest facts it is possible to conceive, or one of the fondest delusions foisted by religious enthusiasm upon the credulity of mankind. Look at Sir Isaac Newton, Bacon, and Herschel—could these men be deluded by such a foolish imposture? Surely if great minds like these can see the evidence of God in Revelation, we ought to be careful in forming a hasty conclusion as to the verity or otherwise of Christianity. But I am digressing. Christianity, whether a delusion or not, exists; it is founded on Christ. No educated sceptic can doubt the reality of Jesus Christ; that He was crucified under Pilate is an historical fact. But the Christian religion is a personal one. It affects the individual in such a way as if he were the only purpose of the grand scheme of redemption; but I really cannot, on paper, go into all the evidences as to the inspiration of the Bible; for even believing the Bible to be the Word of the living God is not the power unto salvation. The saving power is the Gospel, and that only. "There is none other name given under heaven whereby we may be saved," except Jesus Christ; therefore I will try and explain to you the Gospel when you come and see us. I will lend you a splendid book on "Evidences," which must remove all your doubts as to the truth of Christianity.

I think one of the greatest evidences of Christianity is that it supplies all our wants, and even more. "Revelation" tells us that man was created in a different state to what he is now. Mankind hates this truth, and yet feels it is only too true. Man sees within himself sin; he stifles and smothers these guilty fears until death warns him of the fact, "Prepare to meet thy God." Then Philosophy gives way to the conviction that "it is appointed unto man once to die, and after death the judgment." He sees himself guilty, helpless, and condemned; for being full of sin, how could he wish to live with a holy and just God? Any place from Him would be a paradise. This strips him of every prop he has; be he philosopher or not, he becomes helpless, and, like a certain jailor at Philippi, cries out, "What must I do to be saved?" Now comes the object of the whole Bible: to tell man how salvation can be procured. Scripture and his own conscience condemn him, but God in love did a work for man: "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

Here a truth appears that I venture to say not all the philosophy of man could have devised. No man could have invented such a unique scheme from such a hopeless ruin. The highest of God's creatures have fallen below the brute creation, "for the mind of man is at enmity with God." So man, through sin, has become the enemy of his Creator. God is a just God. Justice means due penalty, does it not? It is so with us; why not with God? Therefore, justice condemns man. "God so LOVED the world." Here, there is something beyond justice—LOVE. Justice is stern, but righteous. Yet above all this, what is love? Something far higher. It loves the sinner; justice condemns him, but love redeems him. But how? Mystery of mysteries!—God must die. He must take the sinner's place, and be his substitute. His righteousness and justice demand it; how is it to be done? God must take upon Himself human form, and suffer as man as the sinner's substitute. The penalty of God's law must be paid: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." So God in human form, as Jesus Christ, died for the sinner.

This, then, is Christianity in a nutshell. Man the sinner, God the Saviour; man helpless, God able to save to the uttermost. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." Man incapable of lifting a hand to save himself; God stooping down and lifting him up. No merit whatever in man; all God's love. When a man is conscious of his state by nature, and knows his need of a Saviour, then the Gospel comes to him as water does to a thirsty man in a desert. It tells him of Jesus, "who came into the world to save sinners," and sinners only. The sinner sees Jesus suffering for his sins when on the cross. His resurrection was the proof that God accepted the atonement, and so can free the sinner, forgive him, and yet be just. He (Jesus) was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with his stripes we are healed (Is. liii. 5). Jesus thus (in love almost beyond our comprehension) died the just for the unjust, the innocent for the guilty. He died that we might live.

This is the real comfort of a true Christian. You may derive an artificial sort of comfort from Philosophy, which may lull to sleep the convictions and fears that are instinctively in the heart of man. It may suit in health, but the fear of death will soon scatter all false hopes. On the other hand, with the Lord Jesus Christ as my substitute and Saviour, the sting of death is gone; and, come what may, the nearer I come to death the sooner I shall realise life eternal. I write to you in this way because the Gospel only can prove to you the evidence of its reality. Evidences are all very well; but, after all, it is a round-about way of getting at the truth. When you are convinced by evidence, then you must start again—just as a little child—and accept the Lord Jesus Christ as your Saviour. "The wages of sin is death, but the GIFT of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

My brother was at least ten years proving from books on "evidence" the reality of Christianity, and he says he wishes he had started at the Gospel; for it God's love will not soften a man's heart, stern truth will not. I send you a little book* expressing the Gospel much more explicitly than I can. Do read it, won't you? Forgive me writing you thus, but somehow I don't think you really have found true happiness, and I do sincerely hope that before long you may see as I do now. With every good wish for your spiritual as well as temporal welfare, believe me, very sincerely yours,

Supper to Street Children.

ON the invitation of Mr. Quarrier over 700 children gathered in the Orphan Home Hall, James Morison-street, Glasgow, on Thursday last, and were entertained to tea and supper. The audience consisted of destitute children of the city employed in hawking, newsboys and girls, shoeblacks, match sellers, and beggars of tender years. The hall was crowded, and for such a promiscuous gathering the noise was not great, all things being considered. After a hearty tea had been partaken of, thanks were returned by a band of eight children from Cessnock House, Govan.

Mr. Quarrier, who presided, gave a few words of Christian counsel; he advised the boys and girls to get off the streets as fast as possible. He said he was sorry to say there were more boys and girls on the streets of Glasgow now than there were seven years ago. He urged upon them the acceptance of any work, however humble, rather than run about idle.

An interesting series of magic-lantern views, representing the "Prodigal Son" and the "Gin Palace," were shown and explained. Other short addresses were given. Before parting, a wholesome bit of supper was supplied, and the children were sent home pleased, and we trust profited.

"ALL THINGS ARE POSSIBLE."

A PRAYER-MEETING TESTIMONY.

THE reading of those requests [for the salvation of inebriates] touched me very deeply indeed. They seemed to be an echo of many a request for prayer which has been made for me. If what I may tell you will cheer any Christian heart, encourage any godly father and mother to go on praying for their sons, or assist any man or woman who has felt himself or herself beyond the reach of hope, I shall thank God for it.

I had very good opportunities. My parents loved the Lord Jesus, and did their best to train me up in the right path; and for some time I thought myself that I should be a Christian. But I got away from Christ, and turned further and further away from God and all good influences. It was at a public school where I first learned to drink. Many a time at seventeen I drank to excess; but I had an amount of self-respect that kept me from going thoroughly to the bad till I was about twenty-three, and then on till twenty-six. At Cambridge I went on further and further in drinking, until I lost all self-respect and voluntarily chose the worst of companions. I strayed further and further from God, until my friends, those who were Christians and those who were not, considered and told me that there was very little hope for me. I had been pleaded with by all sorts of people, but I "hated reproof." I hated everything that savoured of religion, and I sneered at every bit of good advice or any kind word offered me in that way. My father and mother both died without seeing me brought to the Lord. They prayed for me all the time they lived; and, at the very last, my mother asked me if I would not follow her to be with her in heaven. To quiet and soothe her I said I would. But I did not mean it; and I thought, when she had passed away, that she knew now my real feelings. After her death I went from bad to worse, and plunged deeper and deeper into vice. Drink got a stronger hold of me, and I went lower and lower down. I was never "in the gutter," in the acceptation in which that term is generally understood; but I was as low in my soul as any man who lives in one of the common lodging-houses.

I went from Cambridge first to Newcastle, as a solicitor, and then to London. While I was in Newcastle, Messrs. Moody and Sankey came there; and an aunt of mine, who was still praying for me after my mother's death, came and said to me, "I have a favour to ask of you." She had been very kind to me, and I knew what she wanted. She said, "It is to go and hear Messrs. Moody and Sankey." "Very good," I said; "it is a bargain. I will go and hear the men; but you are never to ask me again. You will promise that?" "Yes," she said, "I do." I went, and kept, as I thought, most religiously my share of the bargain. I waited until the sermon was over, and I saw Mr. Moody coming down from the pulpit. Earnest prayer had been offered for me, and there had been an understanding between my aunt and him that the sermon should apply to me, and that he would come and speak to me immediately afterwards. We met Mr. Moody in the aisle, and I thought that I had done a very clever thing when I walked round my aunt, before Mr. Moody could address me, and out of the building.

I wandered further from God after that, and I do not think that I bent my knees in prayer for between two and three years. I went to London, and things grew worse and worse. At times I tried to pull up. I made any number of resolutions. I promised myself and my friends not to touch the drink. I kept my resolutions for some days, and, on one occasion, for six months; but the temptation came with stronger force than ever, and swept me further and further from the pathway of virtue. When in London I neglected my business and everything I ought to have done, and sank deeper into sin.

One of my boon companions told me, "If you don't pull up, you will kill yourself." "How is that?" I asked. "You are killing yourself; for you can't drink so much as you used to." "Well," I replied, "I can't help it then." I got to such a state that I did not think there was any possible help for me. Affairs went on in this manner until, at last, I lost all control over myself.

I had been drinking and playing billiards one day, and in the evening I returned to my lodgings. I thought that I would sit there awhile, and then go out again as usual. Before going out I began to think, and the thought struck me: "How will all this end?" "Oh," I thought to myself, "what is the use of that? I know how it will all end. I know that I shall destroy body and soul." But the thought came to me very strongly, "Is there any way of escape?" "No," I said. "I have made any number of resolutions. I have done all I could to keep clear of drink, but I can't. It is impossible."

Just at that moment the words came into my mind, from God's own Word, words that I had not remembered since I was a boy: "With men these things are impossible, but with God all things are possible." And then I saw, in a flash, that what I had just admitted, as I had done hundreds of times before, to be an impossibility, was the one thing that God had pledged Himself to do if I would go to Him. All the difficulties came up in my way—my companions, my surroundings of all sorts, my temptations, but I just looked up and thought, "It is possible with God." I went down on my knees there and then, in my room, and began to ask God to do the impossible. As soon as I prayed to Him with very stammering utterance,—I hadn't prayed for nearly three years—I thought, "Now, then, God will help me." I took hold of his truth, I don't know how. I thought the best thing I could do was to go and get somebody to talk to me about my soul and tell me how to be saved. For I was a perfect heathen, though I had been brought up so well. I went out and hunted about London, and it shows how little I knew of religious people and places of worship, that I could not find a Wesleyan chapel. My mother and father were Wesleyans, and I thought I would find a place belonging to their denomination, but I could not. I searched an hour and a half, and that night I was in the most utter, abject misery of body and soul any man can think of or conceive.

I came home to my lodgings and went upstairs and thought to myself, "I will not go to bed till I am saved." But I was so ill from drinking—I had not had my usual amount of food in the evening, and the reaction was so tremendous that I felt I must go to bed (although I dare not), or I would be in a very serious condition in the morning. I knew how I would be in the morning, thinking, "What a fool I was last night," when I would awake up moderately fresh, and go off to drink again as I had often done. But again I thought, "God can do the impossible. He will do that which I cannot do myself." And I prayed to the Lord to let me wake up, as I went to bed, feeling the weight of my sins and my misery. Then I went to sleep. The first thing in the morning, as soon as I remembered where I was, I thought, "Has that conviction left me?" No; I was more miserable than before—and it seemed strange, though it was natural. I got up and thanked the Lord because He had kept me anxious about my soul.

I went on for eight or nine days seeking the Lord. On the Saturday morning I had to go and tell the clerks. That was hard. I did it with the tears running down my cheeks. A man does not like to cry before other men. Anyway, I told them I wanted to become, and meant to become, a Christian. A sceptic dropped his head, and said nothing. Another fellow, with whom I played billiards, said, "By Jove, I wish I had the pluck to say so myself." It was received in a different way from what I thought it would be. But the very man who told me that I was killing myself with drink, spent an hour and a half trying to get me to drink, saying that "I had the blues, and was out of sorts, and a glass of brandy or whiskey would do me good." He tried to get me to drink, and I turned upon him at last, and said, "You remember what you told me. I am trying to get away from drink, and not to touch it again." When I think of that I am reminded of the words of God Himself: "The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel."

I must not forget to tell you that I went down before God in my misery, my helplessness, and my sin, and owned to Him that it was impossible that I should be saved; that it was impossible for me to keep clear of drink; but from that night to this moment, I never had the slightest desire for drink. It was a hard struggle indeed to give up smoking. But God, in his great wisdom, knew that I must have come to grief if I had to fight single-handed against the overwhelming desire I had for it. He took it clean away. From that day to this the Lord has kept me away from drink, and made me hate it most bitterly. I simply said that I hadn't any strength, nor have I now: but it is the Lord Jesus who is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God through Him.

If there is any one hearing me who has given up all hope, come to the Saviour. That is his Name, for "He shall save his people from their sins." Wherever I have gone, since then, I have found Him to be my Saviour. God forbid that I should glory; it would be glorying in my shame. It is to my shame that I speak thus of myself; but, oh! the Saviour is able to save, and He will save.

Christian friends, continue to pray. You may go to heaven before your sons are brought home. My parents did. My sister prayed for me for years and years; but now I can help others on their way to Zion. Praise the Lord for all his mercy to me.

EAST-END WORK.—Among other efforts for the salvation of the immense population in the East-end of London, is one by Rev. W. E. Hurndall and his fellow-helpers. From a report just issued, we find that he has 110 volunteer visitors to some 4000 families weekly, and pleads for twelve missionaries to follow up this work. In addition to the ordinary Church services, Mr. Hurndall conducts a few religious services for the people at the Bow and Bromley Institute accommodating 1200 persons. The annual cost of this service being £100. In addition to direct evangelistic work, various agencies are in full work for helping the people to help themselves. Mr. Hurndall will be glad of the prayer and sympathy of our readers for carrying on this work. The address is 16, Cottage-grove, Bow-road, E.

THE ELEMENTS OF TRUE PRAYER.

Address by D. L. MOODY,

AT LAVENDER-HILL HALL, CLAPHAM, THURSDAY, JANUARY 10.

TO-DAY I want to call your attention to this one thought—why so many of our prayers are not answered. I venture to say there is scarcely a person here who has not at some time or other had to say: It seems as though my prayers did not go out of the room, did not rise higher than my head, as though my words came back into my own bosom instead of going up to God. If the disciples of John the Baptist, and if Christ's own disciples felt as though they needed to be taught how to pray, surely we in this age need to be taught how to pray. So at the beginning of this service let there be silent prayer going up to God that we may get light on this important subject. I feel there is no subject that can come before us more important than this subject of prayer. If there is one here to-day saying, "I do not take any interest in prayer, for I have never prayed," I want to tell you that the time will come when you will pray, and when you will wish to know how your prayers are not answered. It will not be God's fault if they are not answered; it will be because you have not looked into the subject—to know how to make your requests known to God.

There are nine elements in all true prayer. I shall not have time to take them all up this afternoon, but to-morrow we will continue our consideration of the subject. In the first place there must be

ADORATION.

Let me refer to a passage in the prophecy of Daniel. He was one of the men who knew how to pray; his prayer brought the blessing of heaven upon himself and upon his people. In chapter ix. 3, we read:—

"And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes:

"And I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession, and said, O Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments."

The thought I want to call your special attention to is conveyed in the words, "O Lord, the great and dreadful God." Daniel took his right place before God—in the dust; he put God in his right place. It was when Abraham was on his face, prostrate before God, that God spoke to him. Holiness belongs to God; sinfulness belongs to us. The same thing is brought out in Isaiah vi.:—

"In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.

"Above it stood the seraphims; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

"And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory."

When we see the holiness of God we will adore and magnify Him. Moses had to learn the same lesson. God told him to take his shoes from off his feet, for the place where he stood was holy ground. When we hear men trying to make out that they are holy and speaking about their holiness, they make light of the holiness of God. It is his holiness that we need to think and speak about: when we do that we shall be prostrate in the dust. You remember, also, how it was with Peter. When Christ made Himself known to him he said, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord." A sight of God is enough to show us how holy He is and how unholy we are.

We find that Job, too, had to be taught the same lesson. In chapter xl. 3, we read:—

"Then Job answered the Lord, and said: Behold I am vile, what shall I answer Thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth."

As you hear Job discussing with his friends you would think he was one of the holiest men that ever lived. He was eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame; he fed the hungry and clothed the naked. What a wonderfully good man he was! It was all I, I, I. At last God said to him, "Gird up your loins like a man, and I will put a few questions to you." The moment that God revealed Himself Job changed his language. He saw his own vileness and God's purity. He said, "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee, and I abhor myself in dust and ashes."

If we are struggling to live a higher life, and to know something of God's holiness and purity, what we need is to be brought into contact with Him that He may reveal Himself. Then we shall take our place in the dust before Him as these men of old were constrained to do. We will hallow his Name, as the Master taught his disciples, when He said "Hallowed be thy Name." When I think of the irreverence of the present time, it seems to me that we have fallen on evil days. Let us as Christians, when we draw near to God in prayer, put Him in his right place.

Another element in true prayer is CONFESSION.

I do not want the Christians here to think that I am talking to the unsaved. I think we as Christians have a good many sins to confess.

If you go back to the Scripture records, you will find that the men who lived nearest to God and had most power with Him, were those who confessed their sins and failures. Daniel, as we have seen, confessed his sins and those of his people. Yet there is nothing on record against Daniel. I suppose he was considered one of the best men—and probably he was—then on the face of the earth. Job was no doubt a holy man, a mighty prince in Israel; yet he had to fall in the dust and confess his sins. So you will find it all through the Scriptures. When Isaiah saw the purity and holiness of God, he beheld himself in his true light, and he exclaimed, "Woe is me, for I am a man of unclean lips."

I firmly believe that the Church of God will have to confess their own sins, before there can be any great work of grace in London or in any other place. There has got to be a deeper work among God's believing people. I sometimes think it is about time to give up preaching to the ungodly, and preach to those who profess to be Christians. If we had a higher standard of life in the Church of God, there would be thousands more flocking into the kingdom. So it was in the past; when God's believing children turned away from their sins and their idols, then the fear of God fell upon the people round about. Take up the history of Israel, and you find that when they put away their strange gods, God visited the nation and there came a mighty work of grace.

What we want in these days is a true and deep revival in the Church of God. I have little sympathy with the idea that God is going to reach the outlying masses by a cold and formal Church. The judgment of God must begin with us. You notice that when Daniel got that wonderful answer to prayer recorded in the ninth chapter, he was confessing his sin. That is one of the best chapters on prayer in the whole Bible. We read (verse 20):—

"And whiles I was speaking, and praying, and confessing my sin and the sin of my people Israel, and presenting my supplication before the Lord my God for the holy mountain of my God;

"Yea, whiles I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation.

"And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding."

So, also, when Job was confessing his sin God turned his captivity and heard his prayer. God will hear our prayer and turn our captivity when we take our right place before Him, and confess and forsake our transgressions. It was when Isaiah cried out before the Lord, "I am vile," that the blessing came; the live coal was taken from the altar and put upon his lips, and he went out to write one of the most wonderful books the world has ever seen. What a blessing it has been to the Church!

It was when David said, "I have sinned," that God dealt in mercy with him. Notice how David made the very same confession as the poor Prodigal did. There is no difference between the king and the beggar when the Spirit of God comes into the heart and convicts of sin.

If this confession of sin is deep among believers, it will be so among the ungodly also. I never knew it to fail. I am so anxious that God should revive his work in our own hearts, so that we may see the exceeding sinfulness of sin. I believe there are a greatmany fathers and mothers here who are anxious for the conversion of their children. I suppose I have had not less than fifty messages from parents come to me within the past ten days, wondering why their children are not saved. I venture to say that as a rule, the fault lies at our own door. There may be something in our life that stands in the way. It may be there is some secret sin that keeps back the blessing. David lived in the awful sin into which he fell, for six months before Nathan made his appearance. Let us pray God to come into our midst to-day, and make his power felt. If it is a right eye, let us pluck it out; if it is a right hand let us cut it off; that we may have power with God and with man.

Why is it that so many of our children are wandering off into the public-house, and drifting away into infidelity—going down to a dishonoured grave? There seems to be very little power in the Christianity of the present time. Many godly parents find that their children are going astray. Does it arise from some secret sin clustering around the heart? There is a passage of God's Word that is often quoted, but in 99 cases out of 100 those who quote it stop at the wrong place. It is in Isaiah lix. 1: "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save; neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear." There they stop. Of course God's hand is not shortened, and his ear is not heavy; but we ought to read the next verse: "Your iniquity hath separated between you and your God; your sins hath hid his face from you that he will not hear. For your hands are defiled with blood and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness." Bear in mind that if we are regarding iniquity in our heart, or living on a mere empty profession, we have no claim to expect that our prayers will be answered. There is not one solitary promise for us. I sometimes tremble when I hear eople get up and quote promises, and say nat God is bound to fulfil these promises to nem, when, all the time there is something n their own life which they are not willing ) give up. It is well for us to search our earts and find out why it is that our prayers re not answered.

There is a very solemn passage in Isaiah i.

"Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom;
ve ear unto the law of our God, ye people of omorrah.

"To what purpose is the multitude of your crifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of e burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed easts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, of lambs, or of he goats.

"When ye come to appear before me, who hath quired this at your hand, to tread my courts?

"Bring no more vain oblations, incense is an )omination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, e calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it iniquity, even the solemn meeting."

"Even the solemn meeting!"—think of
nat. If God does not get our heart service
'e will have none of it; it is an abomination ) Him.

"Your new moons and your appointed feasts
y soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am eary to bear them.

"And when ye spread forth your hands, I will de mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make any prayers, I will not hear: your hands are ll of blood.

"Wash you, make you clean; put away the il of your doings from before mine eyes; cease do evil;

"Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the pressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the dow.

"Come now, and let us reason together, saith e Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they all be as white as snow; though they be red like imson, they shall be as wool."

Again we read in Proverbs xxviii. 9: "He at turneth away his ear from hearing the w, even his prayer shall be abomination." ink of that! It may shock some of us to ink that our prayers are an abomination to )d, yet if any are living in known sin, this what God's Word says about them. If we e not willing to turn from sin and obey )d's law, we have no right to expect that e will answer our prayers. Unconfessed n is unforgiven sin; and unforgiven sin is e darkest, foulest thing on this sin-cursed
rth. You cannot find a case in the Bible ere a man has been honest in dealing with n, but God has been honest with him and essed him. The prayer of the humble and e contrite heart is a delight to God. There no sound that goes up from this sin-cursed rth so sweet to his ear as the prayer of the an who is walking uprightly.

Let me call your attention to the prayer
David in Psalm cxxxix. 23, 24. I wish all e friends here to-day would commit these rses to memory. If we should all nestly make this prayer for twenty-four urs there would be a good deal of change our lives. "Search me"—not my neigh-
ur. It is so easy to pray for other people, t so hard to get home to ourselves. I am aid that we who are busy in the Lord's )rk, are very often in danger of neglect-g our own vineyard. In this Psalm David t home to himself. "Search me, O
)d, and know my heart; try me and ow my thoughts; and see if there be any cked way in me, and lead me in the way erlasting!" There is a difference between d searching me and my searching myself.
nay search my heart and pronounce it all ht, but when God searches me as with a hted candle, a good many things will me to light that perhaps I knew nothing out.

"Try me." David was tried when he fell taking his eye off from the God of his her Abraham. "Know my thoughts."
God looks at the thoughts. Are our thoughts pure? Have we in our hearts thoughts against God or against his people—against any one in the world? If we have we are not right in the sight of God. Oh, may God search us to-day. I have been praying that there may be heart-searching here to-day, that God may do a deeper work here to-day than in any meeting I have ever had. My heart has been going out to God, that a lift may be given to the Church of God at the beginning of the year. I believe we are going to have the greatest blessing we have ever known, if the Church of God will but turn away from everything that is contrary to his law, so that He shall delight to answer our prayers. I do not know any better prayer that we can make than this prayer of David. One of the most solemn things in the Scripture history is that when holy men—better men than we are—were tested and tried, they were found to be as weak as water, away from God.

Now, dear friends, let us be sure that we are right. We do not want this week to pass without getting a great blessing. If there is anything in our lives that is wrong let us ask God to show it to us. Have we been selfish? Have we been more jealous of our own reputation than of the honour of God? Elijah thought he was very jealous for the honour of God, but it turned out that it was his own honour after all; self was really at the bottom of it. One of the saddest things, I think, that Christ had to meet with in his disciples was this very thing; there was a constant struggle between them who should be the greatest, instead of each one taking the humblest place and being least in their own estimation. Mr. Moody read several passages from the Gospel illustrative of this (e.g., Mark ix. 30—37; x. 32—45). Referring to the latter passage he said: These words were spoken in the third year of his ministry. Three years they had been with Him; they had listened to the words that fell from his lips, yet they had failed to learn this lesson of humility. The most humiliating thing that happened among the chosen twelve occurred on the night of our Lord's betrayal, when Judas sold Him and Peter denied Him. If there was any place where there should have been an absence of these thoughts, it was at the Supper-table. Yet we find that when Christ instituted that blessed memorial there was a debate going on among his disciples who should be the greatest (Luke xxii. 21—24). Think of that, right under the shadow of the Cross, when the Master was "exceeding sorrowful, even unto death"—was already tasting the bitterness of Calvary, and the horrors of that dark hour were gathering upon his soul.

I think if God searches us we will find a good many things in our lives for us to confess. If we are tried and tested by God's law, there will be a good many things that will have to be changed. I ask again, if we are selfish or jealous? Are we willing to hear of others being used by God more than we are? Are our Church of England friends willing to hear of a great revival of God's work among Dissenters? Would it rejoice their soul to hear of such efforts being blessed? Are Dissenters willing to hear of a reviving of God's work in the grand old Church of England? If we are full of narrow, party, and sectarian feelings, there will be many things to be laid aside. Let us to-day pray to God to search us and try us, and see if there be any evil way in us. If these holy and good men felt that they were tried, should we not tremble and endeavour to find out if there is anything in our lives that God would have us get rid of?

Once again, let me call your attention to a prayer that David made (Ps. li.) A friend of mine told me some years ago that he made this prayer of David's every week. I think it would be a good thing if we offered up these petitions once a week; let it go right up from our hearts, and let us take our place before God as sinners. If we have been proud, or irritable, or lacking in patience, shall we not to-day confess it? Is it not time that we began at home, and get our lives straightened out? See how quick the ungodly will then begin to inquire the way of life. Let those of us who are parents set our own houses in order, and be filled with Christ's spirit; then it will not be long before our children will be inquiring what they must do to get the same spirit. I believe that, to-day, by its lukewarmness and formality the Christian Church is making more infidels than all the books the infidels ever wrote. I do not fear infidel lectures half so much as this cold and dead formalism in the professing Church at the present time. One prayer meeting, like what they had on the day of Pentecost, would shake every infidel in London.

What we want is to get hold of God in prayer. You are not going to reach the masses of London by great sermons. We want to move the arm that moves the world.

At the close of Mr. Moody's earnest exhortations as to the need of confession, he called on all the Christians present who felt they had anything to confess before God, to stand and audibly repeat after him a number of the petitions in Psalm li. He afterwards led in prayer for God's blessing on the great assembly. The first meeting being dismissed, Mr. Moody said that instead of asking the unsaved to rise for prayer, he would ask all the Christians who desired to be blessed to rise and present themselves for prayer. "I want you to pray for me," he said. "If I am to go on preaching in London during the next six months, I feel as if I shall have need of God's Spirit. If you have any regard for me, pray for me." Almost the entire audience rose to their feet, and stood while Mr. George Soltau led in audible prayer. In the closing prayer, Mr. Moody, with faltering voice, presented further petition, making special mention of the choir, of Mr. Sankey, that they might be more than ever enabled to sing the gospel; and of the ministers, that they might be endued with power from on high. Then the solemn gathering dispersed.

Rest.

"Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee."—Ps. cxvi. 7.

LIE low, O heart, at Jesu's feet
For there all bitter things are sweet,
Then thou canst know the heart of God,
Canst use the staff, and kiss the rod.

Lie low, O heart, at Jesu's feet,
Then thou canst every tempest meet,
Canst hear his whispered "Peace, be still,"
And love as well as learn his will.

Lie still, O heart, upon his breast,
And prove the peace of utter rest;
Then unbelief will find no place
And fear die out before His Face.

Lie still, O heart, upon his breast,
For He can work if thou wilt rest;
The journey is too great for thee
Unless the Lord thy shelter be.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME.—The report of this Home just issued states that the new building is now completed and has been put into the hands of trustees. Miss Mittendorff has had many heavy trials in the work of caring for and training the orphans; we trust our readers will continue their sympathy with increased diligence in so needful and excellent a work.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE REST.

ALLOW me to ask, once more, the prayerful sympathy and continued interest of Christians at home for the Constantinople "Rest." The last year has been one of renewed trial, and yet blessing, in the turning of some souls, as we trust, to the Lord. We left our former place by the sea, early in the spring, for a cheaper one not far away in Galata. But there we were soon prohibited, by the jealousy of Roman Catholic neighbours, from singing with our small organ; and finding the rooms damp and dark, we removed still higher up the Galata hill, to a new centre, which promises to become a great thoroughfare. Here we have two sunny and attractive rooms (at £175 per year) in the near vicinity of the British post-office and hospital, and enjoy perfect freedom in our Christian work. But I am now alone in carrying it on, as Mr. Burgen, my assistant, has so failed in health as to render it necessary for him to seek restoration in his native climate; a great trial to himself as well as to me, in the relinquishment of my hopes for the future of this work. Will not some strong soldier of the cross come to the rescue at this crisis. There is plenty of work here for one knowing only English. Much might be done in visiting British ships, and we are quietly drawing in a new class of men from surrounding offices and banks.

On the 17th, I closed the Stamboul "Rest," with much painful regret. It is scarcely a year since the experiment of this method of labour was begun in the heart of the old city, to meet, if possible, the needs of the thousands of men and lads from the interior, lodging in the Khans close by. But this work soon attracted the unfavourable attention of the Government, and I was interrupted by the police one day, when giving tracts to the quiet, orderly crowds that had gathered to hear the music of the organ. A pictorial arrangement of Mrs. Grimkè's text-cards was rudely torn from the wall by an officer, and an attempt made to drag away a native colporteur who remonstrated, in which struggle some panes of glass were broken. This outbreak ended at last in my being summoned to appear at the U.S.A. Consulate to answer to the charges made by the Chief of the Police, and I was "forbidden to play the organ, or to give away the little books" in that place. Indeed, so strong was the feeling, that I left the care of it entirely to my assistant till he left for England, the last of July. Yet, in spite of everything to hinder, the average of weekly attendance at that coffee-room, where men of various races could find food for their souls, was over one hundred. But neither funds nor workers could be found to carry it on. Five pounds per month was all it required in funds! Last week saw the last of my deposits for the Constantinople "Rest" withdrawn. For the year to come come, the American Board has kindly granted £30 (Turkish), but that will soon be swallowed up for rent; and in these hard times, when men can scarcely indulge in the luxury of even a cup of Turkish coffee, it is difficult to meet our current expenses, however closely we may economise.

During the spring months I was enabled to distribute thousands of Gospel messengers in many tongues, greedily taken by people in the streets, shops, bazaars, boats-landings, and on the boats; men often running out from wine-shops and cafés to beg for them. It was a repetition of former scenes in Smyrna, where more than 150,000 tracts, Gospels, &c., were sown among the various races by my godly Scotch Bible-woman, awakening that spiritual appetite (among the Greeks especially) which nothing less than "Bread from Heaven" can satisfy, and which prepared the way for the blessed work and ingathering of souls, which has ever since been carried on at the "Smyrna Rest." Here I may be pardoned for adding a word respecting the advantages of Smyrna over Constantinople for such work. "Infidel Smyrna," as the Turks call it, has but one centre. Everybody and everything gravitates to the sea-side upon the great esplanade, and the Christian population, so called, is largely in the ascendant; hence there is more religious liberty.

The problem of reformation in the Greek Church will probably be solved outside of Greece, as that of Mohammedanism may be in India.

In Constantinople we have many centres, and each one requires a separate set of appliances and workers.

Owing to the situation of the population upon the Golden Horn and the Bosphorus, a general gathering, for any purpose, is almost impossible, even during the day-time; but at night, when people have most leisure, it is entirely out of the question. Besides this inseparable difficulty in the way of Christian work at large, Christian workers at the capital are under the immediate inspection and zealous scrutiny of the Turkish authorities at head-quarters. This has made itself felt more stringently the last year than ever before in the history of Missions. And yet there is progress. The "Word of God is not bound," and it has gone all over these lands as never before. God is working, as in nature, silently, invisibly, and one day there will be a mighty upheaval of old foundations in this land and this citadel of the Turk!

Dear Christian friends at home, hasten that day by your prayers, your sympathy, your aid.
—Ever yours, for the Master,

The "Rest," Galata, Constantinople, Dec. 28, 1883. MARIA A. WEST.

Dark Morocco.

IN a letter dated Tangier, Morocco, Dec. 25, Mr. W. Mackintosh thus writes to a friend in Edinburgh:—

Poor Morocco is far behind most parts of Syria; the latter is a land of light compared with it. Here we have six or seven millions of people and only one missionary, one to the Jews at Mogador. There are no Mission schools except his at Mogador. China even cannot tell of such darkness as this, for it has now about one missionary to every million of people.

We want both Arabic-speaking and Spanish-speaking helpers for places on the coast like Tangier, as Spanish is the language of most of the Jews and Spaniards on the seaboard, while Arabic is that of the Moslems. But in the interior of the country different dialects of Berber are necessary, as there is a large Berber population in the mountainous district of Morocco—probably half of the whole mass, and many of them only know Berber. The Berber races are an interesting people, inhabiting the great Atlas range from the eastern limit of Algeria to the N.W. of Morocco, thence southwards to the furthest limit of the mountains. South of the terminating point of the Atlas range—three days beyond Mogador—the interesting and extensive country of Sus is peopled by them. The Berbers are nominally Moslems, but do not possess the rigid Moslem bigotry which people of Arab extraction often have, so that they are more frank and ready to fraternise when Christians approach them.

I am at present engaged in the study of the language of one branch of Berbers—the Rifians, found in the northern part of the Atlas. It is laborious work, as it is an unwritten language, but it is intensely interesting. I have begun to translate some of the first chapters of Matthew into it, and hope, if the Lord will, to be able to do more soon. I have had an interesting conversation this evening with an Arab Moslem about Christ, but as yet every little effort we can make is but in a state of embryo. I am sure you will pray for us and this dark, dark land, that a wide door may be opened for the Gospel of Christ.

For the Young.

A CHILD'S PRAYER.

ONE cold winter morning Mr. B. was sitting at his work, near a good fire in a comfortable, pleasant room. From time to time he stopped to look at the falling snow; and while thanking God for his own well-being, thought of the thousands of poor trembling with cold and hunger. All at once the thought of a widow who had lately come to the village crossed his mind. Her position was unknown to him, he only knew she had seen better days. He could not get rid of the thought of her. He rose, walked up and down his room, and again took his pen, but in vain: the widow occupied his mind in spite of himself; he wondered whether she was really in need, perhaps suffering from cold and hunger. He resolved to do the only thing that could quiet him, he went to the village to see for himself her condition.

Across a thick snow he soon reached the little house inhabited by the widow; stopping a moment before the door, he heard a child's voice saying the Lord's Prayer. The child repeated it many times, pronouncing with a special emphasis and touching fervour the words, "Give us this day our daily bread." Mr. B. listened, and was certain the Lord had sent him there.

Thanks to the snow which covered the ground, his approach had not been heard. Softly raising the latch, he saw a little boy of five years kneeling before a chair near the empty grate. His little hands were joined, and his pale face raised to heaven with an expression of earnest entreaty. He rose in a minute or two, and the visitor entered. The child appeared surprised, but not frightened. In reply to the kind questions of the stranger, he said that his mother was ill. Mr. B. then took him on his knee, and asked him what he had been doing. "Oh, sir," he replied, "you know in our prayer it says, 'Give us this day our daily bread;' and as we had no bread, I have been asking God to give us some." Mr. B. soon left the house, and going to a neighbouring shop bought bread and some other provisions.

Returning to the widow's, he found the little boy still before the grate, as if waiting for God to answer his prayer. As soon as he saw the bread, he ran to his benefactor, and putting his hand on the loaf, said, "That comes from our Father: how quick He has been in sending it! I am going quick to tell mamma." Mr. B. left the house, and on his way ordered some coal to be sent to the widow.

Returned to his own room, he took up his work with an unaccustomed facility, for even in the small things of life God honours those who honour Him. In the evening he returned to the little house, and how changed all was! A good fire blazed on the hearth, near which the mother and child were enjoying their evening meal. As soon as Mr. B. appeared, the little boy ran to him, took hold of his hands, and joyfully said, "Mamma, here is the gentleman that God sent with the bread." Mr. B. soon discovered that the widow loved the Lord, and trusted in Him. Weak, ill, and without support, living in a lonely house, her only resource had been prayer and confidence in God, but that morning she was well nigh in despair. "And now," she said, "God has given me far more than I asked or thought. Ah, sir, after what has just occurred, it seems impossible that I can ever again doubt the goodness of the Lord."—Le Chrétien Belge.

LEARNING TO COOK.

The Leominster Orphan Homes.

A VERY choicely written and prettily illustrated book* has been issued, giving a history of the rise and progress of these Orphan Homes. We are sure our young readers will be as much interested as ourselves in reading the following chapters. By the kindness of the friends in charge of the Homes we are able to give two illustrations from the book:—

A TALK WITH THE BOYS.

It would do you good to see the two new houses upon the hill, facing the sunshine, and to hear the merry ring of the children's voices.

Both houses were soon full—twenty children in each house, and one over. There were twenty-five boys and sixteen girls. Nine of them came to us from London, three from Birmingham, three from Penzance, two from Scarborough, one from Southampton, one from the Isle of Wight, one from Wales, one from Lancashire, and others from Uxbridge, Hitchin, Bristol, Evesham, Norwich, Luton, Nottingham, Surrey, Salford, and our own neighbourhood.

If you call on us you will find your way through a little iron gate that goes to-and-fro a great many times in the day, and then you pass up under a row of larch trees, to the houses side by side. The first porch you come to belongs to the boys, and the second to the girls. The girls sing you a hymn, or one or two songs they have learned at school; and the boys take you on to their playground, and show you their little gardens and their pigeons; and if you begin to ask questions they soon have some questions to ask you that you might find hard to answer.

The matrons would take you upstairs, and show you the clean little beds the children make for themselves every morning, and if you look out of the window you will see the apple orchard close below you, offering a plentiful supply for apple puddings for hungry children. The town is seen lying in the valley, with the church, and town-hall, the Corn Exchange, and the spire of the Congregational Church; and on beyond are the Birrington woods, Lord Rodney's estates, and the clear outline of the Clee Hills, from which the coal comes. If you come in the evening, you may find the children all gone to bed, and very comfortable they look. Here is a new comer in this bed by the door; his name is Clifford. Ask him how he likes it. "Oh, it'll do," he says, with great satisfaction; "I used to lie in the stable, or in the loft among the hay; father was a carrier in Surrey, and I was in no way very particular."

The children have splendid health. There is an abundance of plain food, and oatmeal porridge for them, but not many delicacies. They often go walks in the country, and at such times cluster round me, and some boy begins to tell his history. One boy comes up alongside, and says, "What are we to call you, sir? May we call you father?" So I say "Oh yes, you may call me father if you like." Another boy calls out, "Can you tell me, sir, how old I am?" And then another, "And how old am I?" They expect me to know their birthplace, their parents, their uncles and aunts, and they sometimes find I know more about them than they know themselves. Another question comes: Does anybody ever write to you, sir, to ask about me?" Then I have to tell all the messages and inquiries I can remember about them. One fat little fellow runs up and asks, "And does anybody ever ask after me?" Poor lad, he only knows of one person in the wide world besides us who cares about him, and that is the kind friend who sent him here; and I have to reply, "Oh yes, I met your friend in London the other day, and she particularly asked after you, and I told her you were getting on finely." The lad is right pleased that someone inquired after him, and he goes away with a feeling of self-respect quite new to his inner life.

If the friends of these children only knew how letters were appreciated, they would write more frequently. A boy will first sit down with delight as he reads a letter from someone that cares for him, telling him to be a good boy, and he will set to work at once, and try to be the best of boys.

A parcel of clothing arrives from a sailor at sea. It is for his nephew. It contains coats and trousers and boots; and the sailor's wife writes the lad a letter, finishing up with the request, "Remember to pray for Uncle Joyce in rough weather." Rough weather comes to most of us at times, but we have an Advocate at God's right hand who is ever faithful.

The children often ask questions I cannot answer. They find out I know their past history, and the mysterious thought occurs to them, "Perhaps he knows what will become of us;" and the question comes, "What shall I be when I am a man? What will you do with me?" "Oh, you will do for a farmer," I reply. "And will Jim be a farmer too? Me and Jim get on well together; we'll be partners." "And what shall I be, sir?" cries another voice. Oh, we'll make a schoolmaster of you." "No, I don't want to be a schoolmaster; I'll be a grocer." "And what will you make of Theodore?" asks a third boy, who inherits a weakness for inquiring into other people's business, and I have to reply, "Oh, he will do for a photographer." And then comes the question, "What is a photographer, sir?"

GOING OUT TO SERVICE.

Side by side in the railway carriage might be seen the Secretary and a boy in search of a place. The time comes when one after another is ready to leave the Home—where such happy years have been spent—and where the work is to be tested by the practical wear and tear of life. Children who have become endeared to us by years of friendship have to be launched on the open sea. Many prayers ascend to the Father in heaven to guide the bark across the waters. Jesus, who went before his brethren to preserve much people alive, will surely go before his orphan children, and prepare a place for them on earth where they may serve Him.

It is a serious business when the time comes for a lad to start in life. The Home finds him a box, with lock and key, and with his bit of luggage he turns his back on his old associates.

But we first go and see if the situation is likely to suit him. So the boy sits quietly in the railway carriage for half an hour, and then begins: "Sir, what sort of a man is it we are going to see?" "I really do not know, Tom; we must find out when we get there." The train stops, and we tread the streets to a well-packed shop, containing a most promiscuous assemblage of hardware goods. "I have brought the boy you wrote to me about. I thought you had better see him yourself, and talk to him, and ask him any questions you like before you agree to take him. We wish to apprentice him for four years, and recommend a little increase in his wages each year; but of course we do not expect him to get much at first if he can have a comfortable home." We carefully inquire into the character of the master. He likes the look of the boy, the boy takes a fancy to him, and the bargain is struck.

A few weeks later two ladies call at the shop, and inquire, "Is Tom in?" The boy appears. He is quite unprepared for visitors, but is well pleased to see his old friends. "May we take him to get a new top-coat?" inquire the ladies. Then there are many questions asked as the boy walks along by their side. "How do you like your place, Tom?" You must keep yourself clean. What do you do in the evenings? Tom has his master's great dog with him, that looks up in his face like an old acquaintance. And Tom has quite as many questions on his mind. "What are the boys doing at home? May I come home at Christmas? Are there any more boys gone out yet? How are the rabbits? Have the pigeons any eggs? Are there any more canaries?" Tom and his master have each a patent spring bed, that turns them on the floor at half-past six in the morning without ceremony, and the lad is likely to make his way in the world.

New Court Chapel, Finsbury Park.

THE large measure of success with which God has blessed the ministry of Rev. J. Ossian Davies in this place has fully justified the expectations we expressed on his coming to London ten months ago. During the year just closed 261 members have been added to the church roll. At the last church meeting 68 persons, nearly all of whom joined the church for the first time, were admitted to membership —more than making up for the losses during the whole year from every cause.

It is proposed to hold a week of special services in New Court Chapel, to reach non-attendants at places of worship, from January 21 to 26, and, in order that the invitations may get into the right hands, arrangements have been made for a house-to-house visitation; the district being divided amongst one hundred volunteer visitors. Dr. Thain Davidson, Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway, Rev. Archibald Brown, of Burdett-road, are amongst those expected to aid this earnest effort of Mr. Davies and his people.

Out of the Depths.

A NEW YEAR'S HYMN.

"As sorrowful, yet alway rejoicing."

BLESSINGS abundant and mercies unspoken,
Be ever inscribed on this newly-turned page,
This year which we take as a sure sign and token
Of Love that can equal Eternity's age.

Look on the chapter now closed for ever,
Mark well each trial, each toil, and each pain;
Safely passed by, they are done with,—and never
Can they affright us or try us again.

Pierced thro' and thro' by adversity's arrow,
Deep in affliction our bleeding hearts lie;
He who regardeth the fall of a sparrow,
Treasures each teardrop and numbers each sigh.

Where are the loved ones our hearts held in keeping,
Where are the friends we once clasped to our breast?
While we are weeping, they calmly are sleeping
Safely in Jesus, at home and at rest!

Sadly we miss them, all vacant their places,
Vainly we list for a word from above,
All that is left are affection's sweet traces,
Garnered and kept in the storehouse of Love.

Closed are the dear eyes that met ours with gladness,
Quiet and still is the welcoming voice,
Yet could those accents but lighten our sadness,
Would they not bid us look up and rejoice?

Will not the hand that so oft has upholden,
Always be ready its guidance to lend?
Can the arms weary, which Jesus has folden
Round us thus far, and will on to the end?

Say not the trials were more than were needed,
Faithless shortcomings account for each one;
Vows disregarded, and warnings unheeded,
Counsels neglected, God's work left undone.

Welcome, then welcome, soft tears of repentance!
Myrrh of the soul, offered low at his shrine
Who, in our stead, suffered sin's dreadful sentence,
Blotting out guilt with his life-blood divine.

Onward we press, mingling joy with our sorrow,
Onward we press to the Home-land above,
Looking to Jesus Hope gilds all our morrow—
The Present, the Past, and the Future are Love

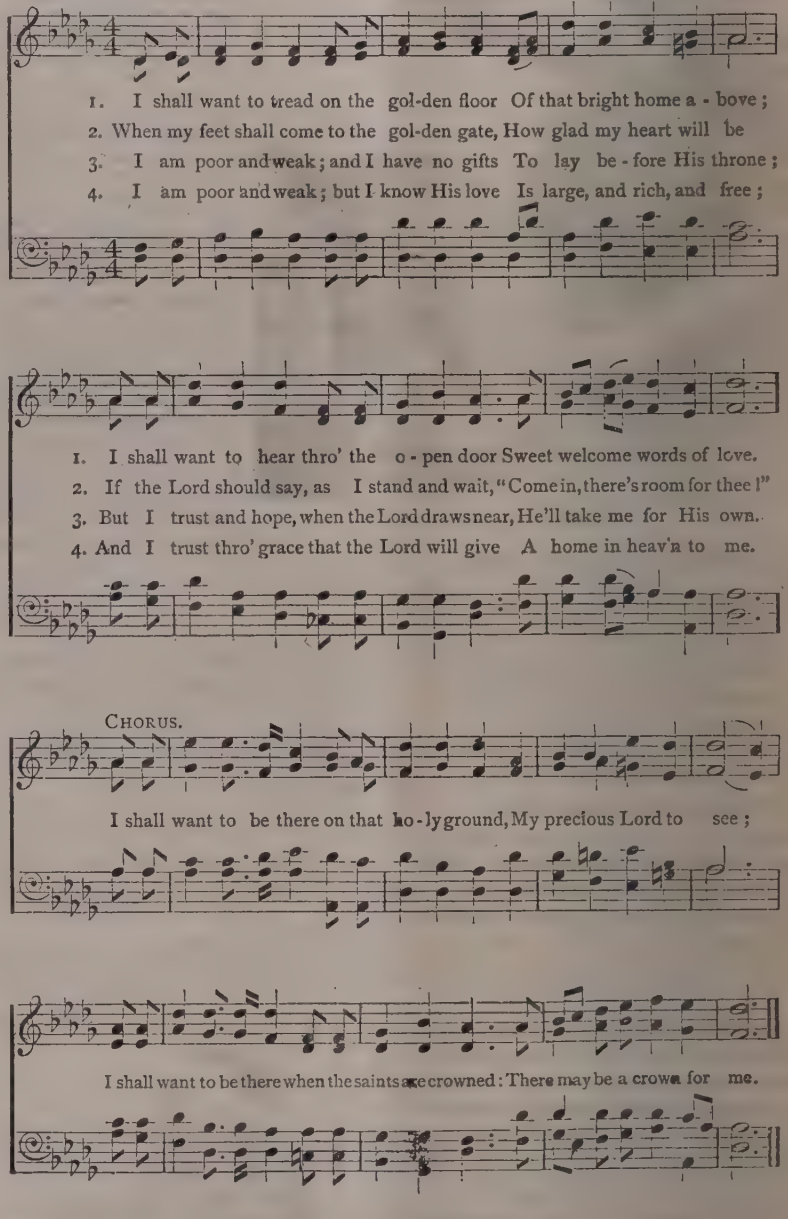
EVANGELA.

NEW HYMN BY MR. SANKEY.

A Crown for Me.

"Ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."—1 PETER v. 4.

REV. W. O. CUSHING. IRA D. SANKEY.



1. I shall want to tread on the gol-den floor Of that bright home a - bove;
2. When my feet shall come to the gol-den gate, How glad my heart will be
3. I am poor and weak; and I have no gifts To lay be - fore His throne;
4. I am poor and weak; but I know His love Is large, and rich, and free;
1. I shall want to hear thro' the o - pen door Sweet welcome words of love.
2. If the Lord should say, as I stand and wait, "Come in, there's room for thee!"
3. But I trust and hope, when the Lord draws near, He'll take me for His own.
4. And I trust thro' grace that the Lord will give A home in heav'n to me.
CHORUS.
I shall want to be there on that ho - ly ground, My precious Lord to see;
I shall want to be there when the saints are crowned: There may be a crown for me.

COPYRIGHT. ENTERED AT STATIONERS' HALL.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie In Airdrie, N.B.

ON Sunday, the 4th inst., Mr. Scroggie conducted the first of a series of meetings in the Public Hall, under the auspices of the Airdrie United Evangelistic Association, which has for years done good work in the town. Long before the hour the building was filled to overflowing, not a few having to go away. The impression produced on the vast audience was remarkable; the Holy Spirit seemed to fill all the house where they were sitting. Believers wept for joy, and many awakened souls willingly accepted God's unspeakable gift. Similar results have been experienced during the week-night meetings, which have also been well attended.

One extraordinary instance of conversion, among several which might be mentioned, is that of a man who for years had been the bond-slave of a besetting sin, and was despaired of by those who loved him most. On the same evening that a gentleman wrote to him this self-ruined man stood up in the after-meeting, and confessed that he had been born again before coming to the Hall. He is still enjoying the peace of God, and hates his sin. After what our eyes have seen of the Lord's work here during these last days, we shall be less disconcerted than ever by the criticisms of a Godless press, however able, and be unmoved. Brethren, pray for us. JOHN PATERSON, B.D.

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.

AN INCENSE CLOUD OF PRAISE.

Address by Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH,

AT STEINWAY HALL, MONDAY, JAN. 7.

I AM so thankful that the key-note of this our Week of Prayer is "Praise and Thanksgiving to God." God dwells in the praises of his people. We feel, indeed, that God inhabits eternity; it is a great and blessed thought for us that his years do not fail, and that from everlasting to everlasting He is God. And, as one year is passing away and another is opening upon us, there is something very delightful in looking up to God as inhabiting eternity, and casting ourselves upon Him. The Lord has been our dwelling place, our home, from generation to generation.

Again, we read that God dwells "in the light which no man can approach unto;" and our hearts rest in the thought that He is infinite purity. "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." And again, "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. iv. 6). We know what it is to say, "I flee unto Thee to hide me, thou God of light." We also read of God dwelling in heaven, and that is very helpful to us as we are here pilgrims on earth. We have so many things to bind us downward that it is helpful to look up and feel that we have God our Father in heaven. If Jesus had only come to teach us these words "Our Father which art in heaven," He would have taught us much, so that we might just look up.

But we also read: "Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." Speaking to those who know Jesus, what an unutterable blessing it is that we may hold converse with our God and Father, through Jesus, by the prompting and the teaching of his Holy Spirit, in the depth of our hearts speaking to Him and hearing Him speak to us in his Word. It is a blessed thought that He dwells in our hearts.

But there is another dwelling-place spoken of, and that perhaps is the holiest. Psalm xxii. begins with words which solemnise every part when the first chord is struck. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" And yet how soon from the very depths of distress the Lord our Master, the great exemplar of faith, looks up and He says, "But thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel. What a wonderful dwelling-place for God! God in his Spirit dwells in the praises of his people. As an incense cloud in which the shekinah glory was seen upon the mercy-seat, so God dwells in the praises of his people. What a delightful thought it is that throughout the borders of our own land and far away in other Christian lands from shore to shore this morning, this day, a grand eucharist of thanksgiving is going up to God, an incense cloud of praise, and that our heavenly Father dwells in it.

There are two passages in the book of Chronicles with regard to praise, to which I will call your attention. When the temple was built we read in 2 Chronicles v. 13, "And it came even to pass as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the Lord, saying, for He is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord."

There was one voice of praise ascending from that temple, and not till then, when it was one, did the glory of the Lord fill the house. I rejoice that to-day the hearts of Christians of different denominations are united as one, and that their praises and thanksgivings are going up in unison to God. Should it not be so with us? Ought not our hearts to be full of grateful love to our heavenly Father—each one having its own tribute of joy to lay upon the altar? The Lord is our God, and, the voice of joy going up as one, shall we not have the presence of his Spirit? Doubtless we shall have!

Though the first passage in Chronicles refers to worship we can never forget that we are members of the Church militant on earth; and we read with regard to Jehoshaphat in chapter xx. 21, 22, "And when he had consulted with the people, he appointed singers unto the Lord, and that should praise the beauty of holiness, as they went out before the army, and to say, Praise the Lord; for his mercy endureth for ever. And when they began to sing and to praise, the Lord set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and Mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they were smitten." When the people began to praise, when they began to sing, the enemy was overcome. And shall it not be so with us in the great warfare which we have to wage? God grant that it may be so in the personal conflict which every one of us has to maintain against the powers of darkness. It is quite as true with us in the nineteenth century as when the Apostle wrote to the Ephesians in the first century: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." God grant that from the hearts of all Christendom there may go forth this year united adoration and praise; that we may rejoice praising the Lord as with one voice for what He has done; and we shall come off more than conquerors. So also in the closer home work in which we have to fight as good soldiers of Christ. God grant that the note of praise may continually go before us in all our prayer-meetings and acts of worship; that continually the note of praise may be sounded.

I believe that nothing vexes the devil more, I believe that nothing is more constantly the prelude to blessing, than the note of praise. So, when we pray for missionary work, let the note of praise be heard; we have abundant reason to thank God. I often think of my dear and blessed father. Were he alive we know how he would have clapped his hands and thanked God that his lot was cast in a day when the triumphs of the Cross are so great. He did so when he was alive, and he has been four and thirty years with his Master. I often wonder what he would say now. He would exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" They called him "a walking doxology" then; I do not know what he would be now. I am sure his life would be praise continually. Why, the whole earth is open to the reception of the everlasting Gospel; and if God would pour into the hearts of the English people such love that they must give, if they cannot go, to spread a knowledge of salvation to the uttermost parts of the earth, I fully believe that, in one generation from this time, the name of Jesus might be sounded from shore to shore and from pole to pole. Let us think for a few moments on what God has done for us. I do not know a more wonderful summary than that in which we bless God "for our creation, preservation, and all the blessings of this life; but above all, for Thine inestimable love in the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, for the means of grace and for the hope of glory." Just one word or two with regard to each.

"Our creation."—I do not know how it is with you, but I think that every day I live I feel more grateful to God for creating me, that from the exuberance of his love He has made me. He could have got on perfectly well without me, but just out of love He made me. Let us take it personally. Why? Just because He loved me. Oh! those words of the Master, "That the world may know that Thou hast sent me and hast loved them as Thou hast loved me." You who are parents know what love is; and though we may try to elevate our thoughts and transfer them this morning from human to divine, we can only climb a little way towards the reality of the love by which God created us and loved us.

"Our preservation."—It is meet to think of this at the opening of another year. How many have been called away from us, and we are among the living to praise the Lord.

> "Strange that a harp of thousand strings > Should keep in tune so long."

The arrows of destruction have passed by us on the right hand and on the left, but here we are, by God's infinite mercy, preserved under the shadow of his wings; safe in his presence and his work in us, and by us, is fulfilled. Who does not bless God to-day for preserving us? And not only for our creation and preservation, but for "All the blessings of this life." You will find it very difficult to enumerate them. Some of you may be good arithmeticians and mathematicians, but you will find the record of these blessings increase the more you ponder over them. They seem to increase continually in geometrical progression. One links itself into the other so marvellously that if you put the blessings of this life together, even the life that is most shaded with sorrow, you will be compelled to say, "How great is the sum of them!"

But, above all, for God's inestimable love in the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ." We spoke just now of how the Father loves us; but oh! there is a higher height than that. The Father loveth the Son. This word is used twice in St. John, in regard to the love of the Eternal Father towards the Eternal Son. In one case it is agapai, signifying the satisfaction of delight; and in the other it is philei, meaning tenderness of personal affection. And He gave that Son to you, to each one of you, dear friends. Marvellous word, that the Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me. He tasted death for every man. Each one of us can say that God's love for us is to be measured by the gift of his Son. Yes! no wonder the Apostle went on to say, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" We need not wonder. Would He grudge us anything else? That is not like our bountiful heavenly Father. We may come to Him with the fulness of expectation, and we shall receive all that we need from his bounty and his love. And yet we are not satisfied. It is not intended that we should be satisfied here fully. We are to look forward. "In thy presence is fulness of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Oh, what wonderful satisfaction!

Take every joy that earth has, and you will find that the Bible uses it as an expression of heavenly joy. I once asked my Bible-class to jot down all the best things they could think of in life. They presented me with a list of thirty. I told them to take their Bibles and see if it did not use them all as expressions of celestial joy. And far more, for "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

You and I are travelling to this abode of joy. It will be but a little while for us who are getting on in life. Meanwhile let us work for the Master. This is the only state in which there is anything of struggling and sorrow; for beyond there is an eternity of perfect bliss. Ought we not then to praise Him? If God inhabits the praises of his people, and He has said, "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me," is it too much that you and I should pour out our hearts in grateful thanksgiving to Him; and especially at this time, when we are reminded of the marvellous opportunities which exist for spreading the everlasting Gospel.

Oh, the music of the Saviour's name! Talk of philanthropy! What can compare with the privilege of making known the name of Jesus?—the healing medicine for every sorrow, and the light that points to the bosom of God.

CONFESSION AND CLEANSING.

Address by Rev. J. R. WOOD,

AT STEINWAY HALL, TUESDAY, JAN. 8.

IT seems to me that the subject of to-day needs but very few words to commend it to the devout thought of all who are assembled in this hall. It is a subject that lies so very near to our daily experience, that enters so deeply into our very hearts, that we do not need very much should be said about it. In fact, it seems that less need be said this morning than perhaps upon any morning this week; only it is necessary that whatever is said should be said to help us to come more directly and more comprehensively to the throne of the heavenly grace.

We are to think, first of all, of the confession of sin; then we are to pray for cleansing and renewal. We are to do these two things with a double reference; first of all, with reference to our nation and our nation's life, and then with reference to ourselves.

As to the confession of national sin, I may be permitted to say just one word before I pass on. If we are to do this with any reality and any sincerity, we must feel our own place in the nation and not stand aloof in a spirit of selfishness and isolation. It seems to me that true piety is also the truest patriotism. When we speak with one another, and when we plead with God about the evils specified in our subject, whether it be intemperance, for example, frequent desecration of the Sabbath, impurity or scepticism, let us remember that we are not mere spectators looking upon these things from the outside; let us not contemplate them as if we had no personal relation or personal responsibility with regard to them; but let us strive to feel that they are the sins of our own nation, of the people whose name we bear, whose tongue we speak, and in whose destiny we share. They are our personal concern. In the old prophets we have examples of how to go to God when we bear upon our hearts the sins of the nation. Let us remember how they went to God each confessing the sins of the people as if they were his own sins.

Another thought in this connection which we must not forget is that we cannot confess our national sins to any good purpose, unless we get beyond the mere accidents of things and go down to the very root. As I was coming to this meeting I met a guardian of one of our large London parishes, whom I happen to know, and he said, "I am going to the Union to get out a person who was a graduate of one of our Universities, and who has reduced himself to his present position by drink. I am going to take him out and see what I can do for him." Well, one's first reflection is: What folly! then, what waste of power! then, what abject misery! But while we linger on these thoughts we do not go deep enough. We want to get beyond the waste and the folly and the misery of national crimes and sins and get down to the very root of the evil. "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned and done this evil in Thy sight." We want to get to the wrong, the sin, the guilt of these things, and by the help of the Holy Spirit to look upon them in the light in which God regards them. Misery and waste are but consequences, and folly is a phase of these things. We want to go lower down and think of sin as God sees it. Surely we have an errand to the throne of grace this morning, as we think of our national iniquities, and let us not forget that prayer for cleansing is only sincere when supported by effort and even sacrifice.

We will now turn to the other part of the matter which is to engage us to-day—our personal sins. We do well to attach great importance to the act of confession, or the soul unveiling itself before God. Permit me to read a passage in 1 John i., which seems to group together the two topics which have been properly grouped in our meditations and prayers for to-day (verses 6—10). John's language is strong, but not too strong. Surely, then, when we come to think of our personal sins and to confess them before God, as we do now, to lay open our souls in his very presence, we are doing that which gives energy to prayer and is exceedingly requisite to our Christian life; we are coming near to what John calls "the truth." In proportion to our sincerity in this exercise do we come near to the truth of things; and let us recollect that we also come near to God, who is the God of truth. Truth may be humbling and distressing, but it is always wholesome to reach it.

In this connection I may remind you of Canon Westcott's comment on this very text. He says that our recognition of our unlikeness to God is the first step towards our becoming like Him. So it is; our feeling our own sins, our full confession of them, our recognition of our unlikeness to God, is the first step to becoming like Him. How necessary, then, is the occupation in which we are now engaged. And thus engaged, do we not stand on the line of the great saints of the Old and New Testaments? when we come to God in the spirit of confession, and when we speak to Him of our sins, and crave cleansing.

Is it not quite clear that there is a larger proportion of confession in the prayers recorded in Holy Scripture than we often find in our own? When we read the supplications of Samuel, David, Jeremiah, Daniel, Ezra, and others, are they not largely made up of confession? and is it not clear that they spent more time in confessing sin than we commonly do?

Does not their confession lend an energy to their prayers for Divine mercy and forgiveness? And is it not so with us? Why, the moments when I have felt brought into closest and most loving fellowship with God have been moments succeeding to time spent in humiliation, confession, and self-abasement. It is then that the heart grows tender, and that the mercy-seat seems most accessible; it is then that prayer seems to have its clearest way to the throne, and that the answer seems to come most audibly back to us. And surely, surely, we stand upon the line of the great saints of the Old Covenant and the great saints of the New when we join with our brethren and sisters in Christ throughout the world to-day in confessing our own personal sins. If we do ill by hiding our sins, and thus aggravate our guilt, do we not well by confessing them, and pleading the promise in 1 John i., which I have already quoted?

Well now, if this duty be important and characteristic of the new life, if it be a part of the deepest instinct of that life, then it follows that we ought to do what we are now doing with all the thoroughness that we can. In order to this, let us remember that confession to be thorough must be personal. We are many in this gathering; but, if our confession is to count for anything, each one must confess for himself as if he were the only person present.

And then, besides this personal element in our confession, is it not clear that there should be definiteness about our sin? We should not indulge in vague generalities. We should not dismiss this matter of our sin in vague terms when we do that which our subject admonishes us, and when we are bidden to search our hearts. No; let us find out what the mischief is—"the sin that doth most easily beset us." Let us go with that particular sin to God in order that we may make direct, definite, and specific confession—confession that will have some spiritual virtue in it. How much this is emphasised in Scripture. I was turning to a passage just now (Leviticus v.) to refresh my memory. You will find that the man who took an oath without knowing the substance, and found himself committed to it, the inspired writer says: "He shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing"—taking that specific act of his and carrying it to God in confession. You will remember that the Israelites, when they came to Samuel, after having asked a king, did not indulge in general confession, but they said: "We have sinned against the Lord in that we have asked a king." Let us bear in mind these Scriptural examples, and endeavour at this time to make our confession of sin as definite and specific as it may well be.

And let the confession be full and comprehensive. Not simply up to the standard of our consciousness at the moment. Our consciousness is not the final standard. The final standard is God's Word. And when we confess our sins, should we not do it with an open Bible, searching to see what God says about sin, what the law of God is with regard to sin, an in order to discover our deficiencies. We have, I say, not to confess simply up to the measure of our human consciousness, but up to the measure of the divine standard itself.

Then let us remember, as a last thing, that confession is to be made to God; not primarily to one another, but primarily to God. David in Psalm xxxii. makes this beautifully clear: "I acknowledged my sin unto Thee and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin." I am sure if the Holy Ghost help us to go in confession to God this morning, just in this way, personally, with definiteness and fullness, up to the measure of the standard of God's Word, and of God Himself, we shall experience the cleansing of which this Scripture so expressly speaks. Prayer for cleansing will then very properly follow personal and entire confession of sin. Great will then be the benefits to be expected from the exercise in which we are occupied. It will keep our repentance fresh. I do not regard repentance as an episode marking the commencement of the Christian life, and marking none of its further stages. It seems to me that repentance covers the whole Christian life, and is one of the choice graces and works of the Holy Ghost in the Christian's soul. And so I have full sympathy with the words of good old Rowland Hill, to the effect that if he were permitted to drop a tear as he entered the portals of the City of God it would be a tear in that he parted for ever from a beloved and helpful companion, viz., Christian Repentance.

It does seem to me that this confession will help to keep repentance fresh, and it will help to water the roots of true humility, and make it grow. One of the graces of the Holy Spirit is that of humility. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble." Perhaps, as children of God, we do not set such store upon this grace of humility as our Father Himself does. Confession will water the roots of this grace, and make religious life grow full and deep.

This brings us to the cleansing of which our subject speaks. Some talk of the cleansing of the blood of Christ as if it were a new discovery. Is it not the daily experience of the soul? And, when we confess, day by day we experience the full force of the present tense. What an infinite blessing that this text stands in the present tense, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth." Now, this moment, believers in Jesus Christ, the blood is applied to you and to me for this great purpose of cleansing. While we confess the application goes on and the cleansing is being realised.

And so, as the last benefit of which I shall speak, there will come to us, and I deeply believe this, by means of confession and cleansing, an enduement of power for service. Having learned the secret of access to God, we shall have discovered the secret of access to men; and we shall be able to speak more effectually about the efficacious power of the blood of Christ from our daily experience of what that blood is doing for us. And so there will come to us power for service as the fruit of our exercises to-day.

> "Thus the Holy Spirit answers
> Our poor weeping on our knees;
> Grants us healings sweetly hidden
> Like the fragrance on the breeze.
> Soul restoring, soul entrancing,
> Fresh from the eternal seas."

Thus invigorated we are braced and ready to do God's work wherever we may be.

May God grant us all these things; may the Holy Spirit overshadow the world's gatherings; may our hearts be tender and contrite before the Lord, and may the blood of sprinkling be applied to us all.

"A GODLY SEED."

Address by Mr. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, At Steinway Hall, Wednesday, Jan. 9.

OUR Lord has said: "Make the tree good, and its fruit shall be good." Have you ever pondered the answer which God gives to the question, which He himself proposes in Malachi, Wherefore did He make both one? "That He might seek a godly seed." In order that the children should be godly, their parents must be so; and hence the New Testament rule, which admits of no exception, "Only in the Lord" (1 Cor. vii. 39).

Four memorable and decisive words. They are a standing direction to all who fear God and love Christ, in connection with that most important step and relationship in life—marriage. I suppose that next to conversion there is nothing more important than marriage; and it is in this connection that the precept is laid down for the guidance of the Church which admits of no departure—only in the Lord. The Christian must not vary his practice from this. The union must not be between the living and the dead; between the divine and the undivine; between that which is born of God and that which is of the flesh, and passes away, and is of the wicked one. It must be a union of the godly with the godly; and, in order to have God's blessing resting upon it, it must be only in the Lord.

In taking a retrospect of a ministry extending over thirty years, I have not spoken on this subject more than once or twice; and yet it has been often present in my thoughts and has had an immense influence in regulating my conduct, as of course it ought to have. As one getting on in life, I would press this point on two classes—on Christian parents who have so much to do in guiding the choice of their grown-up children in this matter, and on the young people themselves who are concerned, that they be directed by this divine motto: "Only in the Lord."

What numberless instances we could refer to, had we the time and opportunity, of the evil results which have followed the transgression of this apostolic injunction. I have before my mind one particular family, and I might allude to many—for it has been my lot to mingle with a great number in thirty years and to see behind the scenes—in which there was a wrong step taken at the outset, and which has continued to bear disastrous fruit to this day.

And then, on the other hand, how richly has the blessing of God descended upon such marriages as have been entered into in conformity with his mind and will. I urge upon Christian parents to use all their influence in this direction, and I admonish the unmarried to resolve, by the grace of God, that they will never transgress this precept.

As a Christian parent, the second point I would urge is that we should ask the Lord that all our offspring may be his. Indeed, before we become parents, it would not be amiss to ask the Lord that, if we should become parents, our children may be his. It was thus with myself. I remember many a time breathing this prayer to God: "O God, if Thou shouldst make me a parent, let my children all be Thine. Never let me be the parent of a child, and then that child be excluded from Thee for ever." The Lord hears such prayers. Then, from the dawn of their existence, devote them to the Lord.

Before coming here I took up this Bible (one of several that have grown old by use), and glancing at it, my eye fell upon the date of the birth of a dear child now far away. Immediately following the name and hour of his birth is the record that, with his first cry, my prayers ascended to heaven for his salvation. I remember well the place and the hour, in Paris, years ago. Directly under that entry is another, recording the baptism of that child, fourteen years and five months afterwards, in connection with his profession of a personal saving faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. This is not an isolated instance. I could mention instance after instance.

In my Bible, before coming here, I also fell upon some lines written years ago in connection with the illness of a darling child whose life hung trembling in the balance. I was a way off, in the north, holding evangelistic services, but the throne of grace was open and accessible; and I remember one Sunday afternoon, in agony of spirit, going to that throne in behalf of our child, who was almost gone. That child had taught her father lessons of love, taught him perhaps deeper lessons of love than he had ever learned before; because children have a wonderful faculty for developing latent affection and capacities for affection. My petitions were answered, and that child was rescued from the jaws of death and brought into the fold of Christ. And now, of our eight children, four are his on earth and four are with Him in heaven.

I want to urge upon Christian parents this, that they not only devote their children to the Lord in prayer and faith, but that they use means to bring them to Christ both by example and precept. Never be a stumbling-block in the eyes of your children. Do not make religion a burden to them or a weariness. Put forward its attractive aspects. Never repel, repulse, weary, or disgust; but attract, woo, and win them to Christ. Exhibit Christ to them in the power of his grace and love. I recollect, at times, being impressed with the folly of continually pursuing and harassing children with prohibitions. There are parents who, in their desire to keep their children right, are perpetually forbidding this and that. The word most commonly upon the lips of multitudes of people who have to do with the young, especially with children who are very young, is DON'T. "Don't do this and that." They are constantly repressing, forbidding, prohibiting. Now, there is another far sweeter and better, an equally if not more useful word; and that is the word DO. Instead of continally saying Don't do this and that, substitute the word Do. Instead of positive precepts, or at all events accompanying them, let the power of example be set before the children and our growing youth. Lead the way yourselves where you desire them to follow; throwing yourselves into their occupations, and by sympathy, communion, and the various means which we cannot stop to describe, become harbingers in paths of practical wisdom and holiness.

Then, as regards leading children to the Lord. There are many Christian parents who satisfy themselves with an occasional exhortation, or setting the Gospel before their families in a general way. Love and wisdom would lead, I think, to a different course. There is a wonderful power in personal influence, in conversation, in dealing closely and privately with particular souls, and in choosing the right time and occasion.

I remember a circle of Christian people who all grew up in the fear of the Lord. One of them lived to be an authoress, died a triumphant death, and is with the Lord I doubt not. How were those children brought to the Lord? By a loving and wise father, whose wife was gone at the time, and he had to take her place as well as his own. At the close of each day it was his habit to pray with his children in secret, one by one, and he won them for Jesus.

I remember, years ago, in a distant town, many and many a time, in the evening, taking our dear children aside, when very young, for private prayer. Well do I recollect the room and the hymns that we sang. I am sometimes reminded of them now. A dear one said to me only a short time ago, "Father, do you remember how we used to sing,

"Jesus is our Shepherd,
Wiping every tear;
Folded in his bosom,
We have nought to fear."

All these have been brought to the Lord, and some are now the means of bringing others to Jesus. One came home last Sunday evening and said, "Father, ten more have rejoiced in finding Jesus, where I have been speaking." And another said to me, only last night, "Father, it is in my heart to become a missionary."

Next to our own salvation, the greatest blessing, it seems to me, which we can enjoy or possess, as Christian parents, is the salvation of those whom God has made so dear to us, and has made our own. Their conversion is our own over again. It is a sort of repetition of our salvation. Seek, then, this blessing. Seek it wisely and assiduously. Bring the Gospel, in all its clearness and tenderness, to bear upon their souls, and God will bless them. Then dedicate them to Him. Say, "Lord, if Thou wilt call them to go here or there, to do this and that, I give them to Thee. Make what use of them Thou wilt, so that they may be made a blessing to others."

Time prevents any extended reference to many of the large and important questions brought before us in the syllabus. In regard to our dealings with the vicious and neglected young, I may say that only yesterday I was grieved and cast down by seeing two young lads who had been brought under Christian influence, but who had not, I am afraid, been well brought up, pass into the hands of justice; and this morning they will be brought up before the Court and no doubt condemned to prison for dishonesty.

What numbers of young people there are in this great city who are just living in the midst of influences which tend to drive them to destruction! What are we doing to bring the young around us, who are badly placed and badly circumstanced in regard to spiritual matters, to Jesus? God help us to exert ourselves in their behalf.

Then, as to the public schools and universities. Are not many of these poisoned fountains, which send forth poisonous streams? Are not Christian parents very responsible as regards the guidance of their sons in this matter of education? What a serious thing to send an intelligent son, who may become an influence and power in the world, to some poisonous or poisoned stream of education—to some university where he may be led into infidelity or immorality! What care should be taken by Christian parents to guard their children from such baneful influences. There are means of doing this. Education can be obtained without exposing children to such dangers. God help us to be wise; and may He, in his mercy, purify these fountains of educational influence increasingly, which are, to a large extent, alas! at the present time, poisoned by worldliness and scepticism.

The Lord give us now much of the spirit of prayer and expectation, and enlarge our hearts, while we especially bring to Him, in earnest supplication, the children whom He has given to us.

OUR DUTY TOWARDS THE CHILDREN.

Address by Dr. BARNARDO,

At Centenary Hall, Wednesday, Jan. 9.

In considering the topic for to-day, I propose, for the sake of definiteness and also to secure brevity, to express my views under three heads. First, I desire to dwell upon the Christian's duty towards the children of his own family; then I will say something upon our obligations towards children not our own, but who are in some sense or other entrusted to our care; and lastly, if there be time, I will refer to our heavy responsibilities towards the vast number of neglected children who crowd our streets.

With reference to the children of our own families, it seems to me that very much argument is not required to prove that our first and most bounden duty is to seek by all and every means their early and real conversion to God. Yet notwithstanding the widespread revival of religion and the remarkable blessing given of late to agencies for good among children, I must warn you all against entertaining the infidel notions still, alas! so prevalent as to the impossibility of quite young children being savingly brought to God. It seems to me that such sceptical views derive their strength chiefly from three sources:—

(1) Direct Scripture promises which embrace the conversion and blessing of the young are deliberately overlooked or misapplied. I earnestly ask those here who have never thought much on this subject to search the Scriptures for the plain promises of God, which comprehend the bestowment of blessing upon young children. I am satisfied that those who do this in the spirit of humility and prayer will feel astonished at the immense mass of Scripture which they have overlooked. I will only refer to two of these which are most widely and generally known. "Thou and thy house" is connected in Acts xvi. with the blessing of personal conversion, and that wider statement that "the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call," seems to sum up in one all the encouragements to faith contained in the Old and New Testaments.

(2) The second source of this error is doubtless our failure to learn the lessons taught by the life-story of some of the most useful and honoured servants of God. Many of these, far too numerous to mention, have declared that their first religious impressions were received in childhood, not a few of them at periods when according to the popular notion conversion is impossible.

In such cases the precious treasures of consecrated lives filled with blessed fruit to God, to his Church, and to the world, have been, so far as we can see, the result of seed sown and reaped in childhood. Nor should we forget the testimony of useful and eminent ministers of the Church now living, that of the many conversions which have occurred under their own observation, among the most stable and fruitful have been those of which the very young were the subject.

(3) But unbelief upon the subject of the conversion of children chiefly arises from ignoring the fact that all true conversion whether of adults or children is the result of the sovereign influence and power of the Holy Ghost. Did we recognise this truth sufficiently how would any of us dare to limit his action? Did we really recognise practically as well as theoretically that it is the power of the Holy Ghost which can alone renew the heart, would we not with more earnestness than we have ever yet bestowed upon the matter seek from God's hands for our children, that which He is so willing to bestow?

But let us now suppose that all here are convinced of the possibility of effecting the conversion of children, and of the desirability of seeking the conversion of our own. The next question is, What steps shall we take to effect this result? What hindrances must we remove, which, all unconscious to ourselves perhaps, stand in the way of blessing? Or, what course shall we adopt where conversion has been obtained, or where, from causes we cannot discern, it is for a season delayed? In the first place, I am satisfied if we are sincere in seeking the conversion of our children, we must begin with ourselves. We are all professedly Christian people, but there must be something more than an ordinary profession, there must be thorough reality, deeply toned piety embodied and illustrated in the lives of the parents. Do I need to say much more to impress upon you all the very deep importance of this? Will not the families of many professors of religion point the moral of my remarks? Where there are, for example, habitual displays of ill-temper at home, or where there is worldliness in talk and action frequently yielded to, or where even the religious duties are performed in a formal and lifeless way, how can we hope that in such a household anything like vital godliness will at an early age find a place in the children's hearts and lives.

Furthermore, I would suggest to each parent who desires the conversion of his children prayer for and with the children, beginning at the very earliest possible age and making each incident and little trouble of the child's early life the subject of fervent prayer. Let our little ones from the first dawn of consciousness have thrown around them the sacred influences of a mother's and father's prayers, let the child's faults and failings be brought to God daily, so that into its young heart and memory there shall sink deeper than any other lesson the belief that there is real power in direct reference and appeal to God for everything. The New Testament furnishes pathetic and powerful examples of the resistless efficacy of a parent's prayers; a ruler of the synagogue pleaded not in vain for his little daughter at the point of death, the Syro-Phenician mother took the position of a "dog" that she might carry a "crumb" of comfort from Christ's hands to her child, and the father of the son "possessed with a devil" was not satisfied until Jesus said of his boy in never to be forgotten words, "bring him hither unto Me." We parents have to-day to deal with the same tender Heart, in the fuller light of completer promises. Shall we miss the blessing because of our prayerlessness and unbelief?

Need I add that there must be also careful instruction in the Word of God continued from day to day? This work should not be delegated to others. It must, and ought where possible, be done by the parents themselves. A godly mother will know how to make the Bible delightful to her children, and the Lord's Day the happiest of the seven. Impressions thus created are never wholly effaced. Of course, in connection with such instruction in the Word of God, there must be inculcated absolute obedience to its precepts. Indeed, if the reading is to be of any value, there must be no hesitancy as to this, no question of expediency being ever allowed to neutralise in a child's heart the positive commands of God's Word.

Where the foregoing has been regularly and prayerfully carried out, it may only be needful to add, that parents who seek the conversion of their children should take opportunity to set before them in simple words the Gospel of Christ, and to urge it upon their acceptance and faith. I would say to such parents, do not fail to let your voice be the very first that shall call your little ones to the Saviour. Of all the stories which Mr. Moody has so effectively told, nothing has been more touching to me than the narrative which he has somewhere given of a dying child who soothed his father's regret at his impending loss by the beautiful words—"Father, when I die I will go straight up to the Lord Jesus, and tell Him that ever since I can remember you have been trying to lead me to Him." It must be a precious reflection to a parent if he can feel that his child owes its direct conversion to God to his faithful ministry. But a word of warning on this point is also necessary. By all means when the proper time comes, seize the right moment to speak to your children, but whatsoever you do, take care that it is the right moment. The little doors of young hearts are easily and soon opened, but they should never be forced. Let us take care lest we thrust the door ajar in our eager haste. Hot-house plants have, I admit, the earliest bloom, but how little qualified are such forced saplings to face the wintry weather of our bleak climate. So has it been with much of the family religion which has come under my notice. Many earnest people have failed of the very object they sought by pressing unduly upon their children the profession of a faith which they scarcely felt or knew the meaning of. The children yielded under the influence of a loving parent before their hearts had really responded to the voice of Jesus Christ, and when the time of temptation arose they fell away because there was no root in them.

To those parents who have already had the joy of seeing their children brought to the Saviour, or who profess that it is the aim of their life to bring them to Christ, I would earnestly say, "Do not now neutralise all your efforts by educating them as if they had to live for this world only." How often have ambitious projects or worldly desires for the advancement of their children on the part of professing Christian parents led to undesirable companionships being sought after, and doubtful acquirements pursued, which later on have proved but snares and pitfalls, often leading to lives of worldliness and even of open sin?

Assuredly the duty is incumbent on all who are heads of families of creating around their children a pure and holy atmosphere. How much sorrow has resulted from neglect in this particular it is impossible to say. Numberless evils are most subtle in their approaches, and find a footing in our households and in our children's hearts almost before we are aware. A look, a careless word, a pernicious suggestion, all easily made, are soon forgotten by us, but are often treasured up in a child's mind or heart when better things have been effaced.

How, then, shall we proceed in our efforts to diffuse a perfectly pure and holy atmosphere around our growing boys and girls? In the first instance, the most carefnl watchfulness on the part of the parents should be exercised. It was while the "servants slept" that the enemy sowed tares. At the very earliest age a sinful thought may be implanted in a child's heart through the unwatchfulness of its parents, which may blight the fairest hopes. Moreover, let us remember that our children inherit the evils which we deplore in ourselves. Sinful habits, perhaps, indulged in by parents before conversion, are often bequeathed to their children born afterwards, and lie latent, ready to spring up into being under the potent influence of neglect. Let, therefore, a very watchful eye be kept upon the earliest manifestation of tendencies, the existence of which, if ignored or neglected in childhood, may prove a life-long hindrance.

To give this watchful oversight its fullest scope, I would suggest to all, mothers especially, the absolute necessity of winning their children's complete confidence at the very earliest age. If successful in this, nothing will be kept from you. The first wrong deed or word, or even thought—yea, all the secrets of its young heart—will be brought as a matter of course to the mother who has early learnt to open the heart-gate with the golden key of love. But I am bound to ask, how can this be followed out, or indeed any of the counsel given, by mothers who are so absorbed in "other duties" that they can give but little time to their children? Has even religious work or the so-called "claims of society" any demands upon a mother so imperative, or, if she did but know it, so blessedly full of sacred duty and privilege, as those created by her thrice holy relations to her children? To my mind the answer is so obvious that I only put the question to awaken reflection in those who may have tried to quiet their uneasy consciences by fallacious reasoning.

To those who have followed me so far with interest, I would add, suffer none to have charge of or contact with your children, of whose uprightness, truthfulness, and higher morality you are not absolutely sure. As one who has had for years much and varied experience with large numbers of children, and who am also myself a parent, I would press upon Christian parents the desirability of obtaining at all costs godly people to have the oversight of their young children. Far better will it be for Christian mothers to put up with the unskilful ways and temporary ignorance of a truly pious and godly maid than to possess the most accomplished nurse if the latter is careless upon matters affecting truth and honour.

I need hardly say that parents who are alive to the necessity of care on these points will allow no book nor paper of doubtful value to appear anywhere within the reach of their children. Many magazines and books of boasted religious character contain much in them of a hurtful tendency. The provision of pure, instructive, and interesting books and papers, and of thoroughly healthful occupation at an early age, has a great deal to do with the true education and successful up-bring ng of young children. I have no sympathy with those who would banish all works of fiction from the nursery and school-room library. The evils of fiction lie in its unreality and grossness. Select books pure in suggestion and expression, and illustrative of real life; give under proper restrictions scope to the imaginative and poetical faculties of your children, and if you have not starved their young minds with hard facts you need not fear the infusion of a little wholesome fiction into their reading. The Pilgrim's Progress, for example, may be a safe means by which to feed appetites that at a certain age crave for "Giant Killers" and all their wondrous exploits.

On the next point which I feel it my duty to bring before you, I am aware that there is considerable difference of opinion, but none the less would I steadfastly urge the following as of unspeakable importance. Do not allow your boys and girls to grow up in utter ignorance of the temptations they are sure to meet, and which they will require strength to resist sooner perhaps than you are aware. Leave to no one but yourself, allow no other voice but yours to inform your children upon subjects which at an early age they begin to manifest curiosity about. This information, if withheld by you, who have the opportunity of conveying it in the wisest and best form, will certainly be obtained from other sources, to your intense sorrow and their hurt. That embarrassing questions are sometimes put we all know, but these may be robbed of their chief difficulty if on the first occasion the mother will suggest that all questions of such a sort should be put to her when she and the young investigator are alone. Then an affectionate mother will find less difficulty in replying to the awakened curiosity of her child. But great care must be taken, if questions are really asked which you do not feel prepared to answer, or where you are satisfied it is better to withhold for the present the information required, that you do not under any circumstances deceive your child. The attempt to put a child off who asks an awkward question by a statement that is not true always fails. Apart from the wrongness of it, in a little time the child will learn perhaps from others the deception practised upon it, and its confidence in that mother or father must be shaken. I would suggest in such a case that if you find you are asked a question you cannot or do not desire to answer, you should take the bold expedient of saying to the child whose confidence you have won, and who trusts you implicitly, "My child, I will tell you more by-and-bye upon this subject, when you are a little older and can understand it better, but don t ask anyone else about it; I will be sure to tell you later on."

Very many parents will obtain valuable aid in dealing with children sufficiently old to go to school by means of the little book which I hold in my hand. It is one of the White Cross series, and is published by Hatchards, of Piccadilly. It is entitled "Letters to a Son preparatory to a School Life," by the Rev. F. Burdett Money-Coutts. I do not say in every case that it will be wise to put that book into your boy's hands, nor do I say that every letter in the book is such as you would write to your child. Doubtless there is much in it that you cannot exactly follow, but I think that valuable and important hints as to your general demeanour upon these subjects towards your children who are going to school, or are already at school, can be obtained from this little tract, which I heartily commend, with its fellows of the same series, to the perusal of all parents. By wise, vigorous, and right action in this respect you may save your children contact with pollution, which in [a hundred forms will meet them in their school life, and which will be all the more dangerous because it is kept a secret, and whether indulged in or resisted is seldom made the subject of confidence between parent and child.

There are many other points upon which I would wish to dwell, but my time is passing so rapidly that I am anxious to speak a few words upon our obligations towards children not our own who are committed in some senses to our care.

Under this head are embraced the obligations of schoolmasters, schoolmistresses, teachers, tutors, governesses, heads of institutions, the clergy and ministers of all churches. With regard to the latter it is perhaps hardly expected that I should say very much to-day. I will only suggest what has long been upon my heart, that the children ought to be remembered a little more in the ordinary ministrations of all our churches. I am satisfied that this could be done with great profit to the general congregation, to the children, to the parents who go with them, and to the ministers themselves. And I would urge also upon pastors of churches the wisdom and expediency of occasionally calling the very serious attention of parents in their congregation to some of the themes which I have so very hastily glanced at in the early part of this address.

In offering a few remarks to teachers and instructors of youth, very much that I have already said to parents will apply to them. A few points, however, require to be intensified, and this I will do with great brevity. Heads of schools should be most careful in the engagement of assistants and servants, that persons only of pure and upright character should be engaged. No amount of scholastic attainment, or of general efficiency for their work in other respects, can compensate for the terrible injury effected in a school by the admission of a master or of a domestic servant of questionable private character. Their communications, always made stealthily and under cover of secresy, rapidly spread the horrible malaria of impurity throughout a school. No one can imagine the untold horrors which would be revealed by a little careful examination of some of the most vaunted educational establishments for children of the better class.

In my peculiar position, I have for years past been the confidant of many young men, and I have also been the recipient of sad stories from mothers and fathers with regard to their children of both sexes, and I could give facts, if this were the time or place, connected with many schools occupying a high position for their supposed religious tone, where the grossest neglect on the part of those in power has led to widespread and terrible corruption of morals among the unfortunate young people committed to their care. A young gentleman, quite recently brought to Christ, told me of a school well known for its religious pretensions where such carelessness was the rule with reference to the private character of the female domestics, that he assured me there were few lads in it who reached the age of fourteen who were not familiar with the worst vices. Very many of these were promising young fellows, the sons of persons in the well-to-do classes, yet it was a notorious fact that every year many boys were dismissed from that school for grave impropriety, and that others subsequently went out into life from it so depraved, that they could not fail to spread abroad the contagion of habits formed in the school.

In view of this and similar statements, which have come to me from many quarters, I earnestly beseech all who have charge of the education of youth, to see to it that your school assistants, and especially that your female domestic servants, shall be persons of spotless character, of unquestioned purity of life, and also that the watchful supervision of your schools shall be undertaken and maintained with a deeper sense of your personal responsibility to God for the awful charge you have, perhaps too lightly, undertaken.

I would urge upon all schoolmasters, and those having the educational charge of groups of children, to weed out at once from among their company any child that they have reason to fear is corrupt in conversation or act. Evils of this kind require prompt measures, for you will soon learn that they are never long confined to the child who brings them into the school. By words, by looks, by acts, by innuendoes, by books and papers, by pictures, and by many other ways well known to everyone who has frequented a large private or public school, impure thoughts are disseminated and evil conduct indulged in, until by the force of habit the whole character is irretrievably ruined. Only one thing, therefore, remains to be done by the head of a school where such evil is discovered: weed out all the infected children. Treat it as you would an epidemic of smallpox; let no consideration of loss or gain induce you to retain a child so affected in the school for which you are responsible.

My time is now fairly spent, yet I do not like to close without adding a few remarks upon the last point I suggested at the outset; our responsibility towards the vast number of neglected children who crowd our streets. First of all, let me impress upon every one who hears me, that we have responsibilities towards these poor children, and that we cannot shake them off by the summary method of trying to forget their very existence. Who that has drunk in anything of our Master's spirit, who that has heard his tender words of invitation to the children, who that has seen in imagination his arms clasped around the little ones who clustered at his knee during the days of his flesh, or has watched Him taking a child and putting that child in the midst of his disciples, and teaching them lessons by the little one, will believe that we can be true, right, faithful servants of that Master, if we live forgetful of the fact that when He said "suffer the children to come unto Me, and forbid them not," He certainly did not exclude the homeless waifs and strays of our great cities. No—these must be gathered in by the loving hands of Christ's Church. They must be sheltered from the perils to which they are exposed. Their young feet must be guided into paths of holiness and virtue, and their hearts must be gladdened with the words of welcome which Jesus gave us to give them, if we would ever think of them and be happy.

Moreover, I would earnestly urge upon you all, as a means of education and blessing to your own children, that you should link on to their lives some other little ones, now friendless and forlorn. Thus, while you and your household are the means of blessing to the homeless waifs and strays, the recipients of your bounty, the children of your own family will be led at an early age to cultivate feelings of love and unselfish sympathy for other little ones in a less happy position. As the former grow up, the gracious influence of good works in which they themselves have engaged will pervade and hallow their lives. Who can tell what may be the result of thus leading the members of our families while young to imitate Him who "went about doing good?"

PRAYER FOR THE CHILDREN.

Address by Rev. Mr. FORRESTER,

At Clapham Presbyterian Church, Jan. 9.

THE main object of our prayers this evening is for the family and for the young. I do not think there can be any object for which our petitions can go up to God on high more important, and which is likely to bring down larger blessing upon us as a people, than those which thus flow from our hearts on behalf of the family. The family, remember, is the unit of society, and it is the foundation from which not only social life proceeds, but from which the morality and spirituality of a nation and of a community must flow. I believe myself that if we are to have a revival in our country it must show itself most distinctly and forcibly in the revival of the worship of God. I remember hearing from my own father, a Scotchman, that in his early days there was scarcely a household, however humble, throughout the length and breadth of the land, in which family worship was not offered up day and night. I do not know whether this is so still in Scotland, but I am very sure it is not so in England, and certainly it is not so throughout the length and breadth of this great centre of Christendom—our vast metropolis. I am sure of this, and I know you will testify to it by your own experience, that unless we can bring the fathers and mothers to own God, and to say, "As for me and my household, we will serve the Lord," we cannot rationally expect that the rising generation shall ever follow in the footsteps of their Redeemer, or go forth to battle against the tide of infidelity and evil which we are sure to meet with in the coming age. Let us remember that God blessed the house of Obed-Edom because the ark rested there. Let us be assured of this, that if we want a blessing for our family and a blessing for the young we must have the ark in our home, and this blessed book must be the guide-book for old and young alike.

I do not know what your experience is of the young, but I must say that if some accounts I hear of what is called the criminal class be true, that class is on the decrease; but I have great misgiving whether the irreligious class of the young is on the decrease; from my observation of schools and the young, and conversation with those who deal largely with them, I fear there is springing up amongst the young a strong spirit of irreverence—irreverence for those above them, and irreverence for Him who is highest over all, even for God. I cannot help seeing that in our Sabbath-school; I have faced it recently—an increasing spirit of irreverence. I was conversing with a missionary who had been thirty years in Battersea, and I asked him his comparative experience thirty years ago and now. He said: "I never met, sir, when I was down here thirty years ago, with what I meet now: there was much ungodliness, but there was never such a spirit of unruliness and of utter 'insolence' (I think that was the word) in the young as I meet in the present day. They seem devoid of any spirit of reverence, and of any sense of obedience to authority." Now I do not know whether that is the general experience, but I confess I fear there is something in it.

Then we hear from other quarters—and I can testify to this myself—there is a spirit of corruption afloat amongst us, that if we only knew it in its depths in some of the more degraded homes, it would fill us with horror. I dare not speak myself of what I know of the vicious practices of the young in some of the families at our doors; I dare not speak of it. We are thinking of the cry of London. But the horrors of these homes are not in the dilapidated buildings, or in the rags and misery which are seen outward to the eye; but the source of all this outward misery and deep degradation, which calls for our earnest compassion and earnest awaking to a sense of its peril, is the moral foulness which exists there—the utter lack of godliness which exists there. If we want to cleanse our homes and get better dwellings for our poor, let us try and create better dwellers, and then we may be sure that the homes will correspond with the inhabitants.

Let us pray, then, to-night that God may be pleased throughout this week of prayer to keep before his united people the families of our great metropolis and the whole world at large; and may our own desire be, dear friends, in our own family circles, to see brothers, and sisters, and children all one family in God. What a blessing rests upon such a home. Poverty cannot blight it, for those there are eternally rich; sorrow can scarce darken it, for there is the sweet light of God's holy presence, and the abiding comfort of the Holy Spirit. Death cannot darken it, for although it will take away one and another from that blessed circle, it will but transplant them to our Father's house of many mansions; and those who therefore sorrow, do not sorrow as those who have no hope for those that sleep in Jesus; they have the sure and certain hope of the glorious reunion in the house of many mansions, and those who now sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him. Let us pray more earnestly still that God may more than ever sanctify our homes by his abiding presence.

CHRIST AND THE CHURCH.

Address by Rev. FILMER SULIVAN,

At Steinway Hall, Thursday, January 10.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without Me ye can do nothing."—John xv. 5.

OUR attention is directed to-day to the Church of Christ, of which we have a beautiful figure in this familiar passage from John's Gospel. Let us look at some of the thoughts that seem to suggest themselves. And first, there is evidently the thought of union—the union of the branches with the Vine, the union of believers in and with the Lord Jesus Christ. This union was, as we know, purposed of the Father in the ages that have gone by when He chose his people in Christ, and gave them to Christ.

It is evident through all the work of Christ, for they are one with Him in the death and in the burial, in the resurrection, in the ascension, and in the glory.

Not only is this a union purposed of God, but it is a union effected by God. Thank God the union does exist, and it is his work. Is not every believer here a witness? Were we not once wandering away from God, afar off, and have we not been brought nigh by the precious blood? And is this not true of everyone who believes throughout the world? Is it not just the work of the blessed Spirit of the living God who hath quickened us? Has He not been the agent, and the Word of God the instrument, so that by the Word and by the Spirit we have been born of God, and united by faith, a living faith, with a living Saviour?

Thus it is a purposed union, and a union effected by God, and presently it shall be a union manifested. God desires it should be manifested now. It must grieve the Spirit when it is not manifested. It must be grieving to the Spirit when party cries go up, and it must rejoice the heart of Jesus when we recognise one another and love one another as brethren in Christ Jesus, rejoicing in the common salvation, and looking up to our one Saviour—one in Him. But the day of the manifestation of the sons of God is drawing near. Oh, let us be looking for it! let us be preparing for it! When Christ shall come, and all his saints with Him, then He will come to be admired, to be wondered at, in all them that believe on that day.

But whilst there is the thought evidently of union here, there is, I think, lying upon the surface, the thought of variety. Unquestionably there is union, but there is not uniformity. Is it desired? Is it intended? Go and study any beautiful vine growing in its loveliness, and I ask you, will you ever find two branches growing exactly alike? And this law which we find in the natural world pertains in the spiritual world. If, in the natural world, there are no two blades of grass alike, no two leaves alike, no two branches alike—are we to expect a stereotyped Christianity? A vine with all its branches exactly alike would be a very ugly one. It would be a vine of man's making, and not of God's creation. No, there is this variety, and, therefore, let us rejoice that there is this variety. Surely we may learn this everywhere. Take merely the musical instrument leading us in our hymns; supposing every note were the same, where would be the harmony?

And does not the Spirit of the living God breath forth a beautiful harmony throughout his Church, and is not the Lord Jesus Christ glorified in the very diversity of the branches, the diversity of gifts? Surely one branch has not to boast itself against another branch, but rather to recognise the grace of God in each, rather to recognise the Christ in each, and, thank God, amongst other things, for the variety as well as for the community. Evidently there is another thought, and that is dependence. Look at a vine. Those branches do not depend upon themselves, and they do not depend on one another, though, indeed, there is such a thing as a beautiful sympathy and a very precious health, but they depend each one on the vine alone. And you and I know something of this, but have we not to learn it more? I cannot depend on Christ for you, or you for me, not ministers for people, or people for ministers; this thing must not be done by proxy. "My soul (saith the Psalmist) hangeth only on Thee," and that must be exactly the dependence. As each of the branches depends and hangs only on the vine, so you and I must hang simply and altogether on Jesus, and let the Vine bear up the weight thereof. Is it not able? So let us depend on Him. All our resources are in Him, and all our supplies are from Him. Let us be looking to this—the hanging upon Christ simply and wholly; not simply for salvation,—no, He hath saved us,—but hanging upon Him hourly, daily, moment by moment, for the grace we need, for the work to which He calls us, or for the suffering to which He may appoint us; in any case, fruit that He would bring forth by us; and then we should be able to say, as using another figure, that "my fresh springs are in Thee."

Then, as there is the thought of dependence so essentially connected with this life, there is the thought of growth. There are wonderful powers of extension in a thriving vine. How we have seen it in the south, how we have seen it running its branches here and its tendrils there, and spreading marvellously; and so we have the expression, "grow as the vine," or we speak of it as "luxurious in its growth." You remember the vine brought up out of Egypt. It is said of it that it "filled the land"—and has not this vine been brought up out of Egypt? Has it not been redeemed—the branches, for I speak of these—with more precious blood than the blood of the lamb that was slain? Is it not costly, is it not precious, and is it not the purpose of God that it should not merely fill a niche here, or a little niche there, but that it should run over the world, run over every obstruction, until it fills not this land or that land, not this community or that community, but fills all lands? He will be glorified in his people everywhere.

Then, I would say, the lesson for us amongst others is this—let us yield ourselves to Jesus, in a more complete and full surrender. So shall his power and his love be put forth through us and by us, and thus, this very year, his kingdom shall be enlarged and increased by us in the power of his own extension. And that leads us to another thought evidently here, and that is fruitfulness. Clearly the use of a vine, the chief use, is to bring forth fruit, and this Vine of which we speak—Christ and his Church—is no barren Vine; but there is a difference given here in the branches. We read in the text of "fruit," and we read of "more fruit," and we read of "much fruit"—different degrees of fruitfulness in the branches. Now we are told expressly that it is the Father's desire that He should be glorified in the bringing forth of much fruit, and I ask you, dear child of God, does not this just account for the dealings of the Husbandman, and the work of the Husbandman with you, and how He has been taking you in hand, not because He did not care for you, not because He did not love you, but just because He did love you, and wished you to bring forth much fruit that He might be glorified. If we really not merely recognised this, but were fully persuaded of it in our own souls, would it not enable us, by his grace, to yield up ourselves more trustfully, even to his chastening hand, if only this be the result, that He may be glorified in us?

And yet, one or two more thoughts. Surely there is the thought of influence. If in connection with this passage we refer to that well-known one (Hosea xiv.) we read there: "His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon. They that dwell under his shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon." If your own soul is flourishing, if you are one abiding in the Lord Jesus Christ, those who come in contact with you will be obliged to own, whether they like it or not in their own souls, that you have been with Jesus. There must be a very gracious influence from those who abide in Christ.

What a reason, then, to seek for closer communion with Him, not merely for the prosperity of our own souls, but that those who come under our influence may be helped by us. They shall revive, so that, as our soul lifts up its head towards the heaven for the dew of heaven to come down upon it,—abiding in Christ there shall be this gracious influence round and about, and others shall be blessed. And so his word be fulfilled—surely it is true of each, and a word for all—"I will bless thee." Take it for a promise for this new year, and God fulfil it—"I will bless thee; and thou shalt be a blessing." One word more. We see what the final result is. It is all tending to a great result. Everything connected with God is leading to a grand result, the highest possible result, and that is that He may be glorified. Oh, let us be looking forward to this. Let us be desiring this. Let us be seeking this. Let the whole Church be aroused to pray for this more and more; that He may be glorified. I have no doubt that the more self-forgetfulness in the matter of fruit-bearing the better. Do not let us handle the fruit too much, lest we rob it of its bloom.

With two thoughts I conclude. One on attitude, and the other on aspiration. The attitude, Abide in me; the aspiration, Father, glorify Thy name.

WALKING IN THE LIGHT.

Address by Rev. FRANK WHITE,

AT CENTENARY HALL, JAN. 10.

"COME ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord" (Isaiah ii. 5.) It will not weaken, but strengthen, the force of this most precious exhortation in its application to the Church, if we first accord to it its undeniable reference to "the house of Jacob"—the nation of Israel—the descendants of the man who prevailed with the Most High, and handed down to his posterity a blessed testimony to the faithful love of a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God.

The context in which these words are found proves their primary reference to the Jewish nation, and also indicates the time when such language as this can be appropriately addressed to that people. (See Is. ii. 1—3.) Blessed time of peace and rest, a time of light and gladness, when, instead of being stumbled and confounded by what they see and hear of those who profess the name of Christ, the nations shall go joyfully up to the City of the great King to learn his ways and to walk in his paths.

Nor shall they be disappointed, for "out of Sion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Many scriptures speak of this glorious time, when the veil shall be uplifted from the heart of Israel, when the people that now walk in darkness shall see a great light, and they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, on them shall the light shine. Then shall the words of the prophet be brought to pass: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall rise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." (Isaiah lx. 1—3.) Far into this time of blessing for his nation the prophet transports himself, and, standing up in the midst of the people, he breaks forth into the exhortation with which we exhort one another this morning: "O, house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord."

Now to ourselves—and I speak exclusively to the believing people of God present. We meet to-day as those who "hold the Head," who call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord—men and women who have come to the blood of sprinkling, oil-anointed—in whom the Holy Spirit dwells, and to whom God has given the Spirit of adoption, so that they cry "Abba, Father." As such, we say one to another this morning, "Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." I do not preach this word at you, nor do I stand here to urge you to a path I am not seeking to walk in myself. I come to you as a brother in the Lord, to say with all the affection and earnestness I can command, "Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." I say this as the most appropriate thing I could say to you under the present circumstances. I say it because I know of nothing more suitable and seasonable to-day. More, I say it because I believe God has bid me say it.

First, let me notice, this word invites us to fellowship in the truth. It is not, Let me walk in the light of the Lord; it is not, Walk you; it is, Let us walk in the light of the Lord. The exhortation implies oneness, like-mindedness. "How can two walk together except they be agreed?" Do we not need so to address one another? We often hear it said, "individual walk and testimony is the great thing now-a-days." So it is, but is there no call also for collective testimony? The unity of the Church is one of our subjects for supplication this morning. Is there anything we should desire more ardently than true Christian unity—unity in the truth, unity without compromise of the vital doctrines of Christ? To obtain this we should be willing to cut off a right hand, to pluck out a right eye.

We differ greatly in some things. Some of us are weak and some are strong; some are young, some are old; some are far advanced in the divine life, some are mere beginners in the Christian path. Nevertheless, let us one and all walk in the light of the Lord. For this walk is not for the matured Christian merely. The prophet addresses the least, as well as the greatest in in Israel. And so we speak this morning to the weakest, the feeblest of Christ's disciples, equally as to the fathers in the faith. There are some I know who have a knowledge of the truth, a power of expression, a breadth of judgment, a keenness of spiritual discernment which I may never hope to attain to, but we may yet walk together in the light of the Lord.

In walking in the light of the Lord, I have not only fellowship with the holiest and best in this generation, but am at one with those who have gone before. In so far as they walked in the same light, they are to us examples to be imitated. This is real holiness, whether it be found in the Old Testament or the New. It constituted the faith of Abel, the righteousness of Noah, the obedience of Abraham, the faithfulness of Moses, the whole-heartedness of Joshua, and, coming to New Testament times, we may add, the boldness of Peter and John, and the saintliness and devotedness of Paul. Each walked in the light of the Lord. Each ordered his ways and works not according to the principles and practice of this world, but after God. They drew their springs not from an earthly, but from a heavenly source. They leaned not to their own understanding. They judged not according to man's judgment, they made not human standards of truth and holiness their ideals. The Lord Himself was their Guide, his truth the touchstone to which they brought everything. In his light they saw light.

Let none amongst us, therefore, fail to respond to this invitation because we are conscious of our own weakness and ignorance. All the more reason why we should "come and walk in the light of the Lord." In his light we shall see light. This is the way to advance—to make progress—to grow. Why do we not grow more than we do? why are we so stunted, why so feeble? Do we not walk too much in the light of other men and women—their experience—their examples? "O come ye, let us walk in the light of the Lord." The holiest and the wisest of men are sadly deficient. They do but present truth in pieces. Christ alone is our perfect example. Let us walk in his light.

The exhortation of this morning shows us (1) the element in which we should walk as Christians—the "light of the Lord," that is, that light of which the Lord is the sole author and giver. "The true light." The light which not only proceeds from the Lord, but conducts us back to his presence, reveals his glory, discovers his attributes, makes Himself manifest. Thus it is written, and thus, I trust, we can say: "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts, revealing the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

(2) The exhortation of this morning points out the direction in which we should walk as Christians. It tells us that it is our upward, onward, heavenward, Christward walk: that, like Israel of old, we should pitch our tents "towards the sunrising;" walking away from this world, looking off unto Jesus, our light and salvation. It bids us gird up the loins of our mind, "be sober, and hope to the end for grace that is to be brought to us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." When we say, let us walk in the light of the Lord, we imply progress. May this year be a year of progress to us all, a going on to perfection. May our path be as the path of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day.

(3) This morning's motto indicates the character of our walk as Christians. To walk in darkness is characteristic of the ungodly, to walk in light is the privilege of the saints: thus it is written: "For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light: for the fruit of the light is in all goodness and righteousness and truth (Eph. v. 8, 9). To walk in the light of the Lord is to walk "holily and justly and unblameably," to "walk in love," to "walk in wisdom," to "walk in the Spirit," to walk in Him; to "walk even as He walked." To walk in the light of the Lord is to walk a holy walk, is to walk a happy, a joyous, a glad walk. Even though we sorrow therein, yet do we rejoice. Even though pain and conflict attend us, we can cry, "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; the Lord shall be a light unto me" (Micah vii. 8).

To walk in the light of the Lord is to walk a useful walk. He that is much in the light must needs enlighten. When Moses went up into the mount, into the light of the Lord, and came down from it, his face shone with glory though he knew it not. A Christian who walks in the light of the Lord, even though he never speaks, God will use him.

(4) The words of this morning suggest to us some of the necessities of a truly Christian walk. Amongst these, we may mention a fixed purpose, fervent prayer, strong faith, frequent reading of the Scriptures. No man can walk in the light of the Lord who does not delight himself in the Word of God.

Once when the venerable Dr. Moffat, in one of his lonely travels in Africa, came to a village, faint and hungry, he observed that the natives appeared anything but friendly towards him. Presently a poor Bechuana woman came out from one of the huts around, and spread before him some refreshment, some meat, milk, and fruit. She was about to leave when Dr. Moffat called her to him and asked for the reason of her act. Taking out from her bosom an old and well-worn copy of a Dutch Bible, she exclaimed, "This is the fountain whence I drink, this is the oil which makes my lamp to burn." Oh, let us more and more draw from this fountain in a day when the authority of the Scriptures is openly disputed, the claims of God openly denied, and so many of the vital doctrines of the Gospel openly rejected, let us cleave the more closely to his Word. Only thus shall we "walk in the light of the Lord."

Finally, let us walk this walk in hope. There is darkness here, even though the true light shines; darkness in the world, darkness in the Church, darkness in our hearts. We are journeying, however, to a land of light and love, to the Heavenly City, "wherein is no temple," for the "Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the light thereof." There no darkness shall come, no sin shall mar our fellowship with Christ and one another. A dear young friend of mine died during the past year. When on her bed of languishing, her mother asked her, would she be ready if the Lord should see fit to call her? A smile lit up her face, and she simply replied, "All the fitness He requireth is to feel my need of Him." After the lapse of a few days, she was told the Lord was really taking her home. Her answer was, with a glad look, "Oh, how nice, how splendid, to be so near the gates of heaven!" Before another year is gone, it may be, some of us will have passed through those gates as dear Mary Howie has done, there for ever to walk in the light of the Lord.

"YE ARE CHRIST'S."

Address by Dr. CHARLES STANFORD,

AT DENMARK-PLACE CHAPEL, THURSDAY, JAN. 10.

I AM not sure that I have anything to say, and not sure whether the words will come, but let me try and indicate, in a word or two I propose to utter, some thoughts for prayer founded on praise. This you will find in 1 Cor. iii. 23: "Ye are Christ's." We who are Christ's meet together to-night to pray for other people who are Christ's all over the world. It is our prayer first that we and they may, from this week of prayer, think less about ourselves, and more about being Christ's. A certain poet, whose magic has, perhaps, charmed us all, tells us that one day he overheard this debate between his two sons, one five years old and the other eight. The elder spoke first: "You are nobody." "Yes, I am somebody." "You are nothing." "Everything is something, so I am something." "You are no thing, therefore you are nothing." "I am my mother's."

We are at home, so I talk in a homely way. Mention of such simplicities as these you must not think undignified and out of place in such a meeting as this, and at such a moment; for at a moment when our souls are hushed before the majesty of the great Unspeakable, we are never likely to sin much against the fitnesses of things. We will try to plant our feet in the footprints of Jesus Christ, and remember that it was at a meeting of his disciples that Jesus took a little child, and set him in the midst of them, making to melt from the gentle presence into their ruffled hearts lessons of beautiful humility and love. Oh yes, Jesus is in the midst of us now. Take this little child of our nursery parable, and, through Him, teach us. The only thing that the child could say for himself, and the last thing that was left for him to say was, "I am my mother's;" and that may help us to formulate the only thing we can say for ourselves, and that is, "We are Christ's."

There is nothing in us—nothing whatever. But for our being Christ's there would be absolutely nothing; we should have no consequence, no significance, and we have neither before we are Christ's. We have not been born long, but we are Christ's. We are dull, slow, sickly children, but we are Christ's. We are not able to feed ourselves, nor to clothe ourselves, nor to keep ourselves, but we are Christ's. We have done nothing to merit our miracle—our eternal miracle of bliss, but we are Christ's. Our faith is not worth calling faith—we are ashamed of it; and our strength is not ours, and our love to Christ had no existence till He Himself loved us into it. As it is not the sunshine that makes the sun, but the sun the sunshine, and as it is not the wave that makes the wind, but the wind that makes the wave, so is it not our love that makes Christ's but Christ's that made ours. This is the state of the case.

Shall we glory in ourselves any more? We know that we shall, if we are left to ourselves; and so with all the brethren all over the world. The chronic tendency is to self-glorification; but we must give it all up, or there will be no good in us; it will be defeat in every battle, and dullness, darkness, and slowness in every struggle, until we learn that we are nothing, and glory only in being Christ's. Let us pray for ourselves and all Christians all over the world that this lesson may be learned in the coming year.

In our prayer for all who are Christ's, including ourselves, it is our prayer next that we and they may in the coming year be permitted to know more of the secret of fellowship with Christ. There is much stir in the Church now. There is rapid motion. All life seems to be in a hurry. Ah! but our best life must not be in a hurry, and it cannot be. You never can hurry it if you try. You never can hurry crystallisation—that must be slow. You never can hurry penitence; you never can hurry searchings of heart; you never can hurry prayer and praise. You must go out of the world of hurry, and you must be slow and certain in the presence of God alone. I put it to you, Where have you found yourselves most quickened? Where do you find the most living moments in the history of the most living souls? Where do you find the Holy Spirit steeping your hearts most in the very peace of Heaven? Where do you find most strength? Where do you find that union which is the intense reality of the soul? Where do you find it—in Exeter Hall? In great stirring meetings? In rapid rushes? In the public actions of a Christian life? Jesus is worthy to receive all kinds of public activity in his service, only it must be the outcome of secret fellowship, and we want all the Churches all over the world to know the joy and power of that life which springs from secret fellowship with Christ. To know it more than they have ever done; to know it this year. We cannot by our agency make them know it, but our prayer to-night from its very nature is an appeal to Christ to send the Holy Spirit. May the Holy Spirit come over all the catholic Churches and inspire that life which will seek its source in the stillness of hidden prayer.

We pray for them; for those who are Christ's away from us; and we pray for ourselves next that we may all have more joy in being Christ's. We ought not to have it said of us as it was said of the Englishman of Henry the Eighth's time, that he took his pleasures very sadly; we ought not to look as if we felt it rather a matter of constraint than a matter of enjoyment to belong to Christ. We cannot understand what it means if we feel this. You must recollect what is said in the life of Dr. Payson. Some years before death approached him it was said that there were moments when he seemed to be in heaven rather than upon earth, and more like a minister to angels than a minister to men. He said that if a Christian really did know what is meant by being in Christ and by being Christ's he could hardly restrain himself from saying to the first man he met when he went into the streets, "I am Christ's." Now, we all want to realise that joy of the Lord, which is strength. We want to be strong for work, and strong for warfare, and strong for all life, through the joy of knowing that we are Christ's.

We pray that we who are Christ's, and all others who are Christ's, may from this week of prayer more and more realise the unity that belongs to all who belong to Him. This is the only universal point on earth. It makes a unity that will survive the ruins of dull matter and the lapse of growing years. I do not say that we must give up denominations before we can be one in heart. Truths we must recognise and respect; and not only so, but we must respect the opinions about truths in the minds of those who differ; and this inevitable difference from infirmity or education may lead to certain conscientious and circumstantial differences as to church order and congregational life, and it is not for us to speak against the one thing or the other in any form of it. It is not for us to do so in a sense that implies want of affection to those who in these respects differ from ourselves. One fence may be better than another; one fold may be better than another; one lamp-stand may be better than another; one dress may be better than another. But the fence has value only for the sake of the field, and the fold value only for the sake of the flock, and the lamp value only for the sake of the light, and the dress value only for the sake of the man. An old writer speaks of a cover for the candlestick in which the light is put out.

You recollect, perhaps, in the life of poor Robert Burns how in one brief moment of dangerous popularity he was walking one day arm in arm with a lord on one side of the street and saw passing on the other side a man whom he knew from his own village; and how in a moment he bounded off and had his hand in the hand of that man, and his arm in the arm of his friend; and how some fashionable person lectured him on his want of good form, telling him that he ought not to parade before the public his acquaintance with a man in a dress like that. You may remember how the spirit of the poet was stirred as he replied, "Fool, I spoke not to the dress, but to the man inside." And God speaks not to the dress, but to the man inside. We, like God, would speak not to the ecclesiastical dress, but to the man inside it—to the man united to Christ. That makes the essential union; that makes the oneness, if we could but feel it as we must always recognise it, in intellectual belief. We have one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, and it is strange that we ourselves should not be one. God grant all over the world that the power of the Holy Spirit may bring about the manifestation of this oneness.

And now, brethren, let us begin at home. Let us through the coming year, as far as we live into it, love and cherish all about us who are Christ's. We are all one in Christ if we love and trust Him. That which we touch first let us help first. The life that we come in contact with first let us love first. Let us help all the Christians around our own doors, and all the ministers, and let them live in our prayers. And you, each one of you, through this year, if you have not known it before, know what it is to feel a right to say, "I am Christ's." It seems a sad thing to pray that others may be Christ's if you are not. Are you Christ's? With face to the sea and back to the stake, Margaret Wilson saw the waves whiten and whiten rapidly up to her feet, and felt at length that the time had come for the next great surging wave to roll over her head. She was snatched just for a moment from that post of death that she might have one chance of life by recantation. The officer asked her to recant, and added in an imploring voice, "Oh, Margaret, do!" But she cried, "Never; let me go—I am Christ's." May God make each one feel perfect identification with Christ—that this is as true of each one of us as it was true of the maiden martyr, that, living or dying, we are the Lord's. Do you feel it yet? If you do you will help us, and your prayer will have power in it. We want no mechanical prayer and no mechanical service, but all the living faith and prayer of all who are Christ's, for all others who are Christ's.

THE TRUE RELIGION OF HUMANITY.

Address by Dr. MONRO GIBSON.

At Steinway Hall, Friday, Jan. 11.

As we continue our supplications to-day, our view broadens out to embrace the whole world of man. We have been gradually extending our vision. We began on Monday by looking upward to God in grateful adoration; then on Tuesday we thought of ourselves—our sin and unworthiness, and earnestly prayed for pardon and for renewal. On Wednesday our thoughts turned to our homes. We thought of the needs of our children, and of our youth, and presented these before the Lord. Yesterday our desires went out towards the Church of God—not bounded by any sectional lines but the Church catholic, the Church universal, including all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who seek to follow in his footsteps. To-day we take the widest range of all—embracing the whole world in our petitions, which we offer at the Throne of Grace; and in no petitions ought we to be more at home than in these. None ought to be more congenial, more natural to the Christian heart.

Ours is the true religion of humanity. I know very well that is not generally conceded. There are very many, even of intelligent people in the present day, who seem to think that narrowness, rather than breadth of view, is the characteristic, at any rate of evangelical Christianity. They judge, of course, by unfortunate specimens of it. They happen to have heard or seen people calling themselves Christians, who had no more religion than to make them anxious, perhaps, about their own personal salvation—about the salvation of their own soul, which soul, perchance, was not of the very largest. And then they may have known others who could not and would not look beyond their own ecclesiastical fences. We must admit that there has been, and that there is still, far too much individualism and sectarianism amongst professing Christians, but this is not the fault of Christianity, let us remember. It is not due to the presence of Christianity, but to the want of it. They may have a little of it, but not enough. They have not large enough measures of it, or their views would be broader. Their hearts would be larger, and their sympathies have a more extended range. We are beginning now, in large measure, to get over our sectarian exclusiveness. The Church Universal is taking place with Christ in a way that only a fragment did before, and the Evangelical Alliance is helping the work on.

But there is another broadening of view which perhaps is not quite so far advanced; I mean that broadening of view which leads us to compass in within its sympathies, not only the Church of God throughout the world, but the world itself—the nations of mankind. It is true we do not forget to pray for "all ranks and conditions of men." We do not omit the nations in our public intercessions; but it is greatly to be feared that our desires sometimes become very much attenuated and our prayers exceedingly feeble, when we get so far away from our precious selves, as these intercessions seem to lead us. Our prayers for all ranks and classes of men require to be more vitalised than they are—vitalised by a deeper, more loving, more real interest in the welfare of all classes and conditions of men—vitalised by a greater anxiety to do our utmost to help forward every good work which tends to promote the welfare of all kinds of men physically and intellectually, socially and spiritually. Questions affecting all ranks and classes of men and nations at large are too apt by some Christian people to be relegated to the sphere of politics, and when so relegated to be regarded as outside the sphere of Christianity, except so far as it is appropriate that prayer should be offered for the guidance of those who are entrusted with the management of them. This ought not so to be.

It cannot be denied that the word "Evangelical," by which our Alliance is properly designated, is in many minds associated with exceeding narrowness of view, and it can as little be denied that many who have called themselves "evangelical" have been exceedingly narrow in their sympathies. Sometimes very good people have carried the idea of separation from the world to such an extent that they not only separate themselves from the worldly spirit, which is right and necessary, but they have cut themselves off from a living interest in the welfare of the world of men, which is unnecessary, and not only unnecessary, but wrong; for the Gospel of the kingdom which Christ presents us with is not simply one of individual salvation, not merely good news for a certain number of people, but good news for the world. "Joy to the world, the Lord has come." It is indeed of very great importance that the Gospel should be so presented as to come home to the individual soul, so that each one shall recognise it as a message for himself, and apply it to his own individual case. But while this is done, the other ought not to be left undone. While the personal aspects of salvation are sufficiently pressed, the wider aspects ought never to be overlooked or allowed to lose their proper place of prominence.

It may not be out of place on this occasion, at a meeting called by the Evangelical Alliance, to show how truly evangelical thoughts exercise us when we pray for the nations. Evangelical—the spirit of the Gospel—the evangel of Christ. Let us look at the Gospel in its most rudimentary form. How is it first presented? Read the Gospel as it was presented in Eden. Is it the salvation of Adam or a certain number of his descendants? No; it is the triumph of a great cause. "The Seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent." How reads the Gospel as preached to Abraham? Let Paul answer. Is it "Thou, Abraham, shall be saved," or "Abraham, thy seed shall be saved"? No. It is, "In thee, and in thy Seed, shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." That has a different ring about it, has it not? And this is the thought which ran trough all the patriarchal era, and finds its culmination in the grand outlook of the dying Jacob, when he looks forward across the vista of the ages, and recognises afar the coming Prince of Peace, and speaks about Shiloh taking up the falling sceptre of Judah, and then says, "Unto Him shall the gathering of the nations be." It is not "people" singular, but it is the "nations" plural. In the Mosaic era the same great thought is prominent: "Ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests"—the calling of the Hebrew people. What is a priest? A priest, we must remember, is not so much the recipient of blessing as the dispenser of blessing, and this kingdom of priests was brought into so much intimate relationship with God, not merely that they might receive certain benefits, but that they should be the dispensers of those blessings to the rest of mankind, that they should be the favoured channel of priestly blessing and royal gifts of truth to all who dwell upon the earth.

The same idea is kept up throughout the Old Testament. The Jewish nation became narrow and selfish and exclusive, but there is no narrowness, no selfishness, no exclusiveness in the tone of those holy men of old, who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Let us listen to the priestly prayer in Psalm lxvii., and think as we read it that it sprang out of Judaism; it is the utterance of a Jew, supposed to be the most exclusive of men, and yet he could thus pray and think of all the nations of the earth (reads the whole psalm)—see what a grand sweep there is in a psalm like this. None the less earnest for blessings at home, but how the heart stretches out and takes in the wide world. That is a mere specimen of what we have.

Let us turn to one of the prophets; take a passage, say, from Isaiah—the evangelical prophet—(chap. xlix. 6, 7). Notice how the individual application reaches out to the wide world: "Behold, these shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim." That is a specimen of what we have in the Old Testament, which is supposed to be an exclusive word and to do with an exclusive people,—singled out to be not only the special object of favour, but to be a blessing and a channel of blessing to all the nations of the earth.

When Christ came, He kept still the same grand ideas, the same far-reaching aims, the same enthusiasm of humanity before the eyes of men. What was the substance of his preaching?—"Repent ye, because, if you don't repent, you are lost"? That is not kept out of view, for He said—"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." I am not going to cast any discredit upon this way of putting it, but it was not the way the Lord Jesus Christ was most careful to put it, nor did He put it first and foremost; it was—"Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was the gospel of the kingdom that He continually preached. We do find him on one occasion asking the solemn question: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" But I appeal to those who are familiar with the Gospels to justify this statement, that for once that He speaks of saving the individual soul, He speaks fifty times about the kingdom. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God;" not your own personal salvation. We are so apt to put it that way; personal salvation must come first. But that is not the most important. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."

And when He teaches us to pray, the order is so different from that most natural to us. We find it natural to commence with ourselves, and by a long process we arrive somewhat exhausted towards the close to the ends of the earth. But is it not the case that very often our earnestness sadly diminishes, and our faith fails, before we reach these noblest objects of the soul's desire. Our Lord guards against that, "After this manner pray ye: "Our Father, which art in heaven;" and then, "Give us this day our daily bread." The same pre-eminence is given to the cause of universal humanity throughout the Gospels, nor is it lost sight of in the subsequent books, until at last, in the Book of Revelation, the individual seems to drop out altogether. It is Christ then, and his glorious kingdom; it is the multitude that no man can number, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. It is the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. It is Jesus, and not the individual happiness and the individual glory, that blazes before the rapt vision of the Prophet.

One thought more to finish what we had said about the calling of the Old Testament Church.

The calling of the New Testament Church is the same. It is the same as that of Israel in the Old, to be a blessing to all nations. The Church is not fulfilling her decree, unless it be manifest that wherever her children are found there continues to be fulfilled the ancient prophecy, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." We are all made ministers and priests to God. For whose sake? For our own simply? That is not after the manner of the Gospel. "He that will save his life shall lose it, and he that will lose his life shall find it." That is true in spiritual, as in temporal things. A person occupied with his own salvation loses a large portion, but a person devoting himself to the salvation of others is the one who will get thoroughly saved. We are made kings and priests, not for our own sake, but for the sake of the nations.

It is the function of the Church to teach all nations. Our Lord did not say, "Go and make your calling and election sure," but, "Go and teach all nations, and preach the Gospel to every creature;" and then, besides this, there are three special priestly functions—atonement, intercession, benediction. As for the first, when our Lord died it became our duty, as a priest, to go and make known his sacrifice to the ends of the earth, to follow the example of Him who set it long ago, pointing to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. And then the other two—intercession and benediction—are going on still, and ought to be going on all the while; and just as our Great High Priest is there interceding for us, even so we as priests unto God ought to be continually interceding for the nations, and continually showering upon them those benedictions which should come to them through the channel of the Church. This involves manifestly not only earnest prayer, but an earnest anxiety to do whatever our hands find to do, for these causes which are commended to us.

EIGHTY YEARS OF INDIAN MISSIONS.

Address by Dr. VALENTINE, of Agra,

AT CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 9.

THOSE who assert that Missions have been a failure lay themselves open to the charge of culpable ignorance, if not wilful perversion of the truth. My theme to-day is India. Let us in imagination throw ourselves back to the India that was at the beginning of the present century. Eighty years ago the fires of Suttee were publicly blazing, even in the presidency towns of Madras, Bombay, and Calcutta, and all over India. Upon these fires the screaming and struggling widow—in many cases herself a mere child—was bound and burned to ashes with the dead body of her husband.

Eighty years ago infants were publicly thrown into the Ganges as sacrifices to the goddess of the river. Eighty years ago young men and maidens, decked with flowers, were slain in Hindoo temples before the hideous idol of the goddess Kalee, or hacked to pieces as the Meras, that their quivering flesh might be given to propitiate the god of the soil. Eighty years ago the Cars of Juggernath were rolling over India, crushing hundreds of human victims annually beneath their wheels. Eighty years ago lepers were buried alive. Devotees publicly starved themselves to death. Children brought their dying parents to the banks of the Ganges and hastened their death by filling their mouths with the sand and water of the so-called sacred river. Eighty years ago the swinging festivals attracted thousands to see the poor writhing wretches, with iron hooks thrust through the muscles of their backs, swing in mid-air in honour of the gods.

For these scenes that disgraced the India of eighty years ago we may now look in vain. Do I need to remind you that everyone of these changes for the better is due either directly or indirectly to the missionary enterprise? They were missionaries and the friends of Missions who brought these tremendous evils to light. Branded as fanatics and satirised as fools, they ceased not until one by one these hideous crimes were crushed out by the strong arm of the Legislature. Just as we will not cease to agitate until the accursed opium trade and other evils cease to exist.

Eighty years ago there was not a single female school in the whole of India. At the Decennial Missionary Conference held in Calcutta during the first week of 1883, Dr. Newton, of Lahore, said: "When I came to India in 1835 a young lady also came, under the protection of my wife and myself, to aid in that part of the work which relates to females; but soon after our arrival in Calcutta she was informed by the missionary who had preceded us to Lodiana, that there was no work there for young ladies, and so it would be useless for her to go—and she did not go!" Eighty years ago not a single bookshop existed out of Calcutta, and these were only for the sale of a few English books.

Eighty years ago and our native Christians could have been counted by tens, and the missionaries themselves, few in number, were liable to be turned out of the country at any moment as dangerous characters! The missionary enterprise a failure! It is a failure in the same sense as Christianity at the end of the first century was a failure! It had not then, nor has it yet, completed its triumphs. But it had entered upon its work—the nations that opposed or threw it out have ceased to flourish, many of them have ceased to exist, and those that accepted it have basked beneath its smile! In India Christianity has entered upon its work.

The Bible has been translated into almost every one of its languages. Millions of tracts and books in the vernaculars of that great land are now in circulation. Mission schools in which the Scriptures are read are scattered up and down through the country.

The number of Foreign and Eurasian Female Mission agents is 541, with a staff of 1944 native female missionaries, while the total number of female pupils was at the end of 1881, 65,761. Now the Zenanas, that masterpiece of satanic ingenuity, are opening before the Zenana teachers and female medical missionaries. Statistically, the progress of the native Church in India is represented by the following figures: In 1851, there were 91,000 Protestant Christians; in 1871, 138,000; in 1871, 224,000; and in 1881, 417,000. This represents an increase between 1851 and 1861, of about 53 per cent.; in the next decade it was 61 per cent., and in the last decade 86 per cent.

What reason have we for raising our Ebenezer and saying, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us"?

But there is still another side to this great question. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few, oh! how few. In India we have a population of nearly, if not altogether, 300 millions of people—a population as large as that of the whole of Russia, Turkey, Germany, France, Austria, Hungary, the United States of America, and the Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland all put together—with a Mission-staff of only 586 foreign ordained agents, with a native agency of 461. Truly may we exclaim: What are these among so many? Take the following as examples of how this agency is distributed:—

Within a hundred miles of Calcutta—the capital of India, the city of palaces—we have Burdwan, with 3500 square miles and a population of one and a half millions of people, with only one European missionary and nine Christian helpers; Bancoorah, an adjoining district with a population of one and a half millions, with one European missionary and ten Christian helpers; Beerbhoom contains half a million of people, and has three missionaries with nine Christian helpers; Moorshadabad contains about a million of people, and has three missionaries with four Christian helpers. These four districts are a fair sample of how feebly vast populous districts are occupied.

Nor is even this all. Bogva has half a million of people; Malda a like number; Pubna has nearly a million of people—living in 2702 towns and villages. These three districts are within a day's journey of Calcutta, and yet no Church in all Christendom has a single missionary labouring in them. In Bengal proper there are upwards of 22 millions of Mahomedans—our fellow-subjects—and yet in Bengal there is not one single male missionary who knows the Arabic language (the language in which the Koran is written), or the Mahomedan controversy, or is specially devoted to work among these people. These are facts of a sufficiently startling nature, and are well calculated to make each of us pause and consider our own individual responsibility for this state of matters. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel unto every creature" are words addressed by our blessed Lord and Master to everyone who is called by his name. God grant that each of us here this morning may apply these words to ourselves, and that the answer of many a heart may be, "Here am I, Lord; send me."

The Centenary Hall Meetings.

MONDAY, JANUARY 7.

These meetings were held daily from one to two o'clock; although not so well attended as one could have desired to see, they were pervaded by a spirit of earnest devotion. The meetings were arranged by the East Central Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. N. R. Hughman, the secretary, presided on Monday. The singing was led with great spirit by some members of the North London Choir.

Rev. GORDON CALTHROP (after four brethren had offered prayer) delivered an address on the first part of the 34th Psalm. He said it was evident that the writer of the Psalm (and he inclined to the opinion that it was one of David's) had evidently experienced some remarkable mercies. It was the habit of his life to break out into fervent expressions of gratitude to God whenever there was a reason for it. The tenour of his mind was such that he could not receive a mercy and be silent—he must straightway go out and tell others what the Lord had done for his soul—he must offer thanksgiving.

Perhaps, continued the speaker, it might be well if the Church of Christ were a little more closely to resemble the Psalmist in this respect, and to lay aside the reticence which is said to be such a distinguishing characteristic of the English people. I sometimes think we lack zeal in declaring what the Lord has done for us, and the example of the Psalmist may give us a hint in this direction. He speaks on the impulse of the moment, for his heart is brim full of joy for the mercies he has received, and he makes a good resolution. He will not be content with one solitary acknowledgement in private, but he says, "I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth." He was resolved to give thanks for all things, to praise Him for the shade as well as for the sunshine. One good result that would spring from this constant practice of his would be its effect upon others—for they, seeing what God had done for him, would be encouraged to say, What He has done for one He can do for another.

In referring to the special subject before them—"Praise and Thanksgiving"—he said it seemed to him that thanksgiving must be especially acceptable to God. We know that God was well pleased with the sweet fragrance of the incense cloud in the Tabernacle; and He takes actual pleasure in the praises offered to Him by his servants: He yearns especially for the love of his creatures, and is looking for a response from them for the love bestowed on them. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me" is his word. When, therefore, we praise Him, we do what is specially pleasing to the loving, tender heart of our God and Father. The foundation of all acceptable praise is our realising what God has given us in his Son. How the Apostle Paul's heart swells as he thinks of it! He cannot be silent—cannot be content with ordinary prose, but must burst into a rapturous exclamation—"Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift!" If you look at the context in which the words occur, you will see that apparently there is no connection between them and what precedes and follows; but the man's heart is so full of gratitude that it bursts out, without any warning; "Thanks! thanks be unto God!" he cries.

But let it not be forgotten that it is our privilege to bless God at all times. It is easy enough to thank God when all things are going smoothly with us, and the sky is blue above us; but let the clouds gather, and let the storm come; let us have experience of disappointment and failure and loss; let there be the anxious anticipation of bereavement—ah! it is not so easy for us then to bless and praise Him. But still it is possible, and we are called upon "in everything" to "give thanks," not merely for sunshine, but for shadows; not merely for success, but for failure; for adversity, as well as prosperity.

Let us thank God for what He has done, for what He is doing by his Church, and let us be grateful for the outpouring of his Spirit in connection with the labours of our American friends who have been with us in the north and other parts of London. We will not forget them in giving thanks to God to-day for all men, and for the blessings, the mercies, the goodness and loving-kindness which He has shown.

The last thought on which the speaker dwelt, singularly enough, was the same as that on which the Rev. E. H. Bickersteth dwelt with such pathos an hour before, in his address at Steinway Hall on the same topic. There is a passage, he said, at the close of 2 Chron. v. 13 which tells us of all the ceremonial being over at the dedication of the Temple by Solomon. All had been done according to the directions of God, and yet God had not come into the Temple. He had not taken up his abode in it, and manifested his presence. And it was not until the people were as one, and the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound in praising and thanking the Lord, that the luminous cloud descends, and God comes to take up his residence among his people. It seems that it was not so much the prayer but that burst of united thanksgiving which drew down into the sanctuary the very presence of God Himself. "It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the Lord, saying, For He is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that the house then was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord."

The meeting was closed with singing, "Rejoice and be glad! the Redeemer has come!"

TUESDAY, JANUARY 8.

Mr. J. H. TRITTON presided. The attendance was larger than on the preceding day. Prayer was offered by Mr. Hugh Matheson, and he was followed by a City friend present, whose name did not transpire, but whose heart seemed literally burdened with a weight of real wants, which he spread forth in prayer. Prominent among these was the intemperance of the day, the increasing worldliness of City life, and the want of true power to maintain spirituality amidst the bustle and distractions of daily business. Reference was also made to the opium traffic as a grave national sin. Altogether the prayer was in thorough harmony with the topic suggested, and it inspired the wish that those who undertake to lead a meeting in prayer should come with some preparation of the intellect as well as of the heart.

Mr. TRITTON, having read a few verses of the Psalm, "Praise waiteth for Thee, O God, in Zion," said that the order they were following in this Week of Prayer was a wise one; they had begun with Praise, and they now come to Confession. Praise and Confession are linked together from the earliest stage of our Christian course until our latest breath. The first breath of a newborn child was expressed in a cry—a cry of confession of unworthiness as he hastes to God. And no sooner does he apprehend the greatness of the salvation offered to him through the blood of the Lamb, than the cry is changed into a burst of praise and thanksgiving, and the two run together in the Christian life to its close. And then, whether the last word spoken be a word of triumph, as in the case of some of the holiest and best, or whether it be a confession of unworthiness, as has also been the case with some of the holiest and best, praise and confession would be linked together at the last. The one they would take with them into the glory, where they would praise Christ for evermore, and the other, confession, they would lay down with their earthly garments.

In speaking of confession, he said it had so many sides that it was somewhat difficult to take them in at a glance. It was a duty—but it was something more, it sprang from the realisation of a sense of sin; but it was something beyond this,—it was a yearning after pardon and cleansing, but it was something more even than this. In examining what other properties belonged to it, both personal and national, he directed attention to some of the prayers in which Jeremiah, Daniel, and Nehemiah poured forth their souls in quest of the sweet fellowship with God which had been lost. They did not want their Lord to be as "a stranger or wayfarer, giving them a glimpse of his presence for a night," they wanted Him to tarry with them, for though the longing was not expressed in so many words, it was clearly implied in the desire that He would be in their midst. In Daniel's prayer one had a glimpse of the longing of the soul for God to return to the sanctuary which He had left because of the sin of the people. The fact was not so truly realised as it ought to be, that, nationally speaking, sin has the power to separate between a nation and its God.

It was to be earnestly hoped that one of the results of this week of meetings would be the closer fellowship with God, through true confession of the sins which had led to separation, and through the application of the precious blood which cleanseth from all sin. It was their earnest desire to be brought into closer union with their God and Father. In conclusion, he adverted to some of the evils to which attention had been called in the newspapers, and urged that the Christian Church has very grave responsibilities in connection with these national sins. It was his conviction that if they were to spread their national and personal sins before the Lord, the result would be the same as that witnessed in the olden time—there would be victory all along the line.

It should be added that at this meeting, as well as that of yesterday, requests for prayer were read and remembered.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 11.

The Rev. Dr. SINCLAIR PATERSON, who presided over perhaps the largest in the series of City meetings, said it was their privilege, with thousands meeting elsewhere to-day, to make "Intercession for the Nations," and he then read the topics suggested for prayer. He read Rom. xiii., after which "Jesus, I will trust Thee," was sung. At his suggestion the friend whom he asked to lead in prayer referred to half of the topics named in the programme, and was followed by another friend on the same subjects. On the remaining topics four or five friends offered brief supplications.

In the address of the morning Dr. Paterson said: The Lord Jesus Christ is King of nations as well as King of individual saints, and although the world has rejected his authority in due time He will be manifested in his glorious power, and take possession of his kingdom. Meanwhile He has given authority to national rulers, and it was the duty of his Church to pray for such, and especially in times when God's law was set at nought. It appeared to him that there was an organisation against law and authority, and that the men who were guiding it knew well that they were powerless unless they could remove the belief in a God who ruleth above. All the rights of men, as they are called, really rest on God's laws, and so far as we make light of the least of these commandments the liberty of man everywhere would be overturned.

The other day it was openly proclaimed that property should be confiscated, but the enunciation of such a principle struck a deep blow at the very root of social order. Those among the audience to-day who had studied prophetic events were looking at the state of things now existing with solemnity, because they knew that if men got rid of law there must be terrible confusion. It had recently been said that Europe was like an armed camp, or as a pile of fuel waiting to burst into conflagration. Their duty as Christian men was to maintain the inviolability of the law of God under all circumstances, and to make it the first principle of all laws which are enacted.

They had to pray to-day for the success of truth and righteousness, remembering that government is appointed by God to maintain the rights of citizens; but they should never forget that the truth is to be spoken in love. He felt it impossible to express the sense of pity he had for infidels. The great truths which were dear to them as Christians, had not been touched by any of the infidel attempts to destroy them. They had not overturned the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. It stood firmly on historical grounds, and the men who had led the attacks know well that they have failed. There would be much done with the lost if they were made to feel that they are burdens laid on Christian hearts anxious to do them all the good possible, and being such living epistles of Christ that even those who do not read the Bible can see what such epistles mean. This would be the method by which best to meet the "immoral propaganda" to which the programme of prayer referred.

In saying a word for "temperance," the speaker added that they had great reason to thank God for the immensely swollen tide of temperance which had passed over the land during the past year or two, and they had reason also to look with hopefulness towards the future. The effort, however, should never be allowed to stand still, for sin came with every child born into the world, and the battle must be waged in every generation. Nothing that they had done could secure the future to them. In referring to the importance of praying for the spread of wholesome literature, he said he had been greatly impressed by the fact of a young lady in one district going about selling immoral publications. While such efforts were being made, Christian people should be ready to come forward as helpers of every good work. Eminent saints were wanted, men like Gideon's three hundred, men on fire with the love of the Lord Jesus Christ. In a concluding word he said, if there are any papers which under a Christian flag teach Unitarianism, these should have no place in a Christian home, and ought to be disowned by Christian men. He would not characterise any particular book or paper; but if there are books and periodicals which deny the atonement of Christ and preach salvation by works, these should be heartily repudiated.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park.

The week of prayer was devoutly observed at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, Room No. 6 being well filled at eleven each morning and seven each evening. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided on each occasion; and a very large number of written petitions (a peculiar feature of Mildmay) were sent in. The order of subjects for prayer was that followed at the usual daily prayer meeting, and not those suggested by the Evangelical Alliance.

On Monday the subject for prayer morning and evening was Jewish Missions. These gatherings are referred to in a separate article on this page.

On Tuesday, "Our Land and its Rulers, India and the Colonies, and our Countrymen Abroad," was the topic for prayer. In the morning the Rev. Gordon Calthrop, of St. Augustine's Church, Highbury, gave the address.

In the evening Rev. John Wilkinson spoke from Daniel ix. We should remember we came together to meet God, not man. Here is a model prayer for us. Daniel identified himself as one of the nation which had sinned, and so his confession was as sincere and whole-hearted as if it had been a purely personal matter. Daniel justified God. He did not forget that it is our sin which estranges us from God. If we are as sincere and earnest as Daniel was, we shall receive as prompt and effective an answer as did he.

Rev. G. Wilson said: We shall do well to take warning from the fall of ancient Rome from all her pride and glory. I feel most deeply the great Christian responsibility which rests upon us in regard to our vast empire, "on which the sun never sets." How mighty the influence for good were the powerful intellect of Hindostan consecrated to God's glory! So with the whole of the numerous colonies, which God has placed under our rule. We should pray God that the intellect of our land may be consecrated to His service. Our prayers for our nation should not only be for this evening, but should be lifelong. Let each one see to it that he feels his individu l responsibility in this matter.

On Wednesday the special subject for prayer was Missions to the Heathen. Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, selected the passage, "Lift u your eyes and look upon the fields, for they are white already to harvest," as his topic. He was followed by Dr. Valentine, whose address on Indian Mis ions is reported at length on a preceding page.

In the evening, Rev. Townshend Storrs, dwelling on the consecration of Saul and Barnabas to missionary work (Acts xiii. 2, 3) said: We are all called upon daily to testify for Christ, but all are not called, because all are not suited, to enter upon special service for Him. The Holy Ghost was the motive power in sending forth Saul and Barnabas. The lesson is that a mere fanciful or romantic spirit should not lead us to engage in foreign mission work; we must earnestly pray for the guidance of the Holy Spirit in seeking for our life-work. The laying on of hands here spoken of was the mark of identification upon these Apostles set apart for the missionary cause. From the example of Saul and Barnabas we should learn that itinerant work is an important feature in missionary effort.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, then spoke from John xvii. In missionary work we are continuing, as Christ's members, the work to which He Himself gave his life. Our witness for Christ should begin at home, but not end there. The home field should be regarded as the preparation for foreign service, and the foreign field as the outcome of home training. Many Christians seem to have an utter apathy with respect to the Mission cause, but such will do well to remember the stewardship into which their Lord has put them, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Unless we are fulfilling our Master's command we cannot expect to be received by Him with joy upon his return.

Mr. Hudson Taylor then dwelt upon the great needs of Central Asia, where many open doors are waiting for missionaries to enter. Many Christian parents profess to give their children an interest in missionary work, yet when called upon to give them up for that work are generally reluctant to do so. In Tibet the rule is to devote one son of each family to the service of their heathen religion. Shall we be behind the heathen? What a mighty growth of Christ's kingdom would there be if every English family were represented on the missionary field! Each one should ask himself, "What am I doing to further the kingdom of God?" More personal service is required—not merely money.

On Thursday the subject embraced parents and children, schools and colleges, and Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations. Mr. Gawin Kirkham read Proverbs iv., with brief comments; and Rev. D. B. Hankin, of St. Jude's, gave the address, on the Treasure hid in a Field and the Pearl of Great Price (Matt. xiii.). He applied it to the subject of the day in the upbringing of children, and urged parents to seek the conversion of their children while young.

The subject of prayer on Thursday evening was on behalf of the young, and for grace upon all parents, guardians, teachers, and all who are employed in training children. Mr. P. S. Badenoch spoke from Matthew xv. The chief lesson taught by this incident of the woman of Canaan is that of being in a proper position before God ere we can expect effectual answer to our prayers. So with us, deep humility and intense earnestness should characterise our supplication before the throne of grace.

Rev. T. Graham, St. Paul's, Canonbury, speaking from the vision of Zechariah, chapter iii., said: Here are three points to be noticed, (1) the position of Joshua before the angel of the Lord, (2) the person of Joshua, and (3) the portion of Joshua. Joshua was standing. This represents an attitude of confidence, of readiness for service, and of continual supplication. These marks should characterise our waiting upon God. But Satan is also represented here. The great adversary of souls is ever on the alert to baffle us, even when we draw near to God. But we have an advocate against our accuser, for we read, "The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan." Here is our strength. Satan is ever seeking to instil his tares into the minds of the young, but if we seek strength from God we shall be able to thwart those evil designs. Paul, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, shows how even in our daily trivial duties we need this Divine aid, and the reason is that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers," &c.

The person of Joshua is spoken of as being covered with "filthy garments." These represent our many sins and shortcomings. Yet, despite all these, God loves us, and we are shown that love when we consider our next point, the portion of Joshua: "Let them set a fair mitre upon his head." Let this be our prayer for ourselves and our children. Our lives must be a consistent example for our children, and we must lead them in the ways of God. We are shown our duty in this respect, and also the result thereof, by the 7th verse, for these "places" no doubt represent our eternal reward.

What greater reward can crown our labours among these little ones, as parents, guardians, and teachers, than to meet them hereafter in glory, and hear them praising God that, by his grace, through you they were led in the ways of heavenly wisdom, and are at last found standing before Him, blessed for ever and ever?

[We are obliged, through pressure on our space, to hold over several addresses and reports of provincial meetings.]

The Salt of the Earth.

SALT is doing no good whilst in a salt-mine, or salt-warehouse, or salt-bin, or salt-cellar, or along with nothing but other salt. To be of use salt must be in contact with—roughly rubbed into—something perishable and liable to become unsavory.

Perhaps you are a minister, stationed in a horribly wicked place, drunken, Godless, profane, unclean, &c. The very spot that needs a lump of salt. Perhaps a young man says, "There never was such a wicked shop as I'm in—the drunkenness, filthiness, swearing—all around is evil." Just so, my dear young brother—the very spot that needs a lump of salt.

If the Lord has selected thee to be the lump of salt, take it with thankfulness and joy as an honourable privilege, and pray for faith and faithfulness.—American Sunday-school Times.

Prayer for the Jews.

ON Monday, Jan. 7, the Annual Week of Prayer was commenced, with a morning and evening meeting at Mildmay, for prayer and conference concerning the Jewish work. The morning meeting was held in the Conference Hall itself, where a large company gathered. Mr. J. E. Matheson presided at both meetings.

Rev. J. Wilkinson described the work and growth of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. He gave an interesting résumé of the past and previous years' work, showing what great things the Lord had done for and by the Mission. He mentioned the new project which he has had laid on his heart—to establish a training home for orphan and neglected Jewish children.

Dr. Dixon gave the statistics of the Medical Mission for 1883, which testify to abundant labour. Summarised, his statement gives over 16,000 attendances, either at the Dispensary or at the homes of the Jewish poor; while about 5000 Jews and Jewesses (one-tenth of the Jewish population of London) have come under our influence and have heard the Gospel faithfully proclaimed.

Mr. Grattan Guinness addressed the meeting on the subject of the recent wonderful changes that have taken place in the social and political condition of the Jews, and illustrated his deeply interesting story by a bristling array of facts culled from twenty-five centuries of Jewish history. Rev. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, expressed his warm and lifelong interest in this work, and affectionately bade Mr. Wilkinson God-speed therein.

The evening meeting was devoted more especially to prayer for Israel and for the Mildmay Mission to the Jews; part of the time, however, was occupied by a repetition of the salient points of the morning's discourse by Mr. Wilkinson, and of the Medical Mission statistics, with some additions by Dr. Marshall. Rev. Dr. Bullinger refreshed both the Mission-workers and the visitors by a thoughtful address on the scriptural indications for such work as this Mission is carrying on.

Obituary.

MR. GEORGE EASTON.

WE hear with regret of the death of Mr. George Easton, one of the most arduous and heroic of the early advocates of the Temperance Reform in Scotland.

REV. WM. FISKEN.

This Presbyterian minister recently died at Stamfordham, Northumberland. Mr. Fisken, who was a septuagenarian, was a native of Perthshire; alongside the study of theology he diligently pursued mechanics. He will be remembered by posterity, as he well deserves to be, and especially by agriculturists, as having been one of the two inventors of the steam plough, the other being his brother Thomas.

PASTOR ONCKEN, OF HAMBURG.

This worker was called to his rest on the 2nd inst., having just completed his eighty-fourth year. For many years he had taken the lead among the Baptists in Germany, and was the means of establishing many churches in that empire. For some time Mr. Oncken had been laid aside from active work, spending the last few years in Zurich and neighbourhood, where he died. His remains were removed to Hamburg for interment.

REST FOR LONDON TOILERS.—Those of your readers who are working amongst London needlewomen, and other women and girls toiling in City warehouses and shops, may be glad to know that there is a "Country Cottage Home of Rest," where those of good character, needing rest and change, are received for three or four weeks on payment of 2s. a week; or in cases unable to contribute this, they are taken free if certified as suitable by those well-known ladies who devote themselves to this work. For particulars apply to Miss Johnson, Ventnor House, St. Dunstan's, Canterbury.

SAVING THE WOMEN AND GIRLS.

THE attention of your readers was lately called to the work of the Stoke Newington and Shacklewell Mission to women and girls, and to its proposed extension. As then stated, three Christian nurses and a Biblewoman are at work, while a large coal and blanket club and a mothers' meeting form part of the Mission operations. An evening club, with an average attendance of forty, is held twice a week in a Board school-room hired for the purpose. It is now earnestly desired to take a house where reading-rooms, class-rooms, &c., can be opened every night, as well as on Sunday, under the care of a matron qualified to influence the low and rough girls in this poor neighbourhood. Temporary accommodation at night will also be offered in special cases.

Many of the girls have histories too sad to be related in these pages. One girl well known to the teachers since the commencement of their work has had two babies under her charge, both of whom, there is reason to believe, have died from want of care, while three other children were in a terrible state of neglect before one of the nurses could gain admission to the house. One of these was received into a Children's Home.

Another girl had a miserable home with a father and stepmother. The latter died in a lunatic asylum, but the girl was incorrigibly idle, and her father turned her out of doors. She was admitted to one or two penitentiaries, but some time ago came to one of the teachers, ill and wretched. A lodging was procured for her with a respectable woman, but no control could be exercised. One day she took up her bundle, went out, and never came back. If she could have been placed under the care of a matron experienced in such cases, and in such a lodging as it is desired to provide in the institute, might not a more permanent influence have been obtained?

Sad cases, also, come under the nurses' notice. Not long ago, one of the nurses was fetched at eleven o'clock one Sunday night to a woman living at the top of a neighbouring public-house. On her arrival she found the woman so ill that she insisted on a doctor being fetched, and herself went to one who, she knew, would be able and willing to help her. The husband was much the worse for drink, and threatened personal violence if the doctor entered. The nurse refused to have anything to do with the case unless the doctor was admitted; at last the necessary advice and attention were given, and the woman's life was saved. The next morning the man was willing to offer any apology in his power, but it had been a terrible scene.

Sometimes the nurses can do good work by personally taking their patients to the hospitals. A short time ago one nurse found a young woman lying on a bed on the floor, and with little other furniture in the room, while her covering was two pieces of drugget. Two of the nurses met that afternoon, and took her safely to a hospital.

But though there are many discouragements there are also encouragements. A short time ago a nurse found a young woman almost starving, and with one child, which had been born in the Cambridge Union. A situation was found for her, money was furnished by the Mission to redeem her clothes from pawn, and also to go to Cambridge, in order to place her child in its grandmother's keeping. She went, returned punctually on the appointed day, and entered her situation, and was thus again enabled to earn a respectable livelihood.

A. N. was a respectable young general servant. The Bible instruction which is given at each evening meeting of the club was the means of making her anxious about her salvation. She sought and found the Saviour, and not long after left her situation because she was sent to fetch beer from a public-house. She told her difficulties to one of the workers, and an advertisement was placed The Times, which was the means of procuring her a good situation, where she is doing well.

Sometimes efforts have to be made to place special cases in suitable institutions. But in cases such as these a temporary shelter would often be an immense boon, and this would be provided by the proposed Institute. About £160 is promised towards the £500 required for the work, and an earnest appeal is made to those who are themselves sheltered from the terrible dangers to which these poor girls are exposed. The Treasurer is Mrs. Hutchinson, 15, Cavendish-square, W. Further information would be gladly supplied by the Hon. Sec., Miss Forsaith, 3, Lordship-terrace, Stoke Newington, N.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan in Dublin.

THE Mission of these friends, which commenced here on December 31, has closed. Throughout the entire period much blessing has attended the preaching and singing of the Gospel. As the days went on the congregations increased in number, until on the two last evenings the large hall and galleries were crowded.

At the afternoon meeting a large number of clergymen attended regularly, and many of the Christian workers of the city. The simple, earnest Bible-readings have been blessed to many students of God's Word. The subjects chosen were deeply interesting, the last five being the names of Jehovah, as found in the Old Testament; Jehovah Tsidkenu, Jehovah Shalom, Jehovah Jireh, Jehovah Nissi, Jehovah Shammah.

The sweet singing of the Gospel by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan will long be remembered here. Well known passages of Scripture were beautifully rendered day after day, finding an echo in many hearts. The most familiar verses of Scripture seemed to possess greater depth of meaning and beauty, and show forth fresh aspects of the truth. The simple singing of Gospel truth has been owned and blessed of God in many cases; requests were frequently sent in asking the repetition of some favourite verse. John iii. 16, and "I am the Resurrection" seemed to be specially admired.

In the evening powerful Gospel addresses were given, full of simple eloquence and touching appeal; the speaker, often with a tremor in his voice and tears in his eyes, pleaded with his hearers to receive the message and turn to God. The man's whole heart is in the work; his life seems wholly given to saving others. The "military evening" was a time of great blessing. The text chosen was, "And one of the soldiers pierced his side." Christian workers testified afterwards of the wonderful power of the address, and many in the inquiry-room found peace with God that night. In one corner of the room sat Major Whittle, surrounded by a compact square of soldiers inquiring their way to Sion, with their faces thitherward. Mr. McGranahan is also gifted with great persuasive power in conversation, and is truly wise to win souls, gently bringing error to light, and quoting promises exactly suited to the inquirer's need.

At the closing meeting of the Mission, the hymn "I will" was sung. Many decided there and then, and stood up to give silent testimony to their determination to become Christians. The visit of these friends to this distracted country has been indeed blessed to many precious souls; the prayers of many Christians in Ireland will follow them in their work for the Master.

EAST LONDON SEWING CLASSES. — Lady Hobart, having returned from America, has resumed her labours in connection with these classes, the object of which is to give employment to poor women by which they may earn a little money for the support of their families, and also obtain articles of clothing at a cheap rate. Every £1 subscribed enables one woman to earn 1s. 6d. weekly during the severe and most trying season. Funds are urgently needed and solicited, and may be sent to Lady Hobart, 15, Eccleston-square, S.W.

"This Year Also."

(Luke xiii. 8.)

THE year hath sped, and its swift-winged hours
Bear life's record away for eternal tale,
And recompense sweet,
(If the work be meet,)
When God's hand shall lift the long-dropped veil.

What does it tell of my walk with God?
Has my heart beat true to its Kingly Lord?
Has it witnessed strife
Betwixt lips and life,
Or have both vibrated in one glad chord?

Another year! Have I witness borne
To the magical power of my Master's love?
Has my life told out,
Without shadow of doubt,
The secret springs that my spirit move?

O New Year given! soft-veiled and sweet,
Lies hidden its wealth of wondrous store,
My future out-planned
By an all-wise hand,
Till I tread the sands of the sinless shore.

Oh, glad New Year! how I welcome thee!
Filled with fresh service and needful grace.
Power God-given,
Nearness to heaven,
And haply the sight of my Saviour's face.

Village Work.

THERE are probably no darker spots to be found than the small hamlets and villages on the far outskirts of the East of London, abutting on the various remaining portions of Epping and Hainault Forests. A large section of this village population is engaged in field labour, for the cultivation of vegetables for the East London markets. The men and lads who drive the carts to London are brought into contact with all the vice and sin of the great city. The women and girls labour in the fields, and thus home ties are weakened and home duties neglected. Drunkenness prevails to a terrible extent, and the grossest ignorance exists on all matters affecting their higher interests.

During my residence at Dr. Barnardo's Village Homes for Girls, Barkingside, Ilford, I endeavoured to deal with this state of things in the surrounding hamlets by establishing cottage meetings, Gospel services, mothers' meetings, open-air meetings, and sundry other agencies. It pleased God to bless those efforts, and a radical change has passed over the neighbourhood of Barkingside; so much so that an urgent appeal for help now comes to me from one quarter of the village, where for a long time the darkness seemed most impenetrable.

The little Mission Hall that does duty in this spot, seating between 70 and 80 people, is found all too small for the numbers who are pressing in to hear the Word of Life. The Sunday-school is so crammed at times that there is a difficulty in seating all the children who want to attend. The quiet, consistent, and prayerful lives of the men and women brought to Christ during the last five years have told so powerfully on the neighbours, that many of them are coming forward to seek the Way of Life. Further, a building society has bought up a large area of property, and whole streets of small dwellings are in course of erection between Ilford and this particular part of Barkingside, which will shortly be tenanted by hundreds of families.

There is no place of worship in the neighbourhood save one little mission hall; and to meet the present pressing need, and provide for the future, I am most anxious to erect a Mission Hall to seat 300, on a freehold site, which can be obtained in a first-rate position. The Christian people of the village are doing their utmost to raise money amongst themselves, and hope they may be able to purchase the site. Will any readers of The Christian help me towards the erection of the building? It will be a great joy to me to see this work accomplished, and thus provide a permanent memorial of seven years' work in the Gospel amongst those people.

THE EAST LONDON TABERNACLE.

ANNIVERSARY MEETING.

ALTHOUGH the population of the East End, as a whole, like the rest of "the whole world", lieth in wickedness," yet here, no less than in other localities, the Lord is taking out a people for his name. The Bitter Cry of Outcast London is supposed to be echoed loudest from the East, but it may very well be questioned if the foulest dens of iniquity are to be found there, though doubtless a larger mass of poverty and misery is condensed and packed together here than in any other part of the realm, or probably of the world.

But nowhere is there more devoted, laborious, self-sacrificing and efficient Christian work than in the East of London; and the proof of God's blessing on their labour is the difference between the state of things thirty years ago and what it is to-day.

Prominent among the zealous helpers in the war of the Lord against East End poverty and sin, is Mr. Archibald G. Brown, pastor of the East London Tabernacle, the anniversary of the seventeenth year of whose pastorate was commemorated on Monday evening of last week.

Mr. ROBERT PATON presided at the public meeting, and after singing and prayer,

The Rev. A. G. BROWN made a statement as to the nature and results of his seventeen years' work at the East-end. In early life he knew nothing of the neighbourhood, and even in his student days did not penetrate far into the Eastern districts. He now, however, thanked God that he had been called to work among the poor and suffering. He had not advanced with the times. He heard a great deal about modern thought, but it seemed to him to be but progress backwards. He found that the simple preaching of the Gospel had not lost its power over the people. During his seventeen years' pastorate, besides the thousands who had there been saved but had passed to other localities or joined other churches, it had been his joy to baptize and give the right hand of fellowship to about 3000 people, the vast majority of whom came direct from the world. During the last fortnight between fifty and sixty had applied for membership, independently of those accessions which were expected as the result of the Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in whose work Mr. Brown expressed the warmest interest and most entire confidence. He hoped all his people would feel the same and co-operate in carrying on the work.

Without diminishing the work at the Tabernacle, he had been able to branch out in a new direction in connection with the visitation of the poor, with 17,000 of whom he had been brought into contact. The foolish cry which had been raised about exaggerated statement, concerning "Outcast London" only came from those who had never acquainted themselves with the state of things. In connection with Mission work, 15,000 visits had been paid during the year, 2730 cases of special distress had been carefully investigated, and some small amount of relief given, 2134 sick beds had been visited, and sixty-five persons had been attended in their dying moments; thirteen orphan boys had been cared for, and this month the first of the orphans would be baptized. In closing, Mr. Brown stated that letters expressive of regret at unavoidable absence had been received from the Rev. W. E. Hurndall and Dr. Barnardo.

The CHAIRMAN dwelt on the value of outspokenness, and said the best preaching was simple, strong, Gospel talk. The condition of the masses could not be effectively dealt with outside the Church and religious truth. The Gospel was God's remedy for sin, and sin was the root of all the evils around us.

The Rev. T. RICHARDSON gave an animated account of his experiences as a preacher in London and as a worker among the poor, and said the way to stop the rowdyism and immorality of the streets was for Christians to speak individually to those they found misconducting themselves. Of 789 persons who were counted entering one public-house during the time of worship one Sunday, two-thirds were girls under twenty. Here was a work for Christian women—to influence for good these young ones going astray. He believed that the proposed "Palace of Delight" would do the Devil's work at the East-end. It would not prove the true means of elevating the people.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN spoke of the beneficent works in which Mr. Brown and others were engaged, not as being handmaids to the Gospel, but essential and integral parts of the Gospel of God; and did not doubt that the six missionaries now employed by them were supplemented by sixty or six hundred voluntary workers, more or less engaged in visiting or teaching the poor around them. He as well as others was specially interested in the thirteen orphans whom Mr. Brown had taken up, when their fathers and mothers had forsaken them at the call of death.

The Rev. W. C. JONES followed with words of congratulation, combined with references to the difficulties of religious work at the East End and to the unity of all true Christians, seeming differences notwithstanding.

In his concluding remarks, Mr. BROWN made loving and grateful mention of his mother, who was present, and to whom, under God, he owed all his success. Such a testimony is of special value in these days. Thus ended a very pleasant, enthusiastic, and profitable evening.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

ENCOURAGED by the spiritual success which has attended this Mission during the past year, arrangements have recently been made for enlarging the work, and the New Year opens with every prospect of extended usefulness and increased blessing. At several of the Society's stations a revival is taking place, and many seamen are being brought to the Lord. On the first Sunday evening of the New Year, at the Seamen's Chapel, Ratcliffe Highway, several sailors told what great things the Lord had done for them.

A tea meeting for about fifty Germans was held on the following Tuesday, after which an evangelistic meeting was addressed by Mr. E. Newell, Mr. Romeiser, Mr. Bottjer, and other friends. On Thursday evening a Gospel Temperance Meeting was held, and the chapel was well filled. Sergeant Colborne, of the City Police, presided, and six constables took part in the meeting. Whilst strongly urging the sailors to abstain from the drink, they earnestly besought them not to rest at that, but also to become followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. All present seemed much impressed, and thirteen signed the pledge. Many of the Christian seamen who attend this chapel are supplied with foreign Scriptures for free distribution among the natives of the various places to which their ships are bound, and the importance of this branch of the work can scarcely be overestimated.

Any friends willing to help this Mission with money or material, i.e., Bibles, tracts, periodicals, or sailors' tract bags, may send their gifts to the institution, 215 and 216, St. George-street, London Dock, E., or to the Secretary, at the Offices, 237, Commercial-road, E.

Mission Appeals.

VISITATION OF BATH PUBLIC-HOUSES.—Will those who have derived benefit from the "life-giving" waters of Bath help to carry the "Water of Life" to its 246 public-houses? A suitable man has been engaged as missionary. Any help towards his expenses thankfully received by Miss V. M. SKINNER, 5, St. James's-square, Bath.

LEEDS.—A number of working men would be glad of the pecuniary help of friends of Gospel Temperance work in the Kirkstall-road Mission. They have done all they could, but still need help to provide seating accommodation for those who attend. Address: Mr. E. M. PIRIS, Kirkstall-road, Leeds.

SOLDIERS' HOME, NORWICH.—Mr. F. ADIE will be thankful for the help of friends in the support of this Home, so much needed and valued. Christian friends pay the rent of house and Mission-room, but there is still a need of further continued support.

MISS DE BROEN'S BELLEVILLE MISSION.

AMIDST the present distress of the poor, which is certainly as great in Paris as anywhere, it is a comfort to think that at least one day's pleasure was enjoyed by a few out of the number. Recently a treat was given to the scholars of the Sunday and day-schools, with those of the little wild street arabs gathered on Thursdays, who have been attentive and regular; and to-day the poor women of the Sewing-class had their much-desired coffee fête. Pastor Cook, who has a genius for Sunday-schools, kindly spoke to the children; M. Monod and others, being too busy, could only send kind wishes; but all the guests were happy, and felt that the wish to help them exists. This makes these sort of treats of far greater use than the mere pleasure of the day.

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN will be glad to hear of the continued success of the work, and of the large opportunities obtained for reaching the people of all quarters within and far outside the boundaries of Paris. Notwithstanding that Dr. Macrae guards against the abuse of the same patients returning too often to the Medical Mission, and the necessary summer vacation, the attendance during the year just ended, at the Dispensary alone, was 25,300. The people are really grateful for what is done for them; many of them are quite changed in heart and many sad homes are brightened by the opening of a higher prospect than is given by the life of this world, so poor to them, but which many among them imagine is to be their all.

The whole Mission is in full vigour now, but much more might be done with more workers and more means. Some of the people seek us out in strange ways. One, anxious for Bible-teaching, saw a mocking notice of a religious meeting in the Lanterne newspaper, and at last found out ours, which she regularly attends, though she has much to unlearn as well as to learn. Another, after a long search, had her attention drawn to ours, by something being given her wrapped in a torn piece of the paper Miss De Broen printed and circulated at Gambetta's funeral last year. The same paper was given lately at that of Henri Marten. This morsel contained the address of the Iron Room, to which she regularly comes; while her grandson attends the night-school also. Another, filled with revenge against a man who had fraudulently obtained her savings, resolved to kill him, content that the law should take her life if first her vengeance were satisfied. Attracted by the light, she one evening strolled into the Iron Room, curious to know what was going on. There she heard what caused her to relinquish her bad purpose, rooted though it had been in her desires, and the man unconsciously owes his life to God's blessing on the Mission.

As time and teaching go on the work deepens in the hearts of many. Besides Pastor Hirsch, who has been engaged for two years to have the meeting every Monday, Pastor Cordey gives a regular course of Bible-readings on Wednesday. The Doctor and the evangelists speak in the week and on Sundays. Kind friends have lately sent most useful presents of clothing. Means are much required to carry on the work in so wide a sphere. A. KER.

FOREIGN PRISONS.—Mr. Charles Cook writes: "I start on February 1 with Mr. T. Clark via Paris to Marseilles, thence along the south coast of France to Genoa, Rome, Naples, Brindisi, Athens, Corinth, Alexandria, Cairo, and 600 miles of the Nile, then on to Turkey. Will you ask the prayers of all the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for safety and success? At any place along the route we shall be glad to hold services where there are English residents."

Continental and Foreign Notes.

TAHITI.

WE are glad to see that, although many years ago the work of English missionaries was rudely stopped in Tahiti, it is yet being vigorously carried on by the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society.

WORKING CLASSES IN BELGIUM.

A letter from Brussels to l'Evangéliste speaks of the innumerable amusements provided in that city for all classes on the Lord's Day, horse races, pigeon flights, nautical jousts, gymnastic fêtes, &c. The working classes "require two days to satisfy their passion for pleasure and debauchery. 'Saint Monday' is a day when it is almost impossible to find a workman willing to work." In factories, where women are employed and where the wages of six days' labour is scarcely enough to keep them, it is most difficult to get them to work on Monday. "The theatres in Belgium seldom play any but French pieces, and of these the least literary and the most licentious."

BORDIGHERA, ITALY.

The schools and Mission work carried on by Mrs. Boyce continue to make good progress. The teachers are all Waldensians and hold Government certificates, and the pastor and evangelists have been supplied by the Committee of Evangelisation in Italy until recently. They no longer can do this so that the work will have to be given up or carried on by Mrs. Boyce, as before, on her own responsibility. A number of boys and girls have been educated and brought to a knowledge of Christ since 1865. Mrs. Boyce would be glad of the sympathy of Christians, in providing for the continuance of this useful Mission. Earl Shaftesbury has written her to say it will give him pleasure to aid her Mission to the utmost of his power.

WEST AND SOUTH AFRICA.

Two young Frenchmen have recently gone to Senegal, Africa, to preach the Gospel. At the farewell meeting was one whose son had lost his life on the field of honour. The addresses, consequently, were more or less shadowed by the remembrance of the dangers to which the young brothers would be exposed. At the close, the father of one of these two said, "I do not approve of the tone of sadness which has reigned over the assembly this evening. If Jesus or Paul had been here we should have used other language. Death! why one dies everywhere, and is it not glorious to die for the Lord's cause? Through our tears our eyes should always meet Jesus." The sound of such words had the effect of a trumpet note.

The above Society, which has done such good work in South Africa, also rejoices that the question of an English Protectorate over the Basutos has been settled in the way most favourable, as it thinks, to its work of evangelisation in that tribe.—Journal des Missions.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—The States of Guernsey have given notice to the landlord of the Prince of Wales's Hotel, at St. Peter's Port, to quit at Christmas, 1884, as they do not intend to let any of their property in future to publicans.

LODGING-HOUSE MEN AT TEA.—On Friday evening last, at the Congregational Hall, Old Gravel-lane, E., about 250 men, mostly inmates of the common lodging-houses of Ratcliff Highway and neighbourhood, sat down to tea, after which short Gospel addresses were given by Messrs. Foster, J. Jackson, R. Burn, and E. Wright. About 60 remained to an after-meeting, at which the plan of salvation was set forth with clearness and simplicity by Mr. Burn, in response to whose final appeal twenty-five or thirty hands were held up as an indication that, at least, that number of consciences had been awakened by the preaching of the truth. It is hoped to repeat this practical effort at least once this winter, providing funds are forthcoming, and friends to whom this plan of combined provision for the body and care for the soul commends itself, are invited to address Mr. G. T. Isaac, Hon. Secretary, "Strangers' Rest," Ratcliff Highway, E.

Evangelistic Notes.

Polmont.—Mrs. Yeoland has been conducting evangelistic services here for four months past; they have been highly appreciated and means of doing much good. Mrs. Yeoland has now gone into Kent for further evangelistic work.

Hampstead Road.—A fortnight's Mission is being conducted at Mornington Hall by Mr. Thomas Wales, of the Evangelisation Society, in which he has also the assistance of others. Interesting meetings are being witnessed, and, though the nightly attendances are not large, there has been much cheering fruit in the conversion of souls.

Grove Hall, Lisson Grove, N.W.—A tea was given to a large number of aged poor and unemployed on Friday, the 11th inst. They listened with marked interest to "the old, old story," told out by Messrs. Wallis and Sprunt. At the close of the meeting each person was presented with a Gospel packet containing an illustrated tract, &c.

Mr. E. C. Davison, evangelist, who was nearly killed by the Sheffield mob about two years ago, has been conducting religious meetings in various places in the North of England with very evident tokens of God's blessing. During the month of January he is engaged to labour in connection with the Presbyterian Church of Swalwell near Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Oxford Music Hall.—The usual season of Sunday evening services in connection with the Evangelistic Mission is now in full progress. Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, of the Boys' Home, Deptford, is preaching during the present month, assisted by some of the rescued boys, who sing from 6.30 p.m. till the regular service opens at 7. His first address, on the 6th inst., was with power, and resulted in several cases of conversion. Prayer for increased blessing is earnestly desired. Helpers will also be warmly welcomed.

Peterhead.—During the New Year holidays special services were held here. Meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life on January 1 were well attended by Christians, and proved to be means of blessing to many. On the following evening a social meeting was held in the music hall, when a large number of the Lord's people came together to bid farewell to three young brethren leaving for Mr. Guinness' Training Institute, to prepare for the foreign Mission field. The bringing out of these young men, along with others, into the Lord's work, is the direct result of the blessed work God is doing in connection with Topping's Hall Mission; many have been brought to the Saviour and led into his loving service. He is still giving blessing.

Requests for Prayer.

THAT a revival may sweep over all the Western States of America.——For 600 or 700 emigrants who leave this country on the 16th inst.——For special services in the Presbyterian Church, York, from Feb. 4 to 10.——That a minister newly-appointed to a remote parish may be greatly blessed.——For special blessing on the circulation of Dr. Moxey's paper, "The Main Sheet," in last week's number of The Christian.——For pecial services at Carlisle commencing on the 21st inst.

CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION SOCIETY.—Some time ago we intimated that this society would be glad to receive communications from laymen willing to render aid in preaching the Gospel. The Secretary, Dr. Wickson, writes to us:—"We are making good progress in utilising the abilities of our lay brethren in this direction. The committee have desired me to solicit the favour of now making known that they will be happy to respond to requests for the services of lay-preachers as occasional supplies for the pulpit, or in conducting religious meetings in lecture halls or Mission rooms. Communications should be addressed to Rev. Dr. Wickson, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C."

Letters to the Editor.

THE EMIGRATION OF WOMEN.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow space for some remarks regarding the emigration of women? The fact is well known that there is a preponderance of women in this country, so many of whom have to earn their own livelihood, and I desire to remind those who are vainly seeking employment at home, of the advantages to be derived from emigration. In the Colonies there is a demand for fairly educated, useful, domesticated women. The beauty of our Colonies, their genial climate and surroundings, together with the kind treatment and fair remuneration given to emigrants from the old Mother Country, ensure a freer and more prosperous life for all who are willing to work, and able to adapt themselves to a simpler mode of living.

Having been appointed Emigration Agent for New Zealand, I am able to obtain a free passage for suitable candidates. The arrangements for these passages is superior to that for the ordinary steerage passengers. It is desirable for them to go out in small parties, as this enables them to be rather more independent of the general society on board ship. There are always a sufficient number of refined in every class to give a tone to the community. I have just received a letter from the wife of a bishop, asking me to send out at least twenty domesticated young women, who could at once be placed in good homes. The highly educated and accomplished are likewise much appreciated in the Colonies. Assistance is given them by the "Female Middle-Class Emigration Society," founded in 1861, of which society I am secretary.—Yours faithfully, Sophia Strongi'th'arm.

THE JUDGMENT SEAT OF CHRIST.

Sir,—In the letter of Mr Van Sommer, page 18 of The Christian of January 10, reference is made to 2 Cor. v. 10, and the perplexing thought presented that all, converted and unconverted, are to appear before the judgment-seat of Christ and to receive according as each has done here below. As the passage stands in our version there is room indeed for such an alarming, such an overwhelming thought. Were it really so there would be an end of all hope for every one of us. No present peace, no future safety, nothing but despair would remain Had we then to give account of our sins before his scrutinising eye, and receive accordingly, would there be any joy in the prospect of meeting our loving Master? But inasmuch as He has loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and that there is no record against his people—no condemnation, all dread is taken away. Nothing awaits us at his tribunal except joy.

But what, then, is the purport of the text? Had our worthy translators rendered the words without putting in any words of their own, it would have read thus: "For we must all appear before the tribunal of Christ that each may receive the things in body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad."

This is written by the Apostle to the saints of God sanctified in Christ Jesus; those who are desiring to please Him, to whom resurrection and glory are promised. These promises are not the portion of the world at large. The unsaved, the unbeliever, is not spoken of in this passage. It refers solely to the Christian. His neighbours think him mad; those of his own kindred speak against the follower of the Nazarene. But whether his course is approved by them or disapproved—whether he be accounted by them mad or sober—it is only fallible human judgment. The Master who employs his servants is the Person to decide whether the servants have conducted themselves according to his orders. And so, in his first letter to the same parties, the Apostle writes: "It is of very small importance that I should be judged of you, or of man's day—He that judgeth me is the Lord."

Again, he tells us that the work of each Christian shall be tried by fire. If approved, he shall receive a reward. If burnt, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire. By the unerring discernment and judgment of him whose eyes are as a flame of fire will this scrutiny be exercised. Some of us will have no reward: others amply recompensed with living garlands of glory—all children of the Most High: all loved with an everlasting love: all heirs of life and immortality, abiding in the house of our Father. How deeply important for us to learn and attend to his orders, lest we fail of the prizes He deigns to bestow upon his children who please Him.

Malvern. Robert Nelson.

"JESUS ONLY."

SIR,—May I call the attention of those who have adopted these words as a motto or text, declaring the believer's sole ground of trust for salvation, that, however true and precious this doctrine, it is not the precise bearing of the words as they stand in connection with their context. They occur in the narrative of the Transfiguration of our Lord, and, by using them, the inspired historian seems to convey the impression of a feeling of disappointment in the minds of the three disciples present. The bright glory-cloud was gone. The voice of the Father was heard no more. The glistening robes and radiant brow of the Son of God no longer attested his divinity. The two witnesses descended from the skies had vanished, and "Jesus only," the Man of Nazareth—in all his lowly mien is left.

The subject, viewed in this light, has been beautifully handled by Pasteur N. Recolin, of Paris, in a sermonette contributed to a religious journal. He illustrates Peter's exclamation, "It is good to be here!" as expressing the complacency of many (1) in times of earthly prosperity; (2) in times of public revival of religion; and (3) in times of personal spiritual elation. Will these disciples trust their Saviour still—in times of privation; when the mission is over; when sensible comforts are withdrawn? He calls upon Christians to welcome "Jesus only" as discerned in the valley of ordinary experiences, and to walk by faith when they can no longer walk as it were by sight.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
Broad Mayne. G. W. BUTLER.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

DEAR SIR,—I cannot agree with your contributor "G." that the argument from Scripture in favour of capital punishment for murder is "anything but clear." The words, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," are surely clear enough. They cannot be taken as a prophecy, for if so, the prophecy would in multitudes of cases be untrue. They must, therefore, be a command; and being addressed, not to an individual nation, but to Noah, as the head of the future human race, nothing but an express repeal of that command can set aside their binding force.

No such repeal can be found in the New Testament. "G." quotes the text, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord," but he overlooks the essential distinction between private revenge and the penalty which a righteous ruler is bound to inflict upon the guilty. If his argument were sound, it would go to prove that judicial penalties of any sort are forbidden by Christianity. The ruler of the land stands in an entirely different position from a private individual in executing vengeance upon the evil-doer. His business is to uphold the interests of justice, and to protect the innocent by being a terror to the wicked.

So far from declaring that the command to Noah is repealed, Paul distinctly implies that it is still in force when he says of the ruler, "If thou do evil be afraid, for he beareth not the sword in vain; for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath on him that doeth evil."

I think that these passages leave little room for doubt with those who are willing to decide this weighty question by the Word of God.—Truly yours, HORACE NOEL.
Woking, Surrey, Jan. 11.

ROME'S TACTICS.

SIR,—That the old Jesuitical excuse, "Man may do evil that good may come," is still working its deadly leaven in the homes of our people, may be seen in the following circumstance, for the truth of which I can vouch.

A young girl, not yet seventeen, born and reared a member of the Protestant faith, came home from a situation a few weeks before Christmas. This girl, unknown to her father, became a visitor at a well-known monastery in East London. Her visits were discovered, and I myself interviewed the girl, when she expressed herself satisfied upon the points at issue between the Roman Catholic and Protestant faith, and promised that she would think no more about the teaching of Roman Catholicism.

To-day she was to have left here for a situation. She even called to bid me good-bye, and told me she was going to be with a Church of England family at B——.

Two hours later I discovered that instead of going as stated to B——, she had, at the instigation of the priest, gone to another situation in a Roman Catholic family, and this quite unknown to her parents. On my interviewing the priest, he acknowledged that it was his doing, and that it was for the girl's soul's good.

Now, Sir, if this teaching is not at variance with the common instinct of humanity and the moral teaching of the Bible, I am at a loss to know what is.

I write this that the Protestants of East London may awake to the solemn obligations resting upon them, and that they may keep a sharp eye on the tactics of that destroyer of all home and national happiness, the Roman Catholic Church.—Your obedient servant, HENRY A. MASON.

FULL SALVATION AS SEEN IN BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. By Rev. W. HASLAM, M.A. 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The Pilgrim's Progress has often been commented on before, but Mr. Haslam introduces it to the reader from an entirely new point of view. Every one who is or desires to be acquainted with Bunyan's famous allegory, should read this latest attempt to grasp its full spiritual significance. The author has succeeded in throwing new light upon an old theme, and many will feel that he has in so doing made the pilgrim pathway much better understood, and much easier to trace. Thoughtful readers will find themselves led to the Word of God, and stimulated to seek higher attainments in the Divine life by its perusal. As a gift-book to young Christians, and for general circulation, it may be unhesitatingly commended. It is attractively bound and copiously illustrated.

"FOR HARRY'S SAKE" (3d., Curwen & Sons, 8, Warwick-lane, E.C.), a well-told story—the first of a series of Temperance stories, with songs for Bands of Hope, &c.

SWEET HERBS FOR THE BITTER CRY is a three-penny pamphlet (337, Strand, W.C.), by Rev. G. W. M'CREE, giving hints for remedying the state of "horrible and outcast London."

THE TEMPERANCE WORKER AND RECITER, 1d. monthly, edited by Rev. F. WAGSTAFF (337, Strand, W.C.), contains useful articles and hints for those engaged in Temperance work.

THE LICHFIELD LETTER LEAFLETS, by J. H., are a good selection of verses of poetry for enclosing in letters, and may be had from Mr. A. C Lomax, Printer, Lichfield, 3d. per packet.

BIBLE PICTURES FOR LITTLE PEOPLE. Sunday School Union. UNCLE HARRY deserves a vote of thanks from a host of parents and nurses for this charming Sunday book for the little ones.

TEMPERANCE BALLADS. By DAWSON BURNS, D.D. (337, Strand, W.C.). These stirring ballads and hymns will be of no small service for Temperance meetings. A brief history of the author, with portrait, is given.

BUCKETS AND SPADES. Words and music by Mrs. E. CAMPBELL. Dean & Son. A charming collection of rhymes, with music to match. A splendid gift for young folks with musical proclivities.

The CONGREGATIONAL YEAR BOOK for 1884. 2s. Hodder & Stoughton. Nearly 500 pages of information in connection with the Congregational body in all parts of the world. A cheap and useful book, supplying a mass of intelligence which will be found useful to those whom it may immediately concern.

"VOICES OF THE NEW CREATION" (A. Southey, 146, Fenchurch-street, E.C.) is an illuminated shilling packet of twelve cards, containing well-selected texts, verses of poetry, and thoughts from various writers. They are beautifully got up in gold and colours. The proceeds are devoted entirely to rescue work.

DAILY MEDITATIONS ON THE CHRISTIAN LIFE. By Mrs. HENRY SOUTHGATE. Charles Griffin & Co. A collection of most precious truths in prose and verse from the best authors, with selected passages from the Psalms and New Testament arranged for each day of the year. Such a book ought to find its way into the homes of many, shedding light into the heart, and stimulating a desire for a closer walk with God.

AILEEN AROON, and other tales of faithful friends and favourites. By GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N. S. W. Partridge & Co. Very clever, sympathetic, and in every way delightful sketches, drawn from life, of the author's domestic pets, and sundry other birds, beasts, fishes, &c., he has encountered in his wanderings over the face of the globe. Young people with a fondness for dumb animals will be charmed by these memories, enlivened as they are with sundry biographical, domestic, and descriptive touches.

THE TEACHER'S STOREHOUSE. Elliot Stock. The eighth volume of a useful treasury of material for working Sunday-school teachers.

WORDS OF CONSOLATION. G. Stoneman, 1s. A little book printed in large type, containing words of comfort for the tired and sorrowful.

THE NEW EARTH. Part II., 6d. E. W. Allen, 4, Ave Maria-lane, E.C. Gives some good hints on Christian life, but contains statements which appear to us extravagant and unscriptural.

STEPPING-STONES TO HIGHER THINGS. By Capt. SETON CHURCHILL. Nisbet & Co. This is an admirable idea, well carried out. We commended the book when it was first published, and are glad to give this second edition a cordial greeting.

LIVING WATERS. Volume for 1883. Edited by Rev. ERNEST BOYS. Partridge & Co. This volume is the organ of the "Christian Progress Scripture Reading Union." The articles are short and spiritual. Provision is made for both old and young.

THE CLOSING DAYS OF CHRISTENDOM. By B. B. WALE. Partridge & Co. This volume has reached a second edition, which has been greatly enlarged. The author endeavours to harmonise the Historical and Futurist Schools of interpreters by showing there is a double fulfilment of prophecy.

CHARACTERISTICS OF CHRISTIANITY. By STANLEY LEATHES, D.D. Nisbet & Co. The book contains much that is suggestive, and calculated to strengthen and guide intelligent faith in the authority and value of the religion of Christ as a divine revelation, and as destined ultimately to fill the world with his glory, and to bring the nations to the obedience of the faith.

THE POLAR CRUSOES. Edited by PERCY B. ST. JOHN. Dean & Son, Fleet-street, E.C. A thrilling story of youthful adventure; a most interesting story for boys. HOW TO WIN LOVE. By the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." Same publisher. A companion to the above, and intended chiefly for girls. The lessons taught are both practical and ennobling.

JESSIE MACDONALD. By J. S. WILLIAMS. Partridge & Co. The story of an English girl who was married to a Frenchman, and suddenly found herself an unmarried woman, according to French law. It is a sad story, and written as a warning to English girls to beware of contracting marriages of this kind while French law remains in its present unsatisfactory state. The story is dedicated to Miss Leigh, of the Paris Homes for young Englishwomen.

The Annual volume of the MESSENGER FOR THE CHILDREN, issued from the publishing office of The Presbyterian Church of England, is a good specimen of the old-fashioned type of magazine, in which fiction occupies but a very subordinate space. Yet it is full of interest, instruction, and information. Incidents of missionary life and work abound, and interesting Bible-readings form a prominent feature, and make a book that is by no means dull.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE. Addresses to Young Men. By DUNCAN M. WEST. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Under this title we have three groups of addresses delivered in connection with the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., and prefaced by a short history of the writer's connection with the Association, which will enhance its value to those who buy the volume as a souvenir. But we hope its circulation will not be limited to the author's own immediate circle, although that must be large. These addresses are worthy of perusal by young men everywhere. They are full of Christ, full of Gospel teaching and its practical adaptation to the needs of every-day life. The chapter on "The Crises of Life" must have created an impression for good on the minds of many hearers.

THE GOSPEL IN PARIS. Sermons by the Rev. Dr. BERSIER. Nisbet & Co. The distinguished pastor of l'Eglise de l'Etoile is a power in Paris, both as an orator and as a practical reformer, and readers of these discourses will feel no surprise at such a preacher securing a prominent position in the city where he labours. As sermons they are of a very high order, while for outspoken rebuke of worldliness and social evils, such as abound in the gay French capital, as well as for thoughtful exposition of Bible truth, they are worthy of high praise. We could wish that definite teaching on vital aspects of the Gospel was more freely blended with the general truths dwelt on; but all must rejoice that such preaching as M. Bersier's commands crowded audiences in Paris. An interesting sketch of the author's life precedes the discourses, written by the Rev. Frederic Hastings, by whom the volume is edited in its English guise.

HAND-BOOKS FOR BIBLE CLASSES. ST. MARK'S GOSPEL. By Professor LINDSAY, D D. Clark, Edinburgh. 2s. 6d. To say that this book is fully equal to all and any of those which have preceded it in the same series, is to give it high praise, but were we to say more even than that, we should not exaggerate. The Introduction and the Notes form a mine of wealth, which students of this Gospel should work with diligence. There is a completeness about the work which gives it a peculiar value to the appreciative reader.

WOMAN'S WORK IN THE GREAT HARVEST FIELD. Annual volume. S. W. Partridge & Co. If one might venture to whisper in the ears of some of those rich people who have lots of money which they are anxious to dispose of in a useful manner, it would be a wise hint to suggest that they should buy up a number of these handsome annual volumes, and present a copy to any Christian women of their acquaintance who have not yet found a vocation in life. The examples of successful labour recorded in these pages form a loud call to "go and do likewise." It would also cheer the flagging spirits of many a weary worker plodding on in an obscure corner to read these stirring records, not the least useful of the many useful emanations from Mildmay.

POPPIES AND PANSIES. A Story for Children. By EMMA MARSHALL. James Nisbet & Co. Girls of all ages will rejoice in this simply told tale, chronicling the doings of a pair of little sisters left in the charge of strangers, while their father is seeking to retrieve his shattered fortunes in a foreign land. The characters are extremely well drawn. Little Pansy Bengough, with her "thought book," is a jewel of a child, and may fairly rank with Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," while the thoughtful benevolence of her mother in caring for the outcast and the poor is of a kind which may safely be emulated, and should tend to promote a right spirit in the dealing of the rich with the poor. The binding is of the daintiest kind, characteristic of the title and the book.

18 to 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

£700 is earnestly asked for to help on the work of God at Christ Church, Tonbridge. The Gospel is faithfully preached at this place of worship, and numbers have already, by the grace of God, been brought to a knowledge of the truth, and led to build on the Rock of Ages. District Cottage Meetings and Town Mission Work are also conducted in connection with the Church.

The debt on the building is found to be a great burden, the congregation being chiefly composed of the labouring classes; and those who love the truth, and are interested in the spread of it, are appealed to. Any Subscriptions forwarded to the London and County Bank, Tonbridge Branch, or to Mr. T. DOWN, High-street, Tonbridge, will be most thankfully acknowledged.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

President—THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

This Society was established in 1862, to supply Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Artificial Limbs, &c., and every other description of mechanical support to the poor, without limit as to locality or disease.

53,320 Appliances have already been given.

Contributions are earnestly solicited. Bankers—Messrs. BARCLAY & Co., Lombard Street.

Office—Salisbury square, Fleet-street. WILLIAM TRESIDDER, Secretary.

AN URGENT APPEAL FOR £30

THE WAY TO GOD.

A series of Addresses showing the Way of Salvation.

By D. L. MOODY.

CONTENTS.

"LOVE THAT PASSETH KNOWLEDGE."	WORDS OF COUNSEL.
CHRIST ALL AND IN ALL.	A DIVINE SAVIOUR.
THE GATEWAY INTO THE KINGDOM.	REPENTANCE AND RESTITUTION.
THE TWO CLASSES.	ASSURANCE OF SALVATION.
	BACKSLIDING.

"In this volume I have endeavoured to show men the WAY TO GOD. Beginning with the 'LOVE OF GOD' to man, the book proceeds to show how man can be just with God; and seeks to lead souls to Him who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life."
Preface.

POWER FROM ON HIGH;

Or, The Secret of Success in Christian Life and Christian Work.

By D. L. MOODY.

17TH THOUSAND. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"This series of earnest and solemn Addresses bear throughout that stamp of honest, eager earnestness, which is so striking a characteristic of the writer's labours as a preacher."—Clerical World.

ADDRESSES: BY D. L. MOODY.

Revised. 104TH THOUSAND. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"With the effect of these Addresses when spoken the whole land is acquainted, and now that they are written they will tend to keep in force the impression they have already made. The book is clearly printed, on good paper, is handy in form, and is sure of a wide circulation."—Primitive Methodist.

THE FAITHFUL SAYING.

A Series of Addresses by D. L. MOODY.

10TH THOUSAND. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Full of the Gospel, well illustrated, thoroughly alive."—Sword and Trowel.

"They are the fresh and earnest utterances of one who longs to honour Christ and to do good to men."—Evangelical Magazine.

30TH THOUSAND. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Practical, full of anecdotes and point."—Friend.

"It will be sufficient to say that the book contains Mr. MOODY'S vividness of expression, illustrative anecdotes, fulness of faith and hope in undiminished measure."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

"Simple, direct, anecdotal, and earnest."—Freeman.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

By D. L. MOODY.

13th Thousand. Tinted Covers, 4d.; Cloth Limp, 6d.

"The moment a man takes hold of the truth that Jesus is coming back again to receive his followers to Himself, this world loses its hold upon him. Gas stocks, and water stocks, and stocks in banks and railroads, are of very much less consequence to him then. His heart is free, and he looks for the blessed appearing of his Lord, who, at his coming, will take him into his blessed Kingdom."—Extract.

In Tinted Covers, 4d.; Cloth Limp, 6d.

THE ENQUIRY ROOM. Hints for Dealing with the Anxious.

By GEORGE SOLTAU.

These "HINTS" were given in the form of an Address to the Christian Workers who undertook to converse with and assist the ENQUIRERS, in connection with the meetings of Mr. MOODY and Mr. SANKEY. They are now published in the present form, in the hope that they may be found useful in other spheres of evangelistic work.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

By Rev. Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR.

Superior Edition.—Cloth, Elegant, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.
Cheap Edition.—Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"This book is original. Dr. Saphir has the power of originating and combining, which is the mark of genius. It is the old truths to which we listen; but the old truths clothed in a living language, set in new lights, and drawn out in fresh applications."—Weekly Review.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST.

Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Gilchrist preaches a full Gospel. The fulness of Christ for every need of fallen humanity is set forth in a clear and convincing and attractive manner."

HENRY MOORHOUSE, the English Evangelist.

"The record is full of interesting incidents from which counsel and encouragement may be gathered; and we heartily commend it to the attention of those who would know what may be done by workers somewhat off the ordinary recognised lines."
The Rock.

BIBLE READINGS BY HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We do not wonder that those who heard Moorhouse's Bible Readings found them full of power and suggestion. To him the Word of God was a sword—the only one worth using in spiritual warfare."—Liverpool Courier.

"This volume will be heartily welcomed by not only workers in the field, but by all who love to study the Divine Word. A careful reading must stimulate moral seriousness and earnest service for Christ."—Christian Commonwealth.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.

Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word 'seven' in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth, 1s.

RUTH, THE MOABITESS.

A Series of Bible Readings on The Book of Ruth.

By HENRY MOORHOUSE.

"Contains many fresh and original remarks, all tending to practical usefulness; a capital sixpennyworth of commenting on a favourite book."—Sword and Trowel.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be had of any Bookseller.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

In very large type, printed in blue ink, size 31 in. by 20 in., 70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."
2. "The wages of sin is death."
3. "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
4. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
5. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
6. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
7. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
8. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
9. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
10. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him; to all that call upon Him in truth."
11. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
12. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
13. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
14. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
15. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
16. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
17. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
18. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
19. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
20. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
21. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
22. "Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
23. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
24. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
25. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
31. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
32. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
33. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
34. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
35. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."
37. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me; and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."
27. "Now."
28. "God is love."
29. "Behold, He cometh."
30. "Have faith in God."
41. "Prepare to meet thy God."
49. "Thou God seest me."
50. "Be ye kind one to another."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASES of a WIDOW and LITTLE GIRL in NORFOLK.

I have received a letter from Mrs. H. M. SMITH, dated September 11, from "near the School, SWAFIELD, NORTH WAISHAM, in which she asks me to reduce the charge for medicine to a very poor patient, anxious to persevere with my treatment. In this letter she says: "Having myself been restored to health by your valuable medicine, also my little girl, I recommend it with the greatest confidence, and wherever I can."

The case of Mrs. Smith was one of broncho-phthisis, which all other means had failed to touch. She was under my care for about five months, and since her recovery has done what she could to make it known.

Her little daughter shortly after came under my treatment. Her case was somewhat like the mother's, but attended with an affection of the stomach and bowels, there being sickness and diarrhœa alternately, with night sweats. In one month amendment was manifest, and she progressed rapidly to recovery.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM.

The human system is subject to the action of chemicals, the action of the elements, and the action of heat, of force, and of light. It is controlled on all sides by law—the laws of the atmosphere, the laws of the earth, the laws of digestion, of sleep, of exercise, of emotion, of the senses, and of the mind: and as the assimilation of food, the respiration of air, and the yielding of the brain to sleep produce unerringly, and by law, their appropriate effects, so that it can be safely affirmed à priori, that while a man digests he shall be nourished, while he breathes he shall live, while he sleeps to rest he shall rise to work,—so it is also in the region of the possible that when a man diseased applies the appointed remedy, he shall inevitably recover. Through certain influences, in certain climates, or under similar unfavourable conditions, men become similarly diseased, and exhibit the same symptoms. The inhalation of given malaria will necessitate the consequent disease; a journey to some coasts is accompanied by the black vomit; impure air and insufficient food excite the latent seeds of consumption. So far, the pathology of disease is certain; the thing required is, that the treatment should proceed by methods similarly fixed and definite.

From such considerations, it will be manifest that there are two prominent characteristics of our treatment by Magnetism, which give it precedence over other systems. The first is, its mode of operation is not symptomatic, but constitutional; and the second, that its greatest successes are achieved in chronic and complicated cases. This is not on account of its being a specific for certain affections, but because it gives a new impetus to the failing energies of the system, regulating the vital force and consequent functional action of each organ, thereby maintaining health and harmony where derangement and deficiency of nervous energy had previously existed.

From Mr. STEWART, 127, Front Street, Leadgate, Durham.

"January 7, 1884.

"I am very thankful to be able to tell you of the great change in Mrs. Stewart of late. She can now walk a good distance, whereas at one time she could not get from the bedside to the fireside, and often had to be carried thither. I attribute the improvement entirely to your treatment, and to God's blessing upon the means used. She has been under your treatment three years, and I am sure the result attained has surprised herself, and, in fact, all of us."

From Miss SYMES, Pease Lane, Dorchester.

"December 14, 1883.

"Your treatment, commenced a few months since, has proved very beneficial in my case, although at first it seemed to have no effect whatever on my ailment, which, you will remember, was one of spinal weakness. Thank God, I am now feeling better than I have done for a very long time, and I really believe I am stronger: I am certainly not so nervous as formerly, and I suffer less with my side: I can also sleep much better.

"It will be a pleasure to me to do anything in my power to encourage other sufferers to seek your advice, for I have the utmost confidence in the efficacy of your remedy."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to reply to quiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SONS OF GOD.

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST.

AT the close of the first verse of 1 John iii. —"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God"—our revisers have supplied the two Greek words καὶ ἐσμέν, and translated them, "and we are." These words appear, indeed, in the next verse; but their use in the first verse makes the statement of the Apostle there much more emphatic, and, indeed, qualifies the statement that we are "called the children of God," into an intensity of meaning that must be very precious to every believer, and goes a long way toward giving us a fuller and richer exegesis of the passage.

To be called the children of God is an unspeakable grace; but that does not tell the whole story of what is involved in our adoption. There have been children not born into a family who have been adopted and henceforth called the children of the parents who have adopted them: and yet their standing has been different even in outward things from that of the children born into the family. There are many grades or degrees of adoption into earthly families, all of which are gracious and carry privilege and favour with them; but the very highest degree that any earthly love or power can give must, in the nature of the case, come short of what is granted when God takes a sinner into his family. Moses "was called the son of Pharaoh's daughter," and doubtless every privilege and honour that she could bestow upon him was given; and yet Moses was not a real son. It could not be said that Moses "was called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and he was;" for that last statement would have carried with it the thought that he not only sustained that outward and formal relation of a son to her, but that he was her son in very essence.

Now the apostle undoubtedly intended to say that the marvel of God's love was seen, not in that we are called his sons, but that we are, in point of fact, his sons. And this is the glory of the Christian's adoption, that he is not a son outwardly but characteristically and by an inward birth of the Spirit. Dean Alford, in his Critica Commentary, says these words were added "to serve the purpose of bringing out the reality of the state conferred with the title, in spite of any non-recognition of it by the unbelieving world." This "is of the highest possible significance, because we bear not the name only, but the essence," of sonship. In his commentary on John i. 12—"to them gave He power to become the sons of God"—he says, and truly, that this expression involves far more than mere privilege, even "the whole generation and process of our life in the Spirit." That is, "to them gave He the birth of the Spirit from above," of which our Lord told Nicodemus, insisting that every man must have it before he could see or enter into the Kingdom of God. This is the very essence of Christianity in a believer, that he has ceased to be a natural man and has become a spiritual man. He is no longer a mere creature of God, but has become a very child of God; not in some outward and gracious privileges only, but in essential nature. It is this fact that the world does not recognise, even as it did not recognise in Jesus the supernatural fact of eternal sonship. . . . .

Not many years ago, in the beautiful and proud city of B——, a wealthy merchant was sitting, one cold November evening, after having come home from business, in his elegant parlour, reading the evening paper. He was startled by what seemed to him to be the cry of an infant at his front door. The cry being repeated, he went forth and found in fact a little infant carefully wrapped in a blanket and placed in a basket upon the threshold of his door. He took the little waif into the house, and delivered it over to his wife. They kept it over-night, and then turned it over to the proper authorities, that it might be cared for at the Foundling Asylum in the city. The next day, the motherly heart of the Christian woman who sent the little waif from her home to the cold charity of the Foundling Asylum, smote her, and she sent and fetched the child back. "Who knows," she said to her husband, "but that God sent that child to us to rear for himself?" They decided to keep it for a time, at any rate until they might know the mind of the Lord.

After six months, in which the baby had been carefully and tenderly cared for, the father and mother agreed that the time had come to make a final disposition of their foundling. A family council was called, consisting of father, mother, three sons and a daughter. The father explained to the children the necessities of the case, and asked the children what should be done with the child. They had all learned to love the little one, and when the father put the question direct: "Shall we send it away or shall we keep it?" the answer came promptly and spontaneously from all: "Keep it." Then the father explained to them the different phases of relationship to the family that it was possible to give the child. It might be kept and reared as a dependent; or it might be taken into a closer relation and be adopted in an outward way, or yet more closely, allowing it to have the family name and all the privileges of children; or, yet again, it might be legally adopted. In the latter case it would become joint heir with the other children to the large inheritance which would be theirs. The case being stated and fully discussed, the children were dismissed to consider the matter without further conference among themselves, for one week, when the family council would be reconvened, and every child should vote for himself what the relation of the little waif should be. When the day of decision came and the ballots were opened, it was found that every child had voted to make the little stranger a child and heir. Beyond this they could not go. The father and mother confirmed the children's vote, and henceforth reared the little girl as their own.

In the course of several years, as the child grew, she was with other children placed in a select school not far from her beautiful home. In the meantime it had been an anxious question with them all as to what would be the wisest course to pursue as to unfolding to the child, now that she was well grown, the truth as to her real origin and relation to the family whose name she bore and to whose fortune she was a joint heir. They would have gladly kept the secret from her forever if that were possible. But, while this anxious question was still undecided, one day the little girl came bursting into the house, and, running to her room, shut and locked the door. Nor would she open it, even to her mother. For hours she stayed there, sobbing and crying on her bed, until nature was exhausted and she slept. After that she opened to her mother. For a long time she refused to tell the cause of her grief. But at last, after repeated and tender entreaties from her mother, she said: "Mother, am I your child?"

"Why, yes, my darling. Have you ever had any occasion to doubt it?"

"But am I father's child, too?"

"Certainly, you are the daughter and beloved child of us both; and are not these (naming the other children) your sister and brothers?"

"Yes, but am I your truly child?"

"Why, my dear," said the perplexed mother, now not having the courage to confirm the little one's fears, and hoping to tide her over this first great suspicion and the present agitation before revealing the truth to her, "has not everything that love and tenderness could do been done to make you happy in your home? Has anyone ever treated or said anything to make you doubt that you were our precious darling? Have you ever known me as anything else to you, but a mother?" "No, mother," she said, flinging herself on the mother's neck with a great sob. "But did you born me? Tell me that." Ah, here was the crucial question that was agitating that young child's heart, and which she must have settled. It seems that, in some childish quarrel with one of her school-mates, she had been taunted with the fact that she was a nameless foundling, picked up on the doorstep of her foster-parents' house. They had called her a "beggar's brat."

Now, no human love or power could do more for her than had been done; but after all she was not a born child of that family, nor can she ever be made nearer to them in the essence of her relationship. But thanks be to God, when he picked us up, abandoned, naked, and dying, on the doorstep of his mercy, it was his time of love; and he received us and covered our nakedness, and decked us with every beautiful grace and called us by his name; but he did more. He sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, and put the true cry of a child in our mouths, "Abba, Father," and made us his very own children. Who can estimate the unspeakable glory of this love? No wonder John calls adoring attention to it. No wonder he put the "καὶ ἐσμέν" at the close of his declaration. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the children of God, AND WE ARE."—New York Independent.

PROGRESS WITHOUT POVERTY. — Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Bart., presiding at a thrift meeting held at Runton, near Cromer, on the 10th inst., referred to the improvidence of various classes, and the great need that exists for the development of the principles of thrift at the present time. An address on "Progress without Poverty," by Mr. T. Bowden Green (secretary of the National Thrift Society), was followed by a distribution of thrift literature.

RANGOON COFFEE-ROOMS AND SEAMEN'S REST.—This institution, located at 93, Fraser-street, Rangoon, in the heart of the town, and in that quarter where grogshops and still worse places are most numerous, is the only place of public resort in Rangoon where seamen or soldiers can spend a quiet hour or obtain refreshments without being exposed to the drink temptation. The work is conducted on an exclusively Gospel and Total Abstinence basis, under the immediate supervision of several Christian workers, who are able to devote considerable time to its interests. Military officers and civilians who have served, or are interested in Burmah, are earnestly asked to help with subscriptions. Mr. G. Vansomeren, Government Advocate, is hon. treasurer, and Rev. J. E. Robinson hon. secretary.

THE ELEMENTS OF TRUE PRAYER.—2.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

At Clapham, Friday Afternoon, January 11.

A THIRD element of successful prayer is

RESTITUTION.

If I have at any time taken what does not belong to me, and am not willing to make restitution, my prayers will not go very far towards heaven. It is a singular thing, but I have observed that I have never touched on this subject without hearing of immediate results. A man was telling me last night that he thought I would not need to dwell on this subject, because most probably there would be no one present to-day who would need to make restitution. But I think if the Spirit of God searches our hearts, we shall find a good many things will have to be done that we never thought of before.

After Zaccheus met with Christ, things looked altogether different. I venture to say the idea of making restitution never entered into his mind before. He thought, probably, that morning, that he was a perfectly honest man. But when the Lord came and spoke to him, he saw himself in an altogether different light. Notice how short his speech was. The only thing, put on record, that he said, was this: "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." A short speech, but how the words have come ringing down through the ages!

By making that remark he confessed his sin—how he had been dishonest. Besides that, he showed he knew the requirements of the law of Moses. If a man had taken what did not belong to him, he was not only to return it, but to multiply it by four. I think that man, in this dispensation, ought to be quite as honest as man under the law. I am getting so tired and sick of your mere sentimentalism, that does not straighten out a man's life. We may sing hymns and psalms, and offer prayers, but they will be an abomination to God, unless we are willing to be thoroughly straightforward in our daily life. Nothing will give Christianity such a hold upon the world as to have God's believing people begin to act in this way. Zaccheus had probably more influence in Jericho after this, than any other man in it.

In Exodus 22 we read—

"If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep."

That was the law that God laid down for his people, and I believe it is as binding to-day as it was then. If we have taken anything from any man; if we have in any way defrauded a man, let us not only confess it, but do all we can to make restitution. If we have misrepresented any one; if we have started some slander, or some false report about him, let us do all in our power to undo the wrong.

A man came to one of our meetings a short time ago, when this subject was touched upon. The memory of a dishonest transaction flashed into his mind. He saw at once how it was that his prayers were not answered, but "came back unto his own bosom," as the scripture phrase has it. He left the meeting, took the train and went to a distant city, where he had defrauded his employer years before. He went straight to this man, confessed what he had done, and offered to make restitution. Then he remembered another transaction, in which he had failed to meet the just demands upon him; he at once made arrangements to have a large amount repaid. He came back to the place where we were holding the meetings, and God blessed him wonderfully in his own soul. I have not met a man for a long time that seemed to have received such a blessing.

Two years ago, in the north of England, a woman came to one of the meetings, and appeared to be very anxious about her soul. For some time she did not seem to be able to get peace. The truth was, she was covering up one thing she was not willing to confess. At last the burden got to be too great, and she said to a worker: "I never get down on my knees to pray, but a few bottles of wine keep coming up right before me." It appeared that years before, when she was housekeeper, she had taken some bottles of wine belonging to her employer. The worker said: "Why do you not make restitution?" The woman replied that the man was dead, and besides, she did not know how much it was worth. "Are there any heirs living to whom you can make restitution?" She said there was a son living at some distance, but she thought it would be a very humiliating thing, so she kept back for some time. At last she felt as if she must have a clear conscience at any cost, so she took the train and went to the place where the son of her employer resided. She took five pounds with her; she did not know exactly what the wine was worth, but that would cover it any rate. The man said he did not want the money, but she replied, "I do not want it; it has burnt into my pocket long enough." So he agreed to take the half of it and give it to some charitable object. Then she came back, and I think she was one of the happiest mortals I have ever met with. She said she could hardly tell whether she was in the body or out of it—such a blessing had come to her soul.

It may be that there is something in your life that needs straightening out, something that happened perhaps twenty years ago, and that you had forgotten till the Spirit of God brought it to your remembrance. If you are not willing to make restitution, you cannot expect God to give you great blessing. Perhaps that is the reason why so many of your prayers are not answered.

The next thing I would mention as an element of prayer is

THANKSGIVING.

We ought to be more thankful for what we get from God. Perhaps some of you mothers have a child in your family who is constantly complaining — never thankful. You know there is not very much pleasure in doing anything for a child like that. If you meet with a beggar who is alway grumbling, and never seems to be thankful for what you give, you very soon shut the door in his face altogether. Ingratitude is about the hardest thing we have to meet with. Here we are, getting blessings from God day after day; yet how little praise and thanksgiving there are in the Church of God. There is a great deal more said in the Bible about praise than prayer, yet how few praise-meetings there are. Among all the apostles, none suffered so much as Paul, but none of them do we find so often giving thanks as he. Take his letter to the Phillipians. Remember what he suffered at Phillipi—how they put him in prison, and gave him stripes down in the dark dungeon. Yet every letter in that epistle speaks of rejoicing and giving thanks. There is that well-known passage, chap. iv. 6: "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." As some one has said, there are here three precious things: "careful for nothing, prayerful for everything, and thankful for anything." We always get more by being thankful for what God has done for us. In Cor. i. 3, Paul says again: "We give thanks to God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you." So he was constantly giving thanks; take up any one of his epistles, and you will find them full of praise to God.

The next thing we need to have, if we would get our prayers answered, is

UNITY.

If we do not love one another we certainly will not have much power with God in prayer. One of the saddest things in the present day is the division in God's Church. You notice that when the power of God came upon the early Church, it was when they were all of one accord. I believe the blessing of Pentecost never would have been given but for that spirit of unity. If they had been divided and quarrelling among themselves, do you think the Holy Ghost would have come and those thousands been converted? I have noticed, since Mr. Sankey and I have been together, that if we have gone to a town where three churches were united in the work, we have had greater blessing than if only one church was in sympathy. And if there have been twelve churches united, the blessing has multiplied fourfold; it has always been in proportion to the spirit of unity that has been manifested. Where there are bickerings and division, and where the spirit of unity is absent, there is very little blessing.

There are diversities of gifts—that is clearly taught—but there is one spirit. If we have all been redeemed with the same blood, we ought to see eye to eye in spiritual things. In 1 Cor. xii. 4, Paul writes:—

"Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

"And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord."

If I belong to the family of God, I have been bought with the same blood, though I may not belong to the same sect or party as another. What we want to do is to get these miserable, cursed sectarian walls taken right away. Then Christianity would be like a red-hot ball rolling over the face of the earth. Our weakness has been in our division, and what we need is that there should be no schism or division among those who love the Lord Jesus Christ. In 1 Cor. i. 10, we read of the first symptoms of sectarianism coming into the Early Church:—

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.

"For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you.

"Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ.

"Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?"

Notice how one said, "I am of Paul;" and another, "I am of Apollos;" and another, "I am of Cephas." Apollos was a young orator, and the people had been carried away by his eloquence. Some said Cephas, or Peter, was of the regular Apostolic line, because he had been with the Lord, and Paul had not. So they were divided, and Paul wrote this letter in order to settle the question.

What a strange state of things Paul and Cephas, and Apollos would find if they could come to the world to-day! The little tree that sprung up at Corinth has grown up into a tree like Nebuchadnezzar's, with many of the fowls of heaven gathered into it. This is the Week of Prayer. Suppose Paul and Cephas were to come down to one of these meetings; perhaps they would hear something about Churchmen and Dissenters. "A Dissenter!" says Paul, "what is that?" "We have got a Church of England; and then there are those who dissent from that Church." "Oh indeed! are there two classes of Christians here, then?" "I am sorry to say there are a good many more divisions. The Dissenters themselves are split up. There are Wesleyans, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Independents, and so on; even these are all divided up." "Is it possible," says Paul, "that there are so many divisions?" "Yes; the Church of England is pretty well divided itself. There is the Broad Church and the High Church, and the Low Church and the High Lows. Then there is the Lutheran Church, and away in Russia they have got the Greek Church, and so on." I declare I do not know what Paul and Cephas would think if they came back to the world; they would find a strange state of things. It is one of the most humiliating things in the present day to see how God's family are divided up. If we love the Lord Jesus Christ the burden of our hearts will be that God may bring us closer together, so that we may love one another, and rise above all party feeling.

I was in a little town in America some time ago. One night as I came out of the meeting I saw another building where the people were coming out. I said to a friend, "Have you got two churches here?" "Oh yes." "How do you get on?" "Oh, we get on very well." "I am glad to hear that. Was your brother minister at the meeting?" "Oh no; we don't have anything to do with each other. We find that is the best way." And they called that "getting on very well." Oh, may God bring us together to-day! Let our hearts be like drops of water flowing together. I think these meetings, with the people of God coming together, are a sort of foretaste of heaven. There we shall not find any Baptists, or Methodists, or Congregationalists, or Episcopalians; we shall all be one in Christ. We leave all our party names behind us when we leave this earth. Oh, that the Spirit of God may to-day sweep away all these miserable sectarian walls that we have been building up!

Did you ever notice that the last prayer Jesus Christ made on earth, before they led him away to Calvary, was that his disciples might all be one? I suppose He looked down the stream of time, and saw that divisions would come—how Satan would try to divide the flock of God. Nothing will silence infidels so quickly as Christians everywhere being united. Then our testimony will have weight with the ungodly and the careless. But when they see how Christians are divided, God cannot work. The Holy Spirit is grieved, and there is little power where there is no unity.

If I thought I had one drop of sectarian blood in my veins, I would let it out before I went to bed; if I had one sectarian hair in my head, I would pull it out. Let us get right to the heart of Jesus Christ; then our prayers will be acceptable to God, and showers of blessings will descend.

The next thing is perhaps the most difficult of all to deal with:

FORGIVENESS.

I believe this is keeping more people from having power with God than any other thing—they are not willing to cultivate the spirit of forgiveness. If we allow the root of bitterness to spring up in our hearts against some one, our prayer will not be answered. It may not be an easy thing to live in sweet fellowship with all those with whom we come in contact, but that is what the grace of God is given to us for. The disciples' prayer is a test of sonship; if we can pray it all from the heart we have good reason to think that we have been really born of God. Though this prayer has been such a blessing to the world, I believe it has also been a great snare; many stumble over it right into perdition. They do not weigh its meaning and take its facts right into their hearts. I have no sympathy with this idea of universal sonship — that all men are the sons of God. The Bible teaches very plainly that we are adopted into the family of God. If all were sons God would not need to adopt any. We are all God's by creation, but when people teach that any man can say, "Our Father which art in heaven," whether he is born of God or not, I think that is contrary to Scripture. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Sonship in the family is the privilege of the believer. "In this the children of God are manifest and the children of the devil," says the apostle (1 John iii. 10). If we are doing the will of God that is a very good sign that we are born of God. If we have no desire to do that will, how can we call God "our Father?"

Another thing. We cannot really pray for God's kingdom to come until we are in it. If we should pray for the coming of God's kingdom while we are rebelling against Him, we are only seeking for our own condemnation. No unrenewed man really wants God's will to be done on the earth. You might write over the door of every unsaved man's house, and over his place of business, "God's will is not done here." If the nations were really to put up this prayer, all their armies could be discharged. They tell us there are some twelve millions of men in the standing armies of Europe alone. But men do not want God's will done on earth as it is in heaven; that is the trouble.

Now let me come to the part I want to dwell upon: "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us." This is the only part of the prayer that Christ explained.

"For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Mat. vi. 14, 15).

Notice that when you go into the door of God's Kingdom, you go in through the door of forgiveness. I never knew of a man getting a blessing in his own soul, if he was not willing to forgive others. If we are unwilling to forgive others, God cannot forgive us. I do not know how language could be more plain than it is in these words of our Lord. I firmly believe a great many prayers are not answered because we are not willing to forgive someone. Let your mind go back over the past, and through the circle of your acquaintance; are there any against whom you are cherishing hard feelings? Is there any root of bitterness springing up against some one who has perhaps injured you? It may be that for months or years you have been nursing this unforgiving spirit; how can you ask God to forgive you? If I am not willing to forgive those who may have committed some single offence against me, what a mean, contemptible thing for me to ask God to forgive the ten thousand sins of which I have been guilty!

But Christ goes still further. He says: "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and if thy brother has aught against thee, leave there thy gift, go and be reconciled to thy brother, then come bring thy gift." It may be you are saying: "I do not know that I have got anything against anyone." Has anyone got anything against you? Is there some one who thinks you have done them wrong? Perhaps you have not, but it may be they think you have. I will tell you what I would do before I go to sleep to-night: I would go and see them, and have the question settled. You will find that you will be greatly blessed in the very act. Supposing you are in the right and they are in the wrong; you may win your brother or sister. Oh, may God root out of all our hearts to-day this unforgiving spirit!

A gentleman came to me some time ago and wanted me to talk to his wife about her soul. That woman seemed as anxious as any person I ever met, and I thought it would not take long to lead her into the light; but it seemed that the longer I talked with her the more her darkness increased. I went to see her again the next day, and found her in still greater darkness of soul. I thought there must be something in the way that I had not discovered, and I asked her to repeat with me this disciple's prayer. I thought if she could say this prayer from the heart the Lord would meet her in peace. I began to repeat it sentence after sentence, and she repeated it after me, until I came to this petition, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them their trespass against us;" then she stopped. I repeated it the second time and waited for her to say it after me; she said she could not do it. "What is the trouble?" She replied, "There is one woman I never will forgive." "Oh!" I said, "I have got at your difficulty; it is no use my going on to pray, for my prayers will not go higher than my head. God says he will forgive you in proportion as you forgive others. If you do not forgive this woman, God will never forgive you. That is the decree of heaven." She said, "Do you mean to say that I cannot be forgiven until I have forgiven her?" "No, I do not say it; the Lord says it, and that is far better authority." Said she, "Then I will never be forgiven." I left the house without having made any impression on her. A few years after I heard that this woman was in an insane asylum. I believe this spirit of unforgiveness drove her mad.

If there is someone who has aught against you, go at once and be reconciled. If you have aught against anyone, write to them a letter telling them that you forgive them, and so have this thing off your conscience. I remember being in the inquiry-room some years ago; I was in one corner of the room talking to a young lady. There seemed to be something in the way, but I could not find out what it was. At last I said: "Is there not some you cannot forgive?" She looked up at me and said: "What made you ask that? Has anyone told you about me?" "No," I said, "but I thought perhaps it might be the case, as you have not received forgiveness yourself." "Well," she said, pointing to another corner of the room, where there was a young lady sitting, "I have had trouble with that young lady; we have not spoken to each other for a long time." "Oh!" I said, "it is all plain to me now; you cannot be forgiven until you are willing to forgive her." It was a great struggle. But then you know, the greater the cross the greater the blessing. It is human to err, but it is Christlike to forgive and to be forgiven. At last this young lady said: "I will go and forgive her." Strange to say, the same conflict had been going on in the mind of the lady in the other part of the room. They both came to their right mind about the same time. They met each other in the middle of the floor. The one tried to say that she forgave the other, but they could not finish, so they rushed into each other's arms. The four of us—the two seekers and the two workers—got down on our knees together, and we had a grand meeting. These two went away rejoicing.

Dear friends, is this the reason why our prayers are not answered? Is there some friend, some member of our families, some one in the church, we have not forgiven? We sometimes hear of members of the same church who have not spoken to each other for years. How can such expect God to forgive them?

I remember one town that Mr. Sankey and myself went into. For a week it seemed as if we were beating against the air; there was no power in the meetings. At last I said one day that perhaps there was someone cultivating this unforgiving spirit. The chairman of our committee, who was sitting next to me, got up and left the meeting right in view of the audience. The arrow had hit the mark, and gone right home to the heart of the chairman of the committee. He had had trouble with some one for about six months. He at once hunted up this man and asked him to forgive him. Then he came to me with tears in his eyes, and said: "I thank God you ever came here." That night the inquiry-room was thronged. The chairman became one of the best workers I have ever known, and he has been active in Christian service ever since.

There are some people who say that they wish to be forgiven, and they are quite willing to forgive some offence against them. "Oh yes," they say, "I will forgive, but I will never forget it!" My friends, that is not forgiveness at all. I believe true forgiveness includes forgetting the offence—putting it entirely away out of our hearts and memories. If God's forgiveness were like that it would not be worth much. Supposing God said: "I will forgive you, but I will never forget it; all through eternity I will keep reminding you of it," we should not feel that to be forgiveness at all. Notice what God says: "I will remember their sins no more" (Jeremiah 31—34). In a passage in Ezekiel it is said that not one of our sins shall be mentioned; is not that good? I do like to preach this forgiveness—the sweet truth that sin is blotted out for time and eternity, and shall never once be mentioned against us. "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more" (Heb. x. 17). Then when you turn to the 11th chapter and read God's roll of honour, you find that not one of the sins of any of these men of faith is mentioned. Abraham is spoken of as the man of faith, but it is not told how he denied his wife down in Egypt: all that had been forgiven. Moses was kept out of the Promised Land because he lost patience, but it is not mentioned in the New Testament, though his name appears in the Apostle's roll of honour. Samson, too, is named, but his sins are not brought up again. Why, we even read of "righteous Lot;" he did not look much like a righteous man in the Old Testament story, but he had been forgiven, and God had made him "righteous." If we are once forgiven by God our sins will be remembered against us no more. This is God's eternal decree.

We read in Matthew xviii. 15: "Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." Then a little further on we read that Peter comes to Christ and says, "How oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?" Jesus replied, "I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven." Peter did not seem to think that he was in danger of falling into sin; his question was, How often should I forgive my brother? But very soon we hear that Peter has fallen. I can imagine that when he did fall, the sweet thought came to him of what the Master had said about forgiving seventy times seven. The voice of sin may be loud, but the voice of forgiveness is louder.

Yesterday we closed the meeting by repeating a part of Psalm 51, I want to close this meeting by repeating a part of Psalm 32. I think the 32nd Psalm ought to follow the 51st; it seems to me it must have come right after the other.

"Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

"Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile.

"When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.

"For night and day thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer.

"I acknowledged my sin unto Thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin."

David could look below, above, behind, and before—to the past, present, and future—and know that all was well. Let us make up our mind that we will not rest until this question of sin is for ever settled, so that we can look up and claim God as our reconciled Father. Let us be willing to forgive others, that we may be able to claim forgiveness from God.

On the Shores of the Nile.

"BLESS me, even me also, O my Father!" was the cry of Esau when disappointed of an earthly blessing through his own previous fault: yet the cry always touches us with pity. How much more should we feel moved when these words, or something very like them, are echoed by one desiring, faintly and in ignorance, yet in all honesty, a heavenly blessing!

On the the third day of this New Year, I was giving some portions of Scripture and Bibles into a number of eager, outstretched hands on the banks of the Nile. "The people with the books are come," was the cry as soon as our boat anchored at the village (for we had been there before), and early next morning many came to ask for some. A Coptic teacher of a very small and poorly-provided school in a neighbouring village, came to beg for some Gospels for his boys, which I gave him gladly. As he took them, two sturdy, intelligent-looking Moslem peasants stretched their bronzed arms almost over his head, and pushing aside a crowd of boys who had assembled (some in search of books, some from curiosity) they exclaimed, "Are not we also to have Gospels? We want them. Have you only books for him and none for us?" Their earnest faces showed the desire to be a sincere one, and each received a copy of the Gospel by John.

Without a moment's delay they drew back from the crowd a few steps and sat down on the ground; then and there they began to read in a low voice the first chapter with deep attention, while I prayed in my heart that the true light might shine into their souls, and enable them, by and bye, to throw off, as a man throws aside a ragged garment, the erroneous belief in which they had been reared, and walk in the light of God.

This is only one among many deeply-interesting facts that I noted during our too brief visits to these benighted villages, which, if means allowed of longer trips, might be multiplied a hundredfold. M. L. Whately.

For the Young.

IT was a noisy company, but how delighted they all seemed! There was such a gleam of pleasure on every little face, that even the dirtiest looked happy. There they were all gathered in a nice Mission Hall, right in the centre of a nest of dark and dirty streets and courts, in one of our large English cities.

Now they are all in and the door is shut. A gentleman asks them to sing grace; then, suddenly, from the class-room doors come ladies and gentlemen, and well-dressed boys and girls loaded with great piles of paper-bags containing a variety of tempting eatables. Quickly are all the bags distributed, and every little pair of hands is busy taking stock of the contents, which they so well know what to do with. Close on the heels of the bags of provisions come steaming kettles of nice hot tea, with plenty of milk and sugar in it.

While the little hands and mouths are busy, we will go and have a talk to little Nellie. She has just been trying to swallow the whole of her first cup of tea at one draught, and has choked violently in the attempt, but she makes nothing of it and goes on again. Poor little soul! I don't think anybody would have given threepence for that child's winter stock of clothes. "Well, Nellie, how do you like it?" "Oh, 'tis nice!" "Did you get a good breakfast last Sunday morning at the free breakfast room, for which you had a ticket?" "No." "Why not?" "'Cause I got no clo'es." So poor little Nellie lost her breakfast because she had not clothes enough, or as her own brother put it, "was too raggety," to go through two or three dirty streets, but to-night it was only to creep across the road and walk about a dozen yards, so Nellie could come.

After all the good things were disposed of, a gentleman delighted the little folks for an hour or so with a beautiful set of pictures of scenes in the life of David Livingstone, shown by the magic lantern, while another gentleman told the story of his life, and explained the pictures.

How did all this come about, and whose kindness provided all these good things?

That is just what I want to tell you.

It was drawing near to Christmas, and some dear children who had a great many little cousins, and who had been in the habit of giving and receiving a great many Christmas presents, cheerfully agreed that this time they would all give up buying toys, and give the money to feed and cheer some poor little ones who had no one to make them any presents. So the little cousins talked it over, and all determined to spare what they could from their money boxes. Their parents and some other friends were only too delighted to assist them, and so it all came about, and there were no happier children in all that crowded Mission Hall than those who were busy up and down the aisles, carrying the bags of cakes and kettles of tea which their own simple generosity had purchased.

"He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will He pay him again." X.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—The promoters of this excellent Mission have just issued a summarised account of the work done in various continental and foreign countries. Every aspect of the work is encouraging. The picture leaflets have been translated into many languages, and are bearing fruit. The report may be obtained at 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.

PREPARING AT STRATFORD.

DURING the past few weeks the Stepney building has been transferred to Stratford, and re-erected on a plot of ground in West Ham Lane, kindly lent, without cost, to the Central Committee, by Mrs. Curtis. The building, which has been named West Ham Lane Hall, was used for the first time on the afternoon of Monday, 16th inst., for a Conference between Mr. Moody and the clergy and ministers of Stratford and the surrounding neighbourhoods. The meeting, which was a thoroughly representative one, embracing Christians of all denominations, was presided over by Mr. Moody.

After prayer had been offered by Canon Scott, of West Ham, in a few earnest words Mr. Moody expressed his delight at seeing the interest which was being taken in the work, as evidenced by the numbers who had gathered together. Referring to the work at Stepney, he asked Rev. J. F. Kitto, Rector of Stepney, to say a few words as to the result of that Mission, and to offer any suggestions which might tend to bring about a still greater blessing on Stratford.

Mr. KITTO said he was very glad to have the opportunity of testifying to the great blessing which had resulted in Stepney from the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. If he might be permitted to say so much in Mr. Moody's presence, he was especially glad to be able to bear witness, for the benefit of his brethren of the Church of England, that having attended almost all the meetings, he had never heard one word which did not meet with his sincere endorsement. As the result of the Mission some 1800 names of those who had professed to receive a blessing had been enrolled; these were all being carefully looked after by some of his Nonconformist brethren and himself. Mr. Kitto's warm-hearted remarks evidently awoke the cordial sympathy of the meeting. Many questions were asked and suggestions made, all of which were responded to by Mr. R. Paton and the hon. secretaries for the Eastern district, and after most earnest and touching prayer by Mr. Moody the meeting separated.

Before these lines are in our readers' hands, the Stratford Mission will have commenced. During the past three months the local Christians have been constant in prayer for a great outpouring of his Holy Spirit. United meetings for prayer, which have been largely attended, have been held weekly in Stratford in various churches and chapels alternately. He in whose hands are the hearts of the children of men, will command his blessing. It is an interesting and noteworthy circumstance that the Great Eastern Railway Company are placing prominent notices of the meetings in all the stations along their line.

THE CLAPHAM MEETINGS.

Many deeply interesting testimonies have been given at the men's meetings in the Wesleyan Chapel, held at the conclusion of the services in the large hall. On the evening of Monday, the 14th inst., Mr. Henry Thorne led the meeting. He asked the men to rise and say how long any of them had been converted, and under what circumstances. Among the responses were the following:—

"I was brought to Christ nine years ago at the Opera House, at Mr. Moody's meetings there." "Four months ago I was led to Christ by the kind words of a friend." "Last Friday I gave my heart to Christ at Mr. Moody's meeting." "Last Sunday week I gave my heart to Jesus at the meeting." "I was saved twelve hours ago."

"In 1863 the Lord had to break my leg in order to break my heart, and I thank Him for doing both." "For thirty-eight years I have been a wanderer, but my wife was taken off her crutches at Bethshan, and the Lord used that fact to restore my soul a short time ago."

"Twenty-four years ago I was brought to Christ through the preaching on Clapham Common." "On December 7, 1878, I was at my work, when all of a sudden the hymn commencing, 'Mourner, wheresoe'er thou art, At the Cross there's room,' came to my mind, and I was convicted of sin. I was led to seek Christ, and I did not rest till I had found Him. I do not know how or where I first heard the hymn; it was not a familiar one." "Four years ago, I was led to Christ by my Sunday-school teacher." "I was brought to the Lord at the Wandsworth Mission."

Another evening these testimonies were given:

"In 1876 I found Christ. I had gone to a music-hall, and I am sorry to say I came home very drunk. When I awoke the next morning from the effects of the drink I was so convicted of my sin that I had to seek Christ, and I gave myself no rest till I had found Him as my Saviour, and He has kept me from the drink ever since." "I had for years clung to the old-fashioned idea that conversion was a very gradual process, but I thank God that, through Mr. Moody's preaching, I have been able to understand clearly that it is only one step to Christ for salvation."

"I have been twenty-one years a backslider, but I thank God I have been restored in soul in this chapel. I find though that Satan comes tapping me on the elbow very often as I go about my daily business, to try and draw me back into the ways of sin; but I keep looking to the Lord Jesus, and He saves me."

"I got into the large hall one evening last week, but unfortunately—or rather I suppose I should say fortunately—I got into such a bad position that I could not hear a word of Mr. Moody's sermon. God thus gave me time to see myself and to think, and I saw how awful a sinner I was. I was led to seek and find Christ that very evening."

SERVICES FOR CHILDREN.

For the last two Saturdays Mr. Josiah Spiers has held a Children's Service, which was largely attended. On Saturday, January 12, the numbers reached fully 3500, while about 2500 assembled on the later date. The interest shown was very marked, and there were on each occasion conversational meetings held after the close of the first service, at which not a few dear young people, it is hoped, decided for Christ.

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

Sunday last was probably the grandest day of the London Mission. There was a large muster of workers at the early morning meeting, when Mr. Moody discoursed on the best way to study the Scriptures. The three other meetings of the day, in the large hall, at eleven, three, and seven, were packed. In the afternoon the overflow were accommodated in the Wesleyan Chapel; in the evening a second overflow meeting was held in Mr. Henderson's Baptist Chapel, where Mr. Sankey and Lord Radstock assisted. The meetings in the Wesleyan Chapel were conducted by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan. A contingent of the large choir was also drafted off to the Baptist Chapel in Battersea Park-road, where Major Colquhoun, of Glasgow, spoke. Perhaps the outstanding feature of the day was the singing at several of the meetings by Mr. McGranahan's "Gospel Male Choir." This band of Christian singers rendered some of Mr. McGranahan's new song-sermons with much effect.

Lord Radstock Interrogated by Mr. Moody.

At the close of a very impassioned and impressive Gospel address by Mr. Moody on Thursday evening on "A Chime of Gospel Bells," the inquiry room was crowded with presumptive seekers and workers. The doors being closed, the buzz of personal conversation having ceased, and fervent prayer having been offered by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, the following conversation ensued between Mr. Moody and Lord Radstock:—

MR. MOODY: Christ says, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye cannot see the kingdom of God." What is it to be converted?

LORD RADSTOCK: To be converted is to turn to God, who is the only one that can save. We cannot save ourselves even by our religion. Therefore, in order to salvation we must turn to God, who alone has the grace, the wisdom, and the power to save.

MR. M.—What is it to be born of the Spirit?

LORD R.—Man, by nature, cannot enter into the thoughts of God. He cannot hold communion with God until he has a new nature. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; he has no capacity until he has got the new life which God will give him by the power of the Holy Ghost.

MR. M.—Can he get that to-day if he repents?

LORD R.—Yes. Repentance means a change of mind—a turning away from his own thoughts to hear the voice and the message of God. If we listen to the voice of God and confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins.

MR. M.—To whom are we to confess our sins?

LORD R.—When the light of God comes in we see that we are guilty before Him; then we are constrained to go and lay our case before Him. If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us.

MR. M.—There is a passage that says the Lord Jesus Christ bore our sins. In what sense did He bear our sins?

LORD R.—The Lord Jesus Christ had really laid to his charge sins which He had never committed. He was punished as if He had been the sinner. Therefore on the cross He cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" God was dealing with Jesus as if He had really been the guilty one.

MR. M.—Do we get any help by believing that?

LORD R.—When I believe God's testimony, God's witness about Jesus, I then can trust myself to God; giving myself to God, God becomes my Saviour.

MR. M.—Have these friends got the power to believe?

LORD R.—They are commanded to believe. They can believe it just as well as they can believe any other fact, if they only listen to God's voice. But they must get rid of their own thoughts and listen to God; hearing his voice they will believe. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."

MR. M.—A friend said to me he was as weak as water, and he thought he could not hold out if he came to Christ.

LORD R.—A Swedish officer was speaking to me in Stockholm about four years ago. He had been very fond of the world, and was not a man of strong character. He said to me: "I know it is all right, but I do not like to begin, because I do not think I have the power to keep at it." I said, "I am quite sure you have not the power." Taking out my pencil, and placing it in my hand, I said, "Look at this pencil; why does it not fall?" "Because you hold it up." "If I did not hold it up, what would happen?" "It would fall." "Now then, you see it is not any power in the pencil, but a power outside the pencil, that keeps it from falling. When God undertook to save man, He was going to be the power that was to hold up for ever and ever the poor sinner who should trust Him. Therefore God pledges Himself that He will bring the weakest believer in the universe safe to glory."

MR. M.—Well then, all the sinner has to do is to repose in the promises of God?

LORD R.—Simply to trust himself to God.

MR. M.—What would you say to a man who says he has tried a good many times and failed, and who has become discouraged?

LORD R.—That man has probably made a good many resolutions, hoping that he would gradually make himself a Christian by going through this or that process, or by doing this or that thing. Of course he failed because he tried to make himself a Christian. It was like the pencil trying to stand upright by itself. Instead of trying to save himself let him trust in God, who has pledged his word that every one who believes on the Lord Jesus Christ has at that moment everlasting life.

MR. M.—Should a man not break off from some of his sins before he comes to God? Suppose he swears or has got a bad temper, should he not get a little control over his temper, or stop swearing before he comes to Christ?

LORD R.—God knows that a man's nature is wrong, therefore He has promised to give a man a new nature. We must therefore go to God just as a man goes to a physician, because he needs to be cured of some disease.

MR. M.—Can a drunkard or a blasphemer be saved all at once?

LORD R.—Paul says: "To him that worketh not but believeth on Him that justifies the ungodly,"—bad people, lost people, ruined people—"his faith is counted unto him for righteousness." When he believes God, God becomes his Saviour. God is the friend of sinners.

MR. M.—What is it to believe God?

LORD R.—To take Him at his Word.

MR. M.—Do you not think there are a good many here who believe that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world, and yet they are not saved?

LORD R.—No doubt; because they have not believed for themselves. A man at the time of the Deluge, for instance, might have said, "Yes, I believe it is a very good ark indeed, and that it will save those who get into it." But it does not follow that he got into it himself. The ark only saved those who went into it. So, when a man trusts in Jesus Christ for himself, Jesus becomes his personal and eternal Saviour.

MR. M.—What if he should fall into sin after he has believed in Christ?

LORD R.—"These things write I unto you that ye sin not," says John; "but if any man sin we have an Advocate with the Father." The good Physician won't give up his case because of the disease; he will deal with it. The Good Shepherd will not turn his poor wandering sheep away; He will go after it and bring it back. He has promised that He will save his people from their sins.

MR. M.—Is salvation within the reach of every man here to-night?

LORD R.—Jesus said, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

MR. M.—But some say they do not feel that; they do not realise it?

LORD R.—When they take God at his word, and cast themselves upon Him, whether they feel it or not; when they confess Jesus Christ as their Lord, the Holy Ghost will come as a power to make them realise it. For instance, a man at the time of the Deluge might have stood outside the ark, and said, "I cannot realise how this ark will lift me up above the waters." But if he were inside when the flood came he would realise it. The sinner must believe first, and have his experience afterwards. A man is told that a certain train will take him to Edinburgh. He has never been there; he does not understand about this particular train, and he cannot realise that it will take him there. But he knows that he may trust the friend who told him; so he gets into the train. Then he realises that he is in the train; by and by he will be able to realise that he is in Edinburgh.

MR. M.—Would you advise them to come to God as they are, with their unfeeling, treacherous, hard heart—with any kind of heart?

LORD R.—God has provided this salvation for lost sinners—those who are thoroughly bad and corrupt. It is for such that God has shown his salvation, his love, his grace.

MR. M.—What would you say to any one who thinks he has no power to believe?

LORD R.—He has the power to believe. Probably he is trying to believe something about himself, to feel something about himself, instead of giving credit to God. He is not asked to realise this or that about himself, but to believe the faithful God.

MR. M.—Some say they have no power to overcome a besetting sin.

LORD R.—Jesus came proclaiming liberty to the captives. As it says in the beautiful words of the Church of England Prayer-book: "Though we be tied and bound by the chains of our sin, let the pitifulness of thy mercy save us." Jesus Christ takes the prisoners of sin and breaks off their chains.

MR. M.—There is something said about confessing Christ. Would you advise any one who wants to become a Christian to start right here by confessing Christ with the mouth?

LORD R.—God is already on your side, whoever you are. Christ is Immanuel—God with us and for us. He is already on your side, whether you believe it or not. Now it is for you to decide whether he shall be your Saviour. He says if you own Him as Lord—who is now the One rejected by the world—He is responsible to be your Saviour from that moment.

MR. MOODY addressed the audience: Is there anyone here who is willing to rise up and confess Christ now as your Saviour? "I will," "I will," came in response, from all sides. "Mr. Rainsford, have they got the power to do this?" "They are doing it. Of course when they know Him they can confess Him. They are commanded to confess Him after they believe Him." "Yes, that is it," added Mr. Moody. "Now is there another one here who believes with the heart and confesses with the mouth?" A chorus of "I do," "I do," "I do." Then the public talk was over, and the quieter, more personal dialogues began.

Incidents of the Meetings.

A man, forty-four years of age, who had been with the same employers thirty-five years, laid hold of the Lord Jesus as his Saviour very definitely. He is a carman, and says he finds the Lord Jesus with him in his daily work, blessing him in it. He has been spending his Sunday afternoons in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, with an intemperate man who has no other friend, but has now recovered from his accident and is going on better. The man has bought a beautiful accordion, on which to play the well-loved hymns, whilst the wife, with the little baby in her arms, sings with him. He hopes to be able to get off a little earlier on Tuesday evenings, to attend a class for instruction in music, so as to be able to play from note by-and-by. He is happy and contented, and the peace of God has blessed the house.

A man and his wife gave themselves to the Lord at the Priory meetings. Alone in London—his wife delicate in health—the husband, an engineer by trade, but unable to do his proper work through a paralysed arm, has to rise daily at four to do work of an inferior kind. Both are thoroughly happy in the Lord, and so full of rejoicing as to be lifted above these circumstances.

Another man, crippled by rheumatism in his feet, who has to rise at three every morning, as watchman of some buildings, testified to the rest and joy the meetings had brought him; for though a communicant for years, he had never seen the way of life so clearly before.

A man, by trade a carpenter, and his wife, were both brought to Christ at the Priory. He was a sad drunkard, she, a broken-hearted desolate woman. Her testimony now is, "I little knew what God was; we have had nothing but mercies since."

In the same house there is another couple. The man had been a Unitarian; now he and his wife are rejoicing in the Lord.

Another couple told the visiting lady that they had some desire toward God before the meetings, but that the sermon on the Prodigal Son had enabled them both to decide for Christ the same night.

F., A., and H., three dear children, were brought to Christ at the meetings, and seemed to fully realise that they were the lambs of the Good Shepherd. This family was at one time well off, but the father has deserted them, and the mother's trust is in God alone.

A parlourmaid in service in one of the south-western suburbs was invited by an elderly Christian woman in Highbury to come and hear Mr. Moody. She could only attend one meeting, and her friend took her, silently pleading with God for her. Prayer was answered, and the maid returned to her place of service rejoicing in the Lord.

A woman who had attended the meetings was impressed with the need of salvation. On being visited she said she had again and again asked Jesus to save her, but could not believe He had, as she felt as bad as ever, and surely if she were born again she would feel a difference in herself! The words spoken at this visit on the necessity of taking God at his word appear to have been blessed, and she was enabled to entrust herself to Jesus in spite of her feelings.

A young lady came from Sweden to stay with an aunt; during the visit the Lord blessed her at the meetings, and she has since returned home rejoicing in his love.

A servant girl told a lady calling on her that at one of the meetings a gentleman had asked her to promise to give her heart to God, but thought he fancied she had been very bad, whereas she had always been respectable. He told her of the broken law and of God's tender love; this quite broke her down, and she knelt to thank God for giving Jesus for her, and went home rejoicing and grateful.

All the foregoing facts have been elicited through visits paid at the homes of the people.

"THE CHAIN OF GOD'S PROVIDENCE."

In a provincial town in England lived a man and his wife, the latter a godly, praying woman, the former careless and worldly. When Messrs. Moody and Sankey were visiting this town, the man refused to attend any of the meetings, being opposed to all such matters. He was particularly anxious, however, to obtain a certain situation in a house of business in the town, so as to add to his small private income. After repeated applications, he was requested by the firm to desist from any further efforts, as they were unable to engage his services.

He then came to London, to seek a similar appointment, and in order that none of his friends might know his whereabouts, sought for lodgings on the south side of the city. Failing to find any that suited his fancy, he was obliged to call on certain friends living in another part of London, and inquire of them for lodgings. It so happened that they were able to take him into their house, as a young man who had lodged with them had been somewhat suddenly summoned to America. When the evangelistic meetings began in the neighbourhood, they invited him to accompany them, offering him the ticket that had been left behind by their previous lodger, who had engaged to act as a steward.

At the first Sunday evening meeting, Mr. Sankey sang the hymn with the refrain, "Ye must be born again." This entered his heart, and all the week he was unable to forget the line. He went to see the Lord Mayor's Show, but whilst standing in the crowd, the words kept ringing in his ears, "Ye must be born again."

The following Sunday evening, the address by Mr. Moody was from the text, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." At the close he found his way into the inquiry-room; he was then led to Christ, and became a true disciple. Before the inquiry meeting broke up, Mr. Moody urged all those who had accepted Christ to write at once to their friends and tell them of the blessed change that had taken place.

Whilst all this had been transpiring in the large hall, the lady friend of the house where this man was lodging, was attending her usual place of worship. On her return home she told how she had been unable to pay any attention to the service, as the conversion of this person was so laid on her mind she could only spend the time in pleading for his soul. In a similar way and at the same time his wife had been led to plead with God that her husband might be saved that night; she wrote to tell him of this, and to beg of him to yield to Christ. This letter to him appears to have crossed the one he wrote to her telling her of his joy in the Lord and of the answer to her many prayers.

But the reply from the wife to this letter, telling the good news, contained a letter from the firm in his own town stating that the appointment he had so long been seeking was now vacant, and was offered him, if he would like to return home and accept it. Wonderful are the links in the chain of God's providence in thus dealing with his people; true it is that,

"All is right that seems most wrong,
If it be his sweet will."

Rescue Work in Poplar.

THIS effort to help the lost has been in progress since July, 1878; a large number of poor and unhappy women, of all ages, have been helped on the open system. Each single case has been treated on its own merits, not according to a hard and fast rule. They have been kept till found fit to go out and earn honest bread, not longer. The records of the work show that many are known to be saved from the most dreadful fate that can befall woman.

For the first two years the work was done entirely in Kerbey-street; then The Elms, Walthamstow, was taken, and has been kept full for three years and a half. The use of the fine country house and nice garden has proved what can be done in a "short home" for women who have the will to reform. The growth of the work and other reasons have caused the committee to decide on making a change. I have left The Elms and returned to Kerbey-street to carry forward the work there.

Help is greatly needed for improvement of premises and working expenses. I most earnestly ask for aid now; the need was never more great nor the work more urgent. Time flies, and I want to do as much as possible, but the lack of funds cripples me. I beg those who have money to spare to think of those poor women and young girls for whom I plead; think of them, and help me to save these outcast creatures, whose souls are very precious in the sight of God.

Mr. Henry Green, Blackwall, E., is treasurer; or help can be sent to me here, where I shall be glad to see any one interested in this work of mercy. The report for 1883 will be published shortly and sent to contributors.

SOCIAL PURITY IN AUSTRALIA.—From time to time we have noted the progress of the agitation at the Antipodes against the State regulation of vice; and we are now thankful to learn that in both Houses of the South Australian legislature it has been affirmed, without a division, that it is desirable to amend the laws relating to social purity. The objectionable legislation is believed to have got its death-blow. "It will soon be buried in a grave so deep," says one of our Australian exchanges, "that resurrection will be impossible."—Christian Leader.

Working Lads' Meetings.

ON Saturday last particularly interesting meetings were held at the Working Lads' Institute, East-street, East Greenwich, amongst elder lads, ranging from fourteen to eighteen years. They were gathered from various Missions and Institutions in South and East London, including amongst others the Railway Boys' Mission, Vauxhall; the Boys' Home, Southwark; the George Yard Ragged School and King Edward-street Youths' Institute, Whitechapel; the Home of Industry, Spitalfields; the Carter Home for Boys, Clapham; various Bible-classes at Wimbledon, Peckham, Woolwich, East Greenwich, West Greenwich; the Greenwich Hospital Naval School; Peek, Frean & Co's. Boys' Institute, Bermondsey; the West Greenwich Ragged School Institute, and the East Greenwich Working Lads' Institute.

The afternoon meeting consisted of a Christian Lads' Conference, on "How to Win one's mates for Christ." The invitations having been confined all but exclusively to boys giving evidence of real conversion (about 100 of whom attended), the power of the Holy Spirit was distinctly realised, as one after another made a few remarks on different means to be employed, insisting especially on the necessity of a consistent daily life. So general was the happiness felt, that when at 4.30 the hour had arrived for the proposed stroll in Greenwich Park, for which the weather was peculiarly propitious, it was suggested by a friend and decided by an overwhelming majority to prolong the afternoon meeting. The best part of another hour was devoted to a very profitable discussion of practical questions, dealing with the sometimes apparently conflicting claims of Gospel work and employers' rights, filial duty, private Bible study, worship, self-education, &c.

At 5.30 the Christian party adjourned to a large hall to welcome unconverted mates, chiefly members of local boys' institutes. In a few minutes some 240 sat down to a good tea. The evening Gospel meeting commenced at an early hour. After prayer, and with singing interspersed, nearly a score of short addresses were given by the boys, testifying to their own conversion in a manner which at least secured the marked attention of their audience. When at 8·15 it became necessary to close the first meeting, about twenty asked for prayer by holding up their hands. Several professed decision in the meeting for prayer and conversation which ensued, and much fervent joy in the Lord was evinced when the youthful workers finally dispersed to carry the blessing home.

EDINBURGH UNITED EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.—The effort to form a large choir bearing this name has been so far successful that a large number of ladies and gentlemen have joined it. The first practice took place in the Regent Hotel, Waterloo-place. Mr. John Robertson, Bac. Mus. Cambridge, who has been appointed conductor, superintended the practice, and very satisfactory progress was made. Large representations of such choirs as those of the Drill Hall, Carrubber's Close Mission, noon meeting, and church choirs of all denominations were present, and, altogether, the idea of forming a large and excellently-trained United Evangelistic Choir for the city of Edinburgh seems already to be an accomplished fact.

SAILORS' REST, ST. MALO.—Dear Sir,—Thanks to Lieutenant-General Kirby, St. Malo can now boast of a "Sailors' Rest," which is a great boon to the place, as hundreds of English vessels pass in and out during the year. I have already heard sailors say that a better idea could never have struck our worthy friend than to organise such comfortable rooms for the use of the British seaman. After no small trouble a suitable care-taker has been found; we hope, by careful management, soon to see it in a flourishing condition. Any person taking an interest in the British seamen who visit this place could not do better than send periodicals to the "Sailors' Rest," No. 16, Rue des Cordiers, St. Malo. E. B.

Desolate Siberia.

"Ye shall be witnesses unto Me . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth."—ACTS i. 8.

WHEN shall desolate Siberia
Hear the Gospel's joyful sound?
When will all the love of Jesus
In his people so abound,

That with glad, delightful impulse,
They will cross that barren waste,
And, before the Master cometh,
There with Love's sweet message haste?

Shall we choose the sunny regions,
Leaving out the cold and bare?
Shall we tell Him, when He cometh,
"No man dared to preach Thee there?"

Or do we, because so scanty
Is the population, smile,
Saying, "Those few scattered millions
Surely are not worth the while"?

Not so thought those brave Moravians
Who, by God's own Spirit sent,
Over "Greenland's icy mountains,"
To the heathen gladly went.

Not so thought that valiant soldier*
Who, in Patagonia's land,
Undeterred by cold or danger,
Bravely did for Jesus stand.

Are there not strong men among us,
Who will face the east and north,
And, from Moscow to Kamstchatka,
Sound the glorious tidings forth?

Orphans at Walthamstow.

A CORRESPONDENT who paid a Christmas visit to Mrs. Parsons' Orphan Home, Cumberland House, Hoe-street, Walthamstow, E., sends some notes of her impressions. "In due time," she says, "I found myself at Cumberland House, among six and twenty little maidens from five to sixteen years of age, spotlessly neat in appearance, with bright happy faces full of expectation; only one or two of them still retained on their countenances the shadow of former sorrows. They sang sweetly, and were evidently well trained, and answered a few Scripture questions with much intelligence.

God has given his special blessing to this work, during the past year, bringing several of the children to trust in the Saviour; they are showing it in their lives. 'The great burden, indeed the only burden,' said Mrs. Parsons, 'is the want of pecuniary support for the Home.'"

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Jan. 27, Dan. ix. 1—15; Jan. 28, Dan. ix. 16—27; Jan. 29, Dan. x. 1—11; Jan. 30, Dan. x. 12—21; Jan. 31, Dan. xii. 1—13; Feb. 1, Hosea vi. 1—7; Feb. 2, Hosea xi. 1—12.

WORKERS' MEETING, PENARTH-STREET, S.E.—The second monthly meeting of Christians met for prayer and exhortation on the 15th inst. Mr. T. Dunn presided, and addresses were given by several brethren, calculated to stimulate to active service for Christ. About seventy friends were present. Though this is one of the youngest of London Missions, it bids fair to become a centre of real effort among the poor of South London. The workers need help to extend the efforts already begun.

CAMBERWELL Y.W.C.A.—On Monday evening, 14th inst., a well-attended meeting in connection with the Y.W.C.A. was held at the Camberwell Hall, Grove-lane, S.E., Mr. Geo. Hughes in the chair. After prayer by the Chairman, Rev. J. R. Howatt gave an address, which was listened to with much interest. Prayer has been answered in connection with this new branch; increased accommodation has been obtained, and the work of the Association fully established in the Camberwell district. Communications may either be sent to 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.; or the Hon. Secretary, Miss Steinetz, The Fernery, Windsor-road, Denmark-hill, S.E.

Notes and Comments.

THE New York Weekly Witness, commenting on questionable entertainments, such as are often announced in connection with Sunday-schools and Church funds, says, with just censure:—

"It is sad to reflect upon the many crooked ways adopted to raise money for 'the cause of Christ.' Let pastors, superintendents, and Sunday-school teachers think carefully over this matter, and, to say the least, permit no entertainments to be given the tendency of which is to injure the youth committed to their charge, and dishonour Christianity."

The rebuke and warning are quite as needful in our own land as on the other side of the Atlantic. To our certain knowledge, much work built up by the churches with one hand is by such means pulled down with the other. And yet the tendency to resort to these expedients grows rather than diminishes.

From various quarters the good news comes that the thraldom in which Popery has long held Spain is being more and more loosened on all sides. Señor Castro in an article which appeared in La Luz, and which has been translated into English, thus refers to the fact:—

"Throughout Spain, Romanism exhibits many plain and unmistakable signs of disintegration. Tired of unbounded tyranny, the people either chafe under Papal bonds, or break away from them altogether. No longer satisfied with bitter complaints and sharp remonstrances, which neither correct flagrant evils nor send relief, they declare open and desperate rebellion against the church, and in a thousand ways illustrate their hatred of sacerdotal pretensions. In some provinces, civil burial associations secure freedom from priestly intervention, their members increasing as people decline the risk of being denied absolution in extremis and church sepulture. Anti-religious societies spring up in every direction, and those newspapers which direct the fiercest onslaught against Romanism obtain the largest circulation."

Señor Castro's words in reference to the duty of his fellow-Christians in Spain to meet the demands made upon them at the present crisis, are heart stirring, and are salutary for us all. He says:—

"Indifference must have no place in our ranks. Pastors, evangelists, teachers, church members, men and women—we must all fight the good fight with our lips and lives. God commands, our country needs, perishing souls entreat, the honour of the Gospel requires, the glory of the Saviour demands, that we should each faithfully fulfil our duty as Christian men and women. Let us, therefore, gird up our loins, and, having put on the whole armour of God, fight the good fight, that light may prevail, the dead be raised to life, and God be glorified in Spain."

The work of God everywhere is requiring personal devotion such as these words invite; more than money, or any outward facilities, fervent, spiritual, and personal consecration to the service of Christ is the need of our times.

A law was passed in Cuba in 1868, providing for the gradual abolition of slavery in that island in twenty years. It seems likely that this desirable object will be gained even before that term expires. There were in 1868, 385,355 slaves, now the number is reduced to 99,556, mostly made up of such as are old and unprofitable, so that the slave system is really dying out. The general expectation in Cuba is said to be that this year will see its complete extinction. Every blow struck at this accursed and inhuman system is a cause for thankfulness, and a triumph of justice and truth in the earth. When shall it be that the universal jubilee shall be proclaimed? The Lord hasten it in his time.

Mr. Martin Tupper thus comments on what he fairly calls the incongruity of the fact that the flaring gin-palaces so well known in all our streets belong to, and are upheld by, sundry merchant princes, many of whom are known as leading philanthropists, and supporters of religious work at home and abroad. He says:—

"One need not mention names famous for all these virtues, and yet also incongruously enough deriving all their wealth—the very mammon of unrighteousness—from distilleries and breweries, the practical poisons whereof are diligently dispensed all over the three kingdoms by paid servants of our holiest, richest, and munificent. Let them extend their pious generosity somewhat further, and, by a noble self-sacrifice reducing their licensed public-houses to one-twentieth of their present superabundance, let the nineteen thus released from drunken orgies be converted by our brewers into poor men's clubs, with pleasant amusements, wholesome food, and non-intoxicants, practically in part at least self-supporting, if otherwise a costly donation from such generous givers to the poorest of their brethren, whose foolish prodigality has so long filled their purses. Certainly this would be justice as well as generosity."

The Committee of the London City Mission has just issued a pamphlet, entitled, "Down in the Depths of Outcast London," purporting to give facts not recorded in the "Bitter Cry." Its object is to remove misapprehensions as to the Society's usefulness, and to indicate the position of the City Mission as one of the oldest Christian agencies whose efforts have been put forth to carry the Gospel into the lowest and poorest localities. The revelations made of late as to the terrible condition of many districts in our great capital it is thought may seem to reflect on a Society which has so long been at work to remedy such evils. We should advise all who are interested in City Mission work to read this little book. It is well written, and worthy of the Institution from which it emanates.

Some of the facts recorded in the brochure alluded to above are very cheering, and stimulating to further effort on all sides. For instance, the steady decrease in the drunken habits of the people is shown by reference to the Police Reports from 1831 to 1881. The proportion of apprehensions for drunkenness in the former year was 20 per 1000 of the population, in the latter only 5. A missionary in the extreme East of London reports that in nine years the population has increased by 70,000 souls, yet in the same area there now fifteen less public-houses and thirty-four more coffee-houses. The devil has many triumphs to boast of, but it is far from being all on his side.

Russia is just now being moved to the erection of a national memorial to one of her sons, long forgotten, but of late called to mind. Ivan Fedorovitch, a deacon of one of the Moscow churches, was three centuries ago to Russia just what Caxton was a century before to England. He first took charge of the printing press in that land, issuing as his earliest attempt a copy of the Acts of the Apostles, and after passing through much obloquy, and overcoming immense difficulties, succeeded in publishing, in 1580 or thereabouts, a complete edition of the Bible. He died in December, 1583, at Lemberg, where he was buried. A subscription is now being raised to erect a monument to his memory in Moscow. It may be hoped that the calling of public attention at this time to the labours of such a man will help to accelerate the circulation of the Word of God in that vast empire, where of late its power has been asserting itself with wondrous and gracious results.

The education required for the ministry is aptly illustrated by a story told at the Boston Conference recently by the Rev. Dr. Hiden. Referring to an association meeting he had been present at in Virginia, at which a collection was made for the endowment of a college, he said John A. Broadus, a highly cultured man, spoke on behalf of the object. After his speech a plain farmer rose and said:

"Brother Moderator, I'm a plain uneducated man. I've heard a deal said about the great scholar who spoke a while ago; and I listened carefully to his speech, and he didn't say a single word that I could not understand. Now, sir, if educating a preacher makes him talk that way, I want to help. I'll give $50 to Richmond College."

The too common idea of an educated ministry is that it consists in being able to fly over the heads of all but the cultured few. This is an error really wise men will take care not to fall into.

Mrs. Grattan Guinness, in the January number of her valuable Missionary journal, The Regions Beyond, has an article on the famine of the Word in Western America. The marvellous growth of the population in the vast provinces of the American continent far outstrips the power, or at any rate the present efficiency, of the churches to keep pace with the demand made upon them for ministerial supply. Already the Presbyterians have 600 more churches than ministers, while the Baptist churches are said to exceed the number of ministers by 9850. In face of facts like these we are told that candidates for the ministry continue to decrease in number, and while churches long established lack pastors, hundreds of new missionary fields are at the same time asking in vain for men.

The significance of the fact that millions of people are actually without religious observances, and deprived of a Christian ministry, cannot be over-estimated as to its evil results. Speaking of Minnesota, one well acquainted with that State, says: "The Gospel destitution in many parts of this State will make any man's heart ache who prays 'Thy kingdom come.'" Similar statements come from many other States. Openings for unsectarian work abound in these regions of deep, and by many deeply realised, need, and no fields for Christian enterprise more loudly call for thought and prayer than those presented by the rapidly-growing settlements of the country west of the Mississippi. Mr. Guinness, we observe, declares himself ready to help forward into these needy fields devoted, earnest, self-denying men who are prepared to face the arduous duties involved.

The self-propagating power of the Gospel is one reason why the Word of the Kingdom is compared to seed. Only let that word obtain entrance into the heart, and it is certain to bring forth fruit, and to multiply itself. This is receiving fresh illustration in Japan, where the converts to Christianity are manifesting eager desire to mission other lands than their own. A prominent Japanese Christian has recently visited King-ti-tao, the capital of Corea, with a view to see what opening there is for Christian work in that country, a conviction that Corea is a sphere calling for their concern having fastened itself upon the Japanese Christians generally. Corea, with its eight provinces, and nearly ten millions of inhabitants, presents a fine field for evangelisation, and it would be a glorious thing for Japan to be the means of evangelising it.

Dr. Cuyler is given to saying good things, and to striking the nail on the head. He did so most truly when he said at a meeting he lately addressed, "I wish some of our preachers would spend less time in propping up the Cross, and more in pointing men to it." Many preachers would seem to be living in perpetual fear of the complete overthrow of truth, and so are continually defending their position, instead of fearlessly and persistently asserting the invulnerable and immovable character of the Gospel of Christ. The great business of the ministry is to preach Christ, not to argue with his enemies. Souls are saved, not by controversy or wisdom of words, but by faithful testimony, and by clearly setting forth Christ as the only Saviour of men.

A pitiable instance of religious intolerance and narrowness has occurred in Devonshire in connection with the Week of Prayer. Dr. Geikie, the well-known author of the Life of Christ and other works, who is the Vicar of St. Mary Magdalene, Barnstaple, presided at a united meeting held in the Bible Christian Chapel of that town. The attention of the Bishop was called to this act, and public protest uttered against it, by a neighbouring clergyman. Dr. Geikie's letter, published in the Daily Western Times on the subject, is to be highly commended for its manly and fearless stand in defence of the true brotherhood of all believers, spite of their divergences of thought and practice. The following extracts speak for themselves :—

"I do not envy those who would narrow the Church of Christ to adherents of Episcopacy. I believe in the Holy Catholic Church, which my Prayer-book tells me is 'the blessed company of all faithful people,' and say with St. Paul, 'Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.' Like him, also, I would 'withstand to the face' St. Peter himself, if, while at one time professing brotherhood with all Christians, he at another 'withdrew and separated' from all friendly recognition of them in even so Christ-like a relation as union in prayer to our common God. Away with such Judaising! It is a disgrace to religion; an insult to Him who prayed that all his people might be one; a cruel wrong to the Church of England by alienating from it the sympathies of half the population of Britain: an affront to the 'Holy Catholic Church,' by an insolent excommunication of all but the approvers of one form of Church government. I refuse to denounce those who, while they may not follow with me, are acknowledged by Christ Himself as his servants by the grace given them to 'cast out devils in his name;' for it is quite certain that this is done by other communions as well as mine."

The overtures made by the British and Foreign Bible Society to the Baptist Bible Translation Society, with a view to amalgamation, have been rejected; the committees of the Baptist Missionary and the Bible Translation Societies having decided to continue the strictly denominational work of the latter. The concession made by the Bible Society to immersionist views, was so ample, and the spirit of the proposal so in accordance with the spirit of Christ, that not a few, who are on the Baptist side of the question at issue, will deeply regret this stand for denominationalism. The placing in the margin of the versions issued by the Bible Society the words "e.g., some translate immerse," as was proposed, would have been a gain in every way to the truth, so that the policy, as well as principle, of the rejection seems to be at fault. In the circulation of the Word of God, unity of action is surely of vast importance, and seeing that no principle would be surrendered by coalition on the ground proposed by the Bible Society, it is a cause for great regret that the unity sought for has not been obtained.

Mr. C. J. Kennard, M.P. for Salisbury, has contributed a letter to The Times on Temperance Insurance Statistics, which contains facts worthy of note. The "Temperance Section" of the business done by the United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Life Assurance Company has been kept in the books wholly distinct from the "General section," and the results of comparison are eminently satisfactory to the abstaining portion of the community. The expected claims by death in the Temperance section for the last seventeen years were computed by actuaries to be 2644, they really amounted only to 1861; for the same period the computation for the general section was 4408, the actual result 4339. Thus the mathematical gain is secured to Temperance of no less than just 30 per cent., and abstainers proved to have by far the best of it in reference to longevity.

A deeply interesting statement concerning the Free Church of Scotland and its work among the Highland crofters, has just been submitted to the Commissioners by Principal Rainy and Rev. J. Calder Macphail. It appears that a large amount of truly earnest and devoted work is being carried on among these hardy people, although peculiar difficulties stand in the way. Among these, the lack of Gospel agents able to speak in the Gaelic tongue is one of the chief. To reach the minds and hearts of the people it is necessary to adopt the language they best understand and most love; a very scanty supply of qualified men, however, are to be found for this work. There is a Gaelic School Society, whose object is to teach the Gaelic-speaking children in the Highlands and Islands to read the Word of God in their own tongue, by means of which important and blessed results are being gained, while, educationally, very satisfactory progress is being made.

It is gratifying to hear the statement from such authorities that although the Crofters are many of them far behind in the comforts and advantages of life, their character exhibits great elements of moral health and moral strength. They form a race of men who are full of the sense of duty, and of the ties that bind them to family and country; and the contribution they make to the general population of the home country and the colonies is sound and good. In pleading for further efforts to improve their social and temporal condition as well as to increase their spiritual privileges, Principal Rainy and his colleague wisely say :—

"We believe that everywhere, and certainly not least in Scotland and in the Highlands, the Church must co-operate on such questions with other agencies, and other agencies with the Church. Many evils have come from the separation and alienation of classes in Scotland—evils for which it will be found that "force is no remedy." If evils are to be averted and human passions are to be restrained, classes that have been too much alienated must work together."

The revelations made by inquiry into the housing of the poor in many parts of London, are more faithful than flattering to some who are concerned. The Times, for instance, has just given a description of property owned by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in Slade-court and Redcross-street, Mint. The rents charged (extorted is the truer word) from the wretched inhabitants of these miserable tenements make overcrowding a necessity, and disease and vice a sure sequence. That a body of men, entrusted with wealth and influence in the name of the Church which claims to be that of the nation, should permit property, held by them, to be so occupied, is even worse than their holding public-houses and deriving revenue from them. It is well that public opinion should be brought to bear upon the fact, and it may be hoped that the Commissioners will be amongst the first to set the example of thorough reform in this most important direction.

Many residents in the Battersea and Clapham districts will be glad to know that Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan, by invitation of the local pastors and workers, will continue the special services during this and next week. This week, afternoon Bible-readings at 3, and Gospel services at 8, will be held in the Wesleyan Chapel; next week they will be transferred to the Baptist Chapel, Wandsworth-road.

Sir Bartle Frere, speaking at a meeting held in Westminster last week, in connection with the Universities Mission to Central Africa, spoke glowingly of the success which has thus far attended Christian work there. It is less than a quarter of a century since Livingstone appeared among us, and told us he had at length opened the door to that vast region, and now all Christendom is being stirred to action on its behalf, and great improvements are already effected in the state of the people :—

"That which they had now to record as sober facts seemed to him and others as the fulfilment of a beautiful dream which seemed hardly possible ten or twelve years ago when he saw the market place at Zanzibar, a filthy place, crowded with slaves laid out side by side in hopeless despondency, without a smile on their face, without a symptom of humanity about them beside the outward form. It was almost impossible to believe that where those scores and scores of slaves were then stretched out there was now a cathedral, of which the new Bishop would shortly take charge."

We are, it seems, to be visited with a fresh importation from America of what is known as the new or progressive theology. A new monthly, devoted to its advocacy and promulgation has been started, and is heralded as a desirable addition to our own literature of a similar class. It is mainly to be sustained by American contributors, but one name well known among ourselves is included in the list, that of Dr. Fairbairn, of Airedale College. Aids to positive and intelligent belief in revealed truth such as is definitely taught in the Word of God can scarcely be too numerous, but these attempts to supplant old truths by new ideas, and to construct fresh doctrines such as savour of the wit and wisdom of men, rather than the grace of Christ, so far from being welcomed, are to be deplored.

According to the special correspondent of The Christian World, who writes from across the Atlantic, America is by no means giving signs of improvement in the direction of Sabbath keeping. In notes furnished by him to last week's issue we are told that "to any one who believes that a Sabbath day, different from all other days by its elevation, is, in these competitive times, more than ever necessary, the direction of things in America is a sore trial." He only says what is largely true of our own land as well as of that to which he refers when he adds, "There are thousands of poor men here who never get a Sunday, because there are thousands of others who use their Sundays for selfish ends." The tendency all round appears to be in the direction of lessening Sabbath observance instead of strengthening it.

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.

PREVAILING PRAYER.

Address by Rev. E. E. JENKINS,

AT STEINWAY HALL, SATURDAY, JAN. 12.

OUR presence here during this Week of Prayer, which we close to-day, supposes that we are united in the belief of these two propositions: first, that the disorders which afflict the world have their seat in sin; and secondly, that the remedy for these disorders is not several but one—the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. I will not step down from this position that we occupy to-day. I would not step down into the ground of controversy for the purpose of advancing these two propositions, but pass on to consider our duty, our present duty, with respect to the truths embodied in them. Our present duty this morning, in the face of the programme which you have read to us, is prayer, which must not be allowed to limit its meaning to mere formal supplication. We are here in the midst of Christian activities following the steps of the Divine Master, although at a miserable distance, waiting upon our duties, the duties we have in our own homes and in the Church, of ministering, of teaching, of giving, of ruling, of showing pity, and trying not to be slothful in business, seeking to be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; and with the influence of those duties upon us, with the humiliation of wretchedly imperfect service, we come together for prayer.

We are all the priests of the Lord, and when we enter upon the holy service of a priest, which is intercession, let us, in the first place, seek what the priests did before they entered upon a service of the Lord—clean hands and pure hearts. Let us put up that petition, each one for himself and for herself, which we find in the Communion Service of the Church of England, "Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify thy holy Name;" and now, having access to the Throne of Grace, let us lift up our prayers for those who are with us in the great and good fight of faith, our fellow-soldiers.

The consideration which most of all strengthens our position as intercessors is our living union with Him who is the Leading Intercessor. The conflict in which we are engaged as a Church Militant is his conflict. It is ours only by a necessary and by a dependent fellowship upon Him. When we pray together we contribute to the vast, immeasurable volume of supplication (if I may so speak) which, beginning with Christ's never-ceasing prayer and embracing the day and night cry of God's elect, pleads for the perishing world. Under these conditions let me say that it does not quite adequately express the truth that prayer has power with God.

The fact is that God—I speak with reverence—cannot resist prayer. Every voice of need, every call for help, enters his ears and engages his ministry. Why? Because the Lord of Sabaoth delighteth in mercy. But the intercessions which we make to-day are not contingent, isolated invocations; they express a Divine yearning for the salvation of the world. They join the redeeming work of Christ Himself. They are part of the operation of the Spirit of Christ, because they are born of his energy. May I not go further, and say that they are associated with the very prophecies which you have read to-day? The prophecies that went before Christ, and our supplications, are associated with the redeeming sufferings and triumphs of Christ. Our prayers are associated with all the activities in earth and in heaven that are pressed into the service and high calling of the Gospel.

This is claiming for prayer a very high place. But its supreme necessity is enforced in such passages of Scripture as these: "And He spake a parable unto them, that men ought always to pray and not to faint;" and again, "This kind of devil goeth not out but by prayer;" and again, "Praying with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit:" I say these passages make it abundantly clear that prayer is the mightiest agency of the Church to-day. Oh, brethren, let us rise this morning to the great argument of prayer.

Let us take two promises. First, "I will make the place of my feet glorious." That promise has been fulfilled. "I will make the place of my feet glorious" means, I will make the place of my feet clear, apparent; I will bring it out into its high place, so that all shall be able to see it. The unrestricted access which the humblest petitioner has to the throne of grace, shows that this blessed passage has been fulfilled, so that the place of God's feet, which is the mercy-seat, has been made clear, and so swept and cleared of all impediments that no one walking upon it need dash his foot against a stone. We take the next promise, "Afterwards I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh." That promise is being fulfilled, because "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh" means, "I will move upon the minds of all men." That promise is being rapidly accomplished in the world just now. The old Genesis and the new Genesis are thus parallel with each other. "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, and God said, Let there be light;" and the Spirit of God is now moving upon the mind of man, and He is saying, "Let there be light." Divine light never spread so swiftly as it does to-day. It encounters a chaos, but supremely does it triumph over darkness and confusion.

I have now been a missionary, or connected with missions, for thirty-five years. General Bruce, who led us in prayer this morning, and I met together in India some twenty-five years ago. When we compare the India of that day with the India of this day in respect to what God is doing in India, we may well cry out, "What hath Christ wrought!" Why, when I went to India there was not a throb of moral pulsation from Cape Cormoran right up to the north of India. All was quietness; it was the quietness of death. Now, wherever I go in India—and I have not been very long absent from it—and the correspondence I receive, all concur to support me in the belief that there is life everywhere. Not light as yet, but men walking about in the dark and crying for the day-dawn.

There are two things occurring just now in India which are very remarkable indeed, and they will have a parallel operation. The first comes from a force which is not a Church force at all—it is the Government. The Government of India just now is about to undertake the great work of primary education—that is to say, of spreading instruction throughout the villages of that great empire. The masses of the people are now going to be taught, and at this particular time God is doing a wonderful work in the villages themselves. A brother wrote to me the other day and said: "I have already baptized 100 persons this year, and I expect to baptize 500 persons before the year closes (that is, the last year), and there are at least a thousand who are waiting to make a public profession of Christ. Yes, prayer has power with God. These things are the result of humble, persevering, and importunate supplication.

It seems to me that that which gives irresistible power to prayer is that Christ is a Petitioner, as it were, with ourselves; and that the work of saving the world is our work because it is his work. Therefore, let us lift up our hearts in devout thanksgiving for what God has already accomplished, and let us also have the hope of the Gospel for the future. I know that in our various walks we find a most strenuous opposition to Christ; in this London of ours there is a vast amount of scepticism—well, not intellectual scepticism; I do not mean that; but a kind of immoral unbelief, if I may so call it—a kind of insincere unbelief; and sometimes ministers and other active Christians are very much discouraged. But let us look above, and at this particular moment go up by faith to the Great Master Himself, who ever liveth to make intercession for the world. Let us remember that the Holy Ghost is in our midst for the very purpose of convicting the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. May the Lord increase our faith.

NAILSWORTH, GLOUCESTER.

United services in the two Baptist chapels and the Congregational chapel were held here during the Week of Universal Prayer, when earnest Gospel addresses were given by the pastors and other ministers. There was a fair attendance each evening. A solemn and devout feeling was manifest in all the services.

BIARRITZ, FRANCE.

During the Week of Prayer some friends met daily for prayer on the topics suggested by the Evangelical Alliance. Our attendance averaged twenty-six, an increase upon last year. Several took part in the conduct of the meetings, and these short seasons of earnest, pointed devotion were felt very helpful. R. MACKINTOSH.

LIMERICK.

The meetings held here during the week were better, and showed a more extended spirit of unity than on any previous occasion, the result, doubtless, of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's recent Mission. The gatherings were well divided between the different dissenting chapels; the attendances were large, and the requests for prayer numerous.

NEWCASTLE.

In connection with the Week of United Prayer in this city there were two supplementary united Communion Services, under the auspices of the Newcastle Nonconformist Ministers' Association. The services were held in the Trinity Presbyterian Church and the Rye-hill Baptist Chapel; there was a large congregation at each place of worship. These services were attended and enjoyed by a large number of communicants from the different churches.

LAPFORD, MORCHARD BISHOP, N. DEVON.

The Week of Prayer was observed here by a meeting each evening, from Monday to Saturday, in the Congregational Schoolroom. I could not succeed in securing united meetings with the Church of England, and only our own meetings were held. The attendances were very fair—chiefly of members of our church. Throughout the week, but particularly on Wednesday and Thursday, a very lively and earnest spirit prevailed. The prayers, too, were very full, and remarkable for their direct bearing on the subject selected for the meeting. Altogether I am devoutly thankful for this season of prayer, and I hopefully look forward to increased prayerfulness and dedication among us as the outcome of the week's meetings.

HENRY N. MITCHELL,
Congregational Pastor.

LEOMINSTER.

United prayer-meetings were held in the Town Hall throughout the week, and have been largely attended. They have been times of much blessing and nearness to the Lord. The various ministers of the town have heartily co-operated, especially those connected with the Moravians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Free Church, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Friends. A powerful appeal for the purity of the Churches was given by Rev. W. H. Purchase.

GLASGOW.

On Monday, Jan. 8, at Glasgow, Mr. Macfarlane presided. Speaking on "Praise," he said they had much to praise God for in what He had done for them as a noon meeting during the twenty-five years of its existence. It was gratifying that during the past year the attendance had been much better than formerly, and great interest manifested. Mr. Jack said he knew that many had come to their noon meeting and received a blessing. During the week there was a large attendance at the meetings.

CHESTERFIELD.

The Week of Prayer was duly observed, as usual, under the auspices of the Town Mission, the meetings being held in the lecture room of the Stevenson Memorial Hall. They have been, on the whole, well attended, especially on Tuesday evening, when the room was well filled. Able and practical addresses were delivered by the clergy, ministers, and several laymen. The list of subjects and Bible references compiled by the late Canon Battersby was singularly apt and suggestive, as well as appropriate to the needs and circumstances of our country and the world.

This week was a fitting preparation for a Gospel Temperance Mission, which we intend holding for a fortnight. JOHN ROSE, M.D.

STRATFORD, E.

The noon-day meetings held at Rokeby House—and evening meetings at the various church and chapel schoolrooms—showed no diminution of interest from former years. These annual re-unions, which have now existed for over ten years in this town, have been anticipated with ever increasing interest, and, without doubt, have proved vastly helpful in drawing closer and closer the bonds of Christian brotherhood. The ministers of the town and near neighbourhood, representative of every section of the one Church of Christ, were in attendance, and led the meetings, either in the capacity of presidents, or by giving a brief exhortation on the subject assigned for the day.

A more than ordinary interest attached to this year's gatherings, in view of the forthcoming visit of the American evangelists, whose Gospel Mission in Stratford opens in the large hall erected in West Ham-lane on Wednesday, 23rd inst., and closes on Monday, February 11. Most earnest were the pleadings that great spiritual results might flow from this movement. Each Saturday evening, since October 20 last, united prayer-meetings have been held throughout the town to invoke the Divine blessing on the work. The attendance has been most encouraging and an ever-growing interest manifested, and to this the Week of Prayer gave a sensible impetus. The town has been mapped out for house-to-house visitation, and already upwards of 30,000 Gospel books and tracts have been distributed.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The meetings at this place were both interesting and well attended. On the first day Earl CAIRNS presided, and read a portion of Mark xii. and Ps. cxlv., after which the Dean of WELLS spoke on the different modes that different churches had of approaching God in prayer; some by means of written prayer, and others by extempore prayer. The great need was reality of heart.

The following day Lord PLUNKET presided, and read Neh. i. 4, 11, Rev. MARTIN LEWIS commenting on David's acknowledgment of his transgression (Ps. li.) and the pardon he obtained. Even so Christians could not draw near with acceptance or plead with power until they had confessed their sins, and had their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience.

On the third day Mr. EDWD. FUTVOYE presided, and made some practical remarks on the necessity of parents being circumspect in all their ways. Rev. W. JULYAN spoke on Ps. cxl. 12, 13, and showed that what God hath thus joined together in precept, his people should seek to exemplify in practice; they should work no among one class or age in particular, but through agencies suited to all.

Dr. NANKIVELL took the chair the next day and referred to the inter-dependence of member with member on account of all being joined to the Head. Rev. W. JACKSON followed with a description of the first prayer-meeting of the Church recorded in Acts i. 8—14. The disciples were drawn together by love; their prayers were definite, believing, united, and persevering, hence the blessing followed.

On the day of "Intercession for the Churches," Dr. DRURY presided, and alluded to the purposes of God in his dealings with the nations of the earth and the responsibility of those who are privileged with the Gospel. Rev. G. TRUSLER pointed out that the lives and conduct of Christians must be consistent with their prayers. We should not only pray for wise and good laws but use all the means in our power toward obtaining them.

Colonel RAWLANDSON presided on the last day, and urged reality and progress as two important elements in Mission work. Captain DAWSON pleaded that more attention should be given to Home Mission work, and asked for the extinction of a debt on the Young Men's Christian Association. A fortnight's Mission had just been held there with success and blessing.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We learn from the secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance that the reports already received from various parts of our own country, as well as from the nearer places on the Continent, show that the Week of Prayer has been observed with unabated earnestness, and, in some instances, under exceptionally interesting circumstances. At Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, meetings were held daily, and at the closing gathering about 800 persons were present. At Hereford, two meetings were held each day; the attendance was very large, and the correspondent who reports them states that the whole was pervaded by a spirit of brotherliness and unity which was most remarkable. The suitability, earnestness, and spirit of those who took part in prayer have left their impression upon the city. From Buda-Pesth it is reported that meetings were held daily and were well attended. In Stockholm it appears there were gatherings each evening, and on several occasions 2000 persons were present.

MISSION HALL, MIDDLE BROOK-STREET, WINCHESTER.—Mr. W. D. Gibb appeals for help to carry on the Gospel work in the above hall. The Mission has been carried on in the poorest part of the city for eight years. Gospel services, Sunday Schools, open-air preaching, and Temperance meetings are included, and many souls have been gathered in from time to time. Donations may be sent to Mr. W. D. Gibb, hon. superintendent, 31, The Piazza, Winchester.

SABBATH SCHOOL MISSION FOR SCOTLAND.—This Mission has now been at work for a period of fifteen years. It is national and not denominational. In carrying out its objects most of the parishes and towns of Scotland, with the Orkney, Shetland, and Western Islands, have been visited. Villages and districts in which the evangelist is rarely seen have been traversed, and in some of these with the most gratifying results. The lectures and addresses which have been given on all the various branches of religious education and Sabbath-school work amount to several thousands, and private interviews to several thousands more. The results of so useful a Mission cannot be estimated by what is at present seen, though that is most encouraging. The superintendent, Mr. C. S. Inglis, 12, Dick-place, Grange, Edinburgh, will be thankful for continued support.

Eventide.

"Let my prayer be set before Thee as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice."—Ps. cxli. 2.

BEYOND the purple hills a tender light
Glows in the sweet and solemn eveningsky;
A gleaming band of opal, pale yet bright,
The silent sea beneath it still doth lie.

A thousand lovely tints do there combine,
With shifting forms that softly fade and glow,
And every change, in quivering light or line,
Is mirror'd in the sleeping waves below.

Oh that my soul, as that unruffled sea,
Reflecting every faintest touch of light,
Might so be swayed in every thought by Thee!
Might gleam and glow with quick responses bright!

Oh love of God! How wonderful, how sweet!
My heart bows down in silence to adore;
I clasp and kiss with joy thy blessed feet;
Oh leave me not, my Lord, for ever more!

The Spitalfields Beehive.

THE monthly gathering of workers at this Home took place on Wednesday, last week. A number of the rescued children from the Training Home, London Fields, were present, and sang some hymns.

Miss Steer gave a brief account of the work carried on in connection with "The Bridge of Hope." Miss Child, who was unable to be present through ill health, sent an interesting letter, in which she gave an account of Christmas day at "the Welcome Home." The question went round among the sailors, "Where and how did you spend last Christmas day?" Some of the answers were as follows: "In a hurricane of wind in the China Sea;" "In the Channel homeward bound, in such bad weather that we lost our anchor and my pudding." One said that he was wrecked at Scager Reef, and picked up that same day, and thus saved from a watery grave. The watch-night service was also a time of great blessing in the salvation of souls at "the Welcome Home." A little before 11 o'clock the workers went out to sing, and a good number were brought in. Miss Child's letter ended with many requests for prayer, among others for a young widow, not yet 17, whose husband was suddenly killed while at work.

Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH then gave a very helpful word to workers from Deut. xxxiii. There were seven little words in this chapter, he said, which would make up the whole Christian life. Saved, shielded, succoured (v. 29); separated (v. 16); shod (v. 25); sitting down (v. 3); satisfied (v. 23). If we would be true workers, we must be true walkers. Who has ever fathomed that word saved? Let us get a firm, comprehensive grip of it, that we may be filled with a burning flame of love for God. The attitude of every Christian should be, "Here am I, send me." It may not be to convert a hundred souls, or to send shiploads of children to Canada; it may be to plod and plod and plod. If I do not go to China myself, I pray God every day to send my children, all seven of them. Then as to sitting down, the Lord does not always want us to be running. Jesus says, "They shall go in and out." If we do not know the joy of going in, we shall not know the joy of going out. Do not be always in a scramble and a hurry. Do not be always thinking about the work. Think about the Lord, and He will think about the work.

After a few words from Miss Macpherson, and a short season of prayer, the meeting closed.

BRADFORD BLUE RIBBON MISSION.—The Mission being conducted by Mr. Wm. Noble, and which is specially intended for young men, is both successful in attendance and results. There has been a decided preponderance of those persons whom the promoters of the Mission desired to reach. The total number of pledges taken up to Friday night last was 1462.

MR. RADCLIFFE IN LONDON.

OUTCAST LONDON.

LAST week, as announced, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe visited London, before starting for Russia, and delivered two addresses at 186, Aldersgate-street. On Tuesday evening his subject was "New Thoughts about Outcast London, and how to provide fresh dwellings." Mr. George Williams, who presided, referred to the good work that had been done in the poorer districts of the metropolis by the City Mission and kindred agencies.

Mr. Radcliffe said we might well ask what the condition of London would have been now but for the influence of this large army of City missionaries. At the same time much remains to be done that all the missionaries, Bible women, clergymen, and other labourers have not been able to accomplish. Looking at the secular aspects of the question, Mr. Radcliffe said he would admit all the statements contained in "The Bitter Cry." He believed that London in a few years would be far worse than anything that had yet been described or imagined. This would arise from the immense increase of population, not only through natural growth, but the great influx of persons from the Continent and from the provinces, who would gravitate to this mighty centre. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in a recent address at Liverpool, had expressed the opinion that, at the present rate of increase, England, by the year 2000, will be almost one continuous city from end to end. The increase is much more rapid now than in past times, because of the absence of destructive wars, and of pestilences that are prevented by better sanitary conditions. Mr. Radcliffe proceeded to show how London had been miserably malformed in the planning and laying down of the streets, without any regard to order or to future requirements. When in the matter of railway facilities for workmen, much remains to be done. This class pays much more in proportion than first and second-class season ticket-holders, because they do not become "residential contractors." If the evils we deplore are to be remedied, there must be less, and not more, concentration of the masses of the people. We want to "pump" the people in daily from the suburbs by railway machinery, and to pump them out again at night. These workmen need to be "residential contractors;" and if a clause were inserted in railway bills compelling them to be carried at a low rate, probably they would pay better than any other section of the community.

Mr. Radcliffe referred to the lamentable absence of any social conveniences in the London thoroughfares as one cause of the inattention by the very poor to "the decencies of life." In addition to the parks which are in most cases too far away to be of any practical benefit to the great bulk of the poor, there should be more sidewalk accommodation in the London streets, where trees could be planted and seats placed where the tired and the young could find rest and recreation. He commented with especial severity on the deplorable lack in the public thoroughfares of retiring-rooms and lavatories for women. We suffer greatly from the barbarity and forgetfulness of our rulers, and it is time that this disgrace were wiped out.

Then we want more houses built, but they must be built on a sound commercial basis and not as a matter of philanthropy. On this head Mr. Radcliffe strongly advocated co-operation in the building of workmen's dwellings, so that by doing away with the multiplied expenses of small ownerships, there could be a reduction of local rates and taxes of various kinds. Why should not the Government lend sums of money at low interest for the purpose of erecting suitable dwellings for workmen in the suburbs? An earnest endeavour must also be made to prohibit the placing of drink shops in these new neighbourhoods. We want to look this drink question in the face. We talk of our slums and our wretched houses, but we must not forget that nine-tenths of the misery of London comes directly from its drunkenness. Not content with the moral and physical degradation caused by drunkenness at home, we are doing our best by our opium to make the Chinese more degraded still. We may build houses for the poor in our suburbs, but we must remember that landlords will have sober tenants, and so the drunkards will have to remain in the slums.

In proceeding to advocate emigration as one means of relieving congested London and other large cities, Mr. Radcliffe paid a high tribute to Miss Macpherson's work of gathering brood after brood of human chickens, and transplanting them in the Far West. We have not yet begun to emigrate. Why should we be so sentimental about "our own, our native land?" Even Jacob himself, when he heard there was corn in Egypt, consented first to let his lads go there and at last went himself. There is plenty of corn for us in Canada and other places, and we must begin to emigrate after something like a true fashion. If the Church of God were alive to the opportunity, she might make this emigration one of the grandest possible schemes for spreading the Gospel.

MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.

At the close of Mr. Radcliffe's vigorous and interesting address, a valedictory and dedicatory service was held for the purpose of giving a formal good-bye to four young men who were to sail next day for China. One of these, Mr. D. Evans, goes out as a member of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, to distribute the Scriptures in China in connection with the British and Foreign Bible Society. He was converted at Aldersgate-street only some thirteen months ago, and is the first-fruits of this young Missionary Society. The other three, Messrs. King, Key, and Langman, go out to increase the band of workers sent forth to that vast Mission field by the China Inland Mission. These young brethren briefly and in turn addressed the meeting, expressing their earnest desire to be used of God among the Chinese, and asking to be remembered in the prayers of Christians at home. Mr. Evans was presented by his fellow young men with a parcel of books, including a beautifully bound Bagster's Bible, in token of their esteem and good will. Mr. Williams offered some appropriate words of counsel and encouragement to each, and all were earnestly commended to the grace and keeping of God by Mr. Robert Burn.

APOSTOLIC METHODS.

On the following evening Mr. Radcliffe addressed a not very numerous company in the same place on "The Desirability of Reverting to Apostolic Methods in Evangelising the Heathen." After some earnest prayer, in which the young men who had that day sailed for China were remembered, Mr. Radcliffe said he had received a letter from Dr. Baedeker to the effect that he would be ready to start for Russia on Friday next. Mr. Spiers, who was present, would also be going to St. Petersburg soon to carry the Gospel to the children. For these and for other workers on the Continent further prayer was made.

Mr. Radcliffe, in commencing his address, said we had had to unlearn much in this country during the last 150 years. It was 200 years after we emerged from Popery before we could bring our minds to grasp the absurd proposition of sending out missionaries to foreign lands. It was only some forty years ago that we discovered the value of Y.M.C. Associations. How slow we have also been to unlearn the practice of shutting up women's lips from proclaiming the blessed Gospel.

When our missionaries did start they went out with our old ideas—like Saul with his spear and his shield, not David fashion, with his sling and his pellets from the brook. Proceeding to quote some "simple texts about churches—not people, but bricks and mortar," Mr. Radcliffe, assisted by others, read passages from the opening chapters of the Acts, to show that "the upper room, ready to hand," was the greatest thing in the way of church buildings we read of in early Church history. Christians never appeared to get beyond that rude beginning. In Rom. xvi. 5, we read of "the church that is in their house"—a thing profaned by domestic uses, but ready to hand: a ready-made church; 1 Cor. xvi. 19, "the church that is in their house;" Col. iv. 15, "the church which is in his house;" Phil. ii., "to the church in thy house." The early Christians never seem to get beyond this; they do not seem either to have had any great ambition to get beyond it. I am unable to find anywhere a church that was not in a house, or to find that a single sixpence was ever expended in church buildings. In Acts xiii. 2, we read of "the church that was at Antioch." We have, surely, good reason to suppose that this was one of these same churches "in the house," and that from this house went forth the first systematised missionary effort. It is not the capacity of the walls that is the question; the Holy Ghost can work from a little house, and thence send missionaries to all parts of the world. Go where you will, where the human race is, you can find houses ready to hand, where you may gather little companies in the name of the Lord.

Now to another subject, much more important than bricks and mortar. Mr. Radcliffe here read the communication from Rev. Dr. Nevius, of Chefoo, on his methods of work, that appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of Aug. 30. In that letter Dr. Nevius said, "In my work in the country I have tried to depend upon God's providence, God's word, God's spirit, and the Chinaman." Mark that, said Mr. Radcliffe, "the Chinaman," a man on the spot ready to hand. So we come to living instrumentalities. Let us again go to the Word of God and read some passages so that they may "stick." "They ordained them elders in every church." (Acts xiv. 23.) To avoid all difference of opinion we will use the word "overseers." Paul and Barnabas we read appointed overseers; it is always in the plural, never in the singular. Dean Alford says there is nothing in common between these "overseers" and the "bishops" of the Roman Catholic or Greek Church. Mr. Macleod Wylie says this appointing of overseers was the constant practice of the Burmese missionary, Judson. When he had formed a native church he would ordain overseers from amongst themselves; then off he went into the interior. He repeated the same thing, and continually pushed on to the regions beyond.

Paul's address at Miletus to the Ephesian elders (Acts xx. 17—38) was here read. Well now, said the speaker, we have found how cheaply they could get bricks and mortar, and here we see how economically the Apostle got his bishops or overseers. He tells them they were not to take anything at all for their labours. Other passages were quoted showing the character and duties of the "overseers." What is this? "One that ruleth well his own house" (1 Tim. iii.) Then we cannot have these young unmarried men as overseers. They were to be the tried converts—married men, family men, and those who must show that they had succeeded in ruling their own houses well. Is it not in your Bible? (See, also, Titus i. 5—9.) Mr. Radcliffe also read from Jas. ii. 5 and 1 Cor. i. 27, to show that in the early Church overseers were not chosen for their worldly position, but for their spiritual gifts and graces. How proud we are in England of our correct speaking, and how we despise those who are unlearned, who deal in provincialisms and bad grammar, and leave their "h's" out of place. We say: How can God use such men?

If the churches were to proceed upon this principle of ignorating, and leaving the converts to take care of themselves, how soon

Africa and other heathen lands could be traversed and evangelised. If you mothers were to continue to carry your children after they were many months old, what puny, sickly boys and girls they would be. Suppose they had a fall now and then; what then? It has not killed them. Perhaps they are all the stronger and healthier for these things So with churches. Let them try to walk themselves, under their own overseers, and let their spiritual father go on, as Judson did, to the regions beyond.

At this point of his address Mr. Radcliffe read a number of quotations from a paper by Dr. Kellogg, of Alleghany, U.S., on the subject of "Church Organisation in Foreign Missions," that appeared in The Catholic Presbyterian for July, 1880. We may quote the following portions:—

"What principles shall guide us in the organising of new churches among the heathen? . . . . In all cases churches should be organised at once. Where there may be even two or three families converted to the faith of Christ, they should, we judge, be in some fashion organised for the purposes of government, instruction, and worship. . . . . When a Christian community is formed, we are to take from among them the men best fitted for the position, and make them elders of the churches. . . . . But here the venerable precedent left us by the Apostles has been too often abandoned. Instead of formally committing the instruction and government of the church to the elders thus chosen, missionaries have very commonly settled down, and themselves become the pastors, after the European fashion, of the churches which they have organised. We only echo the admissions of many a missionary in such a position when we say with emphasis that this ought not so to be. It is in glaring contrast to the practice of the Apostles. It has worked badly wherever it has been tried. It has greatly hindered, where it has not entirely prevented, the development of a vigorous and independent Church life. . . .

"By these missionary pastorates the wide extension of the Gospel has been greatly hindered. It has kept the missionary at one place when, having established a church, he ought to have moved on, as Paul did, and establish others. . . . We would have our missionaries in this matter follow in faith what we believe to be the inspired example. Let them when they organise churches ordain over them elders; and then fearlessly 'commending them to the Lord on whom they believe,' stretch themselves to the regions beyond for the further extension of the Gospel."

Here is a call from Mr. and Mrs. Guinness for pastors to go to the countless rapidly filling settlements of the great West. The American Home Missionary Society is organising over a hundred new churches every year, and unless these can be supplied with pastors they soon languish and die. "We are receiving many appeals," says Mr. Guinness, "and we feel we cannot turn a deaf ear to them. Multitudes of the emigrants who are pouring into these Western territories of the United States, have never yet heard the Gospel, coming from European countries where it has long been corrupted and lost. We are consequently preparing to respond to the invitations which reached us, and to send out to these needy fields a number of young evangelists who prefer preaching the truth in their own tongue to acquiring a foreign one."

What if the Holy Ghost should come down in our midst to-night, and some brethren should, at his bidding, go forth with their Bible, big with faith, in the name of the living God? Let them go as the little boy with the basket of loaves and fishes—go to these mushroom cities that are springing up on the west coast of America. The Lord Jesus is present with us yet, and He can send forth the weak ones. At the day of Pentecost all were filled and loaded with gifts—men and women—and thousands were converted. So it can be now. The command is, "Go to the uttermost parts of the earth." You have commenced your little Missionary Society here. It is but a little tree, but it will go on and on increasing because God is with you.

After Mr. Charles Cook had asked prayer for his coming visit to foreign prisons,

Rev. Mr. PIERCY, for thirty-three years a Wesleyan missionary in China, briefly addressed the meeting. His idea of a missionary going from England to China was that he is a planter of churches—an apostle He did not agree with the view that the converts from heathenism should not be taught to contribute to the support of those who labour among them in words and doctrine. If he held that with respect to converts abroad he could not himself conscientiously receive any support from Christians at home. But let all who go forth to China proceed on apostolic methods, and be planters of churches. He was bound to admit that there are church edifices in China that stand in the way of the progress of the Gospel, because the native Christians could not keep them in repair. It would be a blessed thing if all the supporters of Missions in London would come to a close consideration of the points that had been referred to by Mr. Radcliffe. He believed that the Church in the present day through the gift of the Spirit had within itself the men and the means to compass very speedily the conversion of the world. Let all, men and women, young and old, strive as to who would go to the darkest spots in the earth.

Rev. T. JOHNSON, a liberated slave, who has been in Africa as a missionary, and is now seeking to arrange for sending other coloured missionaries to Africa, next spoke briefly. At the close of the American Civil War he got his freedom; then he could not rest till he got to Africa somehow, that he might tell his African brothers about Jesus. He hoped and prayed that the Christians would take up the idea Mr. Radcliffe had propounded. If we follow the course laid down in the Bible we cannot be wrong.

Mr. STEVENSON, of the China Inland Mission, said he travelled eighty-six days through Bhamo without meeting a single Christian; he longed with an intense longing that many more should go out to that land and tell them the blessed news of the Gospel.

Mr. SPIERS also solicited an interest in the work of scattering Christian periodicals among the children of foreign lands.

ADINGDON.—A most successful Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission has been concluded in Abingdon. The meetings were held in the County Hall, and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. Prior to the Mission the town was thoroughly visited by a number of ladies. A large representative choir rendered the most efficient service. During the week 453 ribbons were distributed, and 333 new pledges taken.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—The friends of this society have for many years been accustomed to devote January 16 to prayer for the Divine blessing upon the work of the missionaries. Wednesday last week was thus observed and meetings were held in various parts of England and Ireland. The central meeting in London took place in Exeter Hall. There was a good attendance About an hour and a half was spent in thanksgiving for blessings received, and in earnest prayer that this new year effort, the thirty-fifth since this society was formed, may witness many Roman Catholics forsaking the darkness in which they have so long been stumbling, for the light of Gospel day. Capt. the Hon Francis Maude presided.

FROM THE BACKWOODS OF CANADA.—May I be permitted to thank the sender of an occasional copy of THE CHRISTIAN, for the great benefit it is to me? The readers of your journal can scarcely realise what it is to be in the backwoods of Canada where literature is not to be had, and where the poor missionary, living on £1 a week, supporting wife and family, has to trudge twelve and fourteen miles a Sabbath, preaching three times a day. There are many at home, no doubt, who have books and periodicals that they do not know what to do with or where to send them. Perhaps such would be glad to find an opportunity of helping on the Lord's cause. Not only the missionaries but the people would be glad of such helps; it is enough for them in new settlements to make both ends meet, so that they cannot lay out money for books or other food for the mind. Should any of your readers think well to help on the Redeemer's cause by sending books, tracts, or periodicals, I shall be glad.—Yours, for Christ's sake,

WM. ROBERTSON.

Trout Lake P.O., Ontario, Canada West.

Rev. W. Haslam at Nottingham.

THE parish of St. Michael's, Old Radford, had long been notorious for its neglected condition. In 1880 Rev. C. Lea Wilson was appointed Vicar. To supply the deficiencies of church accommodation, a beautiful hall has been built, which was opened on January 8 by Rev. W. Haslam. It is capable of seating 600 persons, and one feature peculiar to it is its provision by means of sliding shutters for turning the aisles into numerous small class-rooms.

The opening service was the beginning of a Mission week; from the first, the hall was well filled both at the evening meeting, and in the afternoon when Mrs. Haslam conducted a meeting for women. There was also a well attended meeting for believers each morning held by Mr. Haslam. On Sunday there were three services, at two of which the hall was densely crowded. Day after day the feeling seemed to deepen and intensify.

The final praise meeting was a scene never to be forgotten by those who witnessed the thronging numbers who pressed in and heard the almost passionate outburst of praise and thanksgiving.

Evangelistic Work in Kentish Town.

MALDEN HALL, QUEEN'S CRESCENT.

THE tenth anniversary of this branch of the Evangelistic Mission was celebrated on the 17th inst. by large and enthusiastic gatherings. In the afternoon, after praise and prayer, Mr. John Churchill read and commented on Psalm xcii., and Mr Horton followed with a short and interesting address on Benjamin. Mr. Henry Varley gave a very telling address on the High Priesthood of Jesus Christ. Mr. Wm. Soltau, in a pithy address, took up several interesting points in connection with the same subject. Mr. W. R. Lane spoke briefly on the Levitical service of believers, urging all to keep near to Jesus.

Tea was provided by the friends at Malden Hall for 500, after which the meeting was resumed in the evening, by Dr. McKilliam giving a short address on Christ's love to us. Then came testimonies from the converts, some of which were very striking, and exhibited the wondrous grace of God in saving some of the worst characters.

Mr. Hurditch referred to the work of the Mission generally, and gave encouraging accounts of it. At Streatham, near Ely, a new hall has been erected—the outcome of the tent meetings, where many have been converted. This happy gathering was brought to a close with prayer, by Mr. G. A. Colman.

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE preached at City-road Chapel on Sunday, 13th inst., from Deut. xxxi. 12, 13. He gave a lively and earnest address on teaching and training the young in the home, as well as in the school.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—Many of our readers will be glad to know that Mr. and Mrs. Henry Soltau safely reached Bhamo, Upper Burmah, after visiting missionaries at Madras, Calcutta, Rangoon, and Maulmein. They had a prosperous voyage, and a very warm welcome from many who first made Mr. Soltau's acquaintance nine years ago. They need the prayerful sympathy of English Christians in their lonely and difficult work amongst the heathen.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.—The General Board of this Society met in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, last month. Mr. David Drummond presided. Rev. John Elliott reported the grant of many valuable books from several friends in England, the grant of £50 worth of Bibles from the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the appointment of new colporteurs in many parts of the country. A deeply interesting Conference of colporteurs was afterwards held in Upper Sackville-street, when appropriate addresses were delivered. It is gratifying to hear of the continued progress of this valuable Society. Christians of all denominations unite in carrying on the work. The agents are spreading over all parts of the country, and are very favourably received.

Foreign and Continental Notes.

GERMANY.

CITY missionaries in Berlin find, for the most part, a very ready acceptance of sermons, small books, &c., among railway men and cab drivers.

The Empress of Germany has made known to Count Bernstorff, the President of the German branch of the Evangelical Alliance, her regret that the state of her health prevented her taking part in the New Year's united prayer-meetings.

DANVILLE, ILL.

Rev. Thomas Harrison has been holding meetings of great power at this place. Over 500 people, among them many heads of families, have professed a saving faith in Christ.

INDIA.

Dr. and Mrs. Schudder have decided to return to missionary work in India. They expect to embark for the Arcot Mission towards the end of the summer. The familiarity of Dr. Schudder with the work and languages of India makes his decision to return of the highest value.

A "White Cross Society" has been formed in India, having for its object "the promotion of purity and the protection of women and children from degradation." For the present it is confined to the Church of England, but is likely to extend.

AUSTRALIA.

During December, Rev. J. H. Mitchell and Messrs. Harrison and Isaac conducted a Mission at Horsham, which resulted in bringing many to Christ. The labours of Rev. A. J. Clarke at Maldon have been the means of much blessing to a number of young people. The Temperance movement is making progress in the Colony also; at Lara and Little River several hundreds signed the pledge at two meetings. Mr. Clarke's labours in the Gospel and Temperance at Campbells Creek were blessed to many. A large number professed to find Christ as their Saviour; many of them donned the blue.

FRANCE.

In several villages as well as towns of France the Week of Prayer has been observed with earnestness and blessing. In many places true Evangelical Alliance meetings have been held of the Reformed Church, the Free Church, and the Methodist Church. Meetings for prayer were held in Paris, amongst others at the chapels Taitbout and the Oratoire. M. Th. Monod presided at two of these meetings.

The Paris branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society held its annual meeting January 14 in the Malesherbes chapel. The report was read in English by M. Gustave Monod. The Society employs 45 Bible colporteurs in France. During the last year it spread abroad 84,000 volumes in 87 departments. The principle of the Society is to sell even at a loss, but to sell. It desires to help other societies, but not to make gratuitous gifts. Each volume costs the Society one franc.

Messrs. Réveillaud and Sainton have again visited the South of France in connection with the Mission Intérieure, and have had large audiences. In some places the largest halls to be procured were not large enough to contain those who flocked to hear the Gospel. A holy emulation has been awakened, and many when they meet say to each other, "Brother, let us serve the Lord."

ITALY.

Notes from our Free Italian Churches, recently received, abound with interest. At Rivoli Signor Benvenuti was offered 600 lire if he would abjure the evangelical religion and return to the Roman Catholic faith. His reply was: "Although I am the father of eight children and find myself in a difficult position to give them a little bread, I will not sell my soul for money. I prefer to live poor with Christ than to be rich by renouncing my Saviour."

Fines and imprisonments for the Gospel are happily ended in Italy. Rome is crippled; but she is as active as ever in her devices to frustrate the Gospel and to persecute believers. They need our sympathy.

Edinburgh, Jan. 18. WILLIAM PATERSON.

WORKING CLASSES IN BELGIUM.

The Belgian correspondent of L'Evangeliste gives a very dark picture of the moral state of the working classes in Belgium. He thinks they are not so well fed, and that they drink more than the same class f many other country. A workman willingly lives upon potatoes and red herrings, provided he can get as much gin as he wishes. Drunkenness is the great scourge of Belgium, and leads to many other crimes. From 1876 to 1880, 307 murders and 1304 incendiary acts were committed; in the same period 2412 undoubted suicides were registered, besides many other deaths where some little uncertainty existed as to the cause of death. In Brussels there is one spirit shop to every forty inhabitants.

Among the Children at Leicester.

A MISSION for children and young people has been held in Holy Trinity parish by Rev. James Stephens, assisted by Miss Bazett, Miss Jameson, and others. From the outset the Divine power accompanied the Word. Daily addresses were given during the Scripture hour in the girls' school, and three morning addresses for boys only in the church. Miss Bazett spoke every day to young women during their dinner hour. At 4.30, a general Mission service for children was conducted by Mr. Stephens, who also preached every evening at 7.30 to young people.

The attendance in the afternoon averaged about 300, and in the evening about 250. More than 200 were spoken with individually about their souls, and many gave evident tokens of conversion to God. Mr. Stephens' addresses to boys only were very pointed and effective. In answer to his appeal, many stood up in the presence of their companions, and gave clear evidence of decision for Christ. A boys' Bible-class has already been started for those over twelve years of age, at the request of the boys themselves; about twenty having given in their names for it. An inner circle of the Scripture Union, which is called a Prayer Union, has been formed in two sections (over and under fourteen), and about thirty have joined it.

Before admission, all have to be interviewed by the vicar or his helpers, and give tokens of true heart conversion. Thus it is hoped a permanent praying body of young people will be at work among the children.

Miss Bazett's work during the dinner hour was very successful, and was carried on a week longer. One hundred and thirty attended the thanksgiving communion on Monday week. Praise to God is offered by the clergy, Revs. M. Reed and W. G. D. Fletcher, and prayer is asked for the continuance of the work.

TRACTS FOR SAILORS.—A missionary who labours in Somersetshire writes that good tracts and books are much needed and appreciated by sailors. Recently he met with three sailors who said they had been to sea six weeks and had not seen a good book or paper. We suggest that if Christians living in ports would see that ships are supplied so far as they are able, not one need go without having the Gospel on board.

HEBREW CHRISTIANS IN WHITECHAPEL.—The eleventh annual meeting of Hebrew Christians at Old Montague-street Mission Hall was held on the 17th inst. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. E. C. Tritton. There were present Sir William and Lady Roberts, Dr. Stern, and others, several of whom gave addresses. The work carried on in behalf of the sons of Abraham in this district is under the superintendence of Mr. and Mrs. Ehrlich.

THE EDINBORO' CASTLE.—Dr. Barnardo asks us to say that the re-opening of the Edinboro' Castle, which, as we announced last week, is fixed for Monday next, 28th inst., will, it is feared, find him still nearly £2000 short of the sum required to defray the whole cost incurred by the re-building. If this should be the case, he is resolved to close again after the dedicatory services and not to open fully for preaching until the whole amount outstanding is in hand or promised. We hope, however, that the widespread interest shown in the evangelisation of East London may render such a course unnecessary, and that the close of the services of the 28th will find him in possession of all required for the due prosecution of the work.

A Noble Work in Jaffa.

DEAR SIR,—As some readers of THE CHRISTIAN may shortly be travelling in Palestine, I would like to draw their attention to a noble Christian work which is being carried on at Jaffa by four ladies, of which travellers do not often hear. I refer to the hospital for natives, under the charge of Miss Mangan. It was begun in a small way in the town of Jaffa by Miss Mangan and Miss Newton, who received a few sick people at their house as out-patients, and spoke to them of Christ. The work grew rapidly, and a house was taken in a more healthy situation in the suburbs that in-patients might be received; afterwards an additional ward was built.

There are now four ladies carrying on the work with a competent doctor, a Syrian. Last year 150 patients passed through the hospital, there being eighteen beds, which are always full. Of out-patients there were, last year, 11,500 attendances, 5000 being new cases. Out-patients are seen every day except Sundays and Wednesdays. In the house, family prayer is held daily in Arabic, all the in-patients who are able being present. In addition to this work, the ladies conduct sewing-classes for women and visit their old patients in the villages round Jaffa. The fame of the hospital has spread far and wide, and people come to it not only from the neighbourhood of Jaffa, but also from Nablus (Shechem), Gaza, and the borders of Egypt, and even from the Hauran (Bashan).

Thus the whole of Palestine is being sown with Gospel seed from this one centre. But a new hospital is sadly needed, and Miss Mangan is most anxious to build one; the present house is unsuitable in many ways, and she only has it on a short lease. Many more beds could be filled if there were room for them. A good site is for sale close by. The need is urgent; should sufficient money not be obtained to complete the hospital before they have to leave their present quarters the work must come to a standstill. I write this lest any travellers, coming like myself as strangers to Jaffa, should miss the pleasure of seeing this work and helping it, through not knowing of it. A CONSTANT READER.

SUNDAY CLOSING OF PUBLIC-HOUSES.—The Association for stopping the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday have issued a circular asking that all ministers and Christians generally would be earnest in prayer for the success of the Bill to introduced by Mr. Stevenson into the House of Commons on February 6, and that it may be passed into law.

SINGAPORE.—A correspondent writes asking prayer for the policemen at Singapore. She says that many who were sober and respected in England are becoming drunkards. The climate is trying and they are surrounded with temptation. Books and tracts will be thankfully received by Miss Sophia Cook, Singapore, for distribution among them.

REV. E. W. OAKES was converted by the grace of God from the gutter to the Saviour, in a New York park, confessed Christ in a Gospel tent in this city, studied a year in a theological seminary, was employed a year or two as a missionary in the Bowery, to the saving of souls. Last November he was ordained as a Baptist minister, and, going to Colorado, was made pastor of a Baptist church in Pueblo, where he is giving convincing testimony in the church and out of it. A. L. S.

SOCIAL GATHERINGS.—By the kind permission of Lady Brabazon, a meeting for young women engaged at refreshment rooms and restaurants was held at 83, Lancaster Gate, on January 18. To secure greater numbers it was divided in two parts, afternoon and evening. At the first there was a large attendance of lady workers, representing the Women's Union of the C.E.T.S., the Y.W.C.A., and the G.F.S., who together convened the meeting, but only a few of the class specially invited. At the second about forty-five young women attended. Earnest addresses were given by Mr. W. T. Paton, Miss Needham, Mrs. Anderson, Miss Andrews, and Miss Haslam, while several ladies kindly sang some sacred songs. Each meeting resolved itself into a social gathering; tea and coffee were served, and opportunity given for conversation. All seemed much interested; it is hoped that good was done, and that many more similar meetings will be arranged.

Letters to the Editor.

A PLEA FOR OMNIBUS MEN ON SUNDAYS.

SIR,—My sister was visiting an omnibus driver in one of the London hospitals. After talking to him about the rest and joy it is to know that our sins are forgiven, he turned round, saying, "You see, lady, if I become a Christian I must give up being an omnibus driver, for my masters would never keep me." He never thought for a moment that he could be a Christian and drive an omnibus on Sunday at the same time. Does not this man's decision rest in part, at least, with Christians, who for the gratification of hearing some favourite preacher, help others to break the Sabbath's rest. To see the omnibuses on Sundays full of people with prayer-books is one of the most painful sights in Christian London. This man's decision is, alas! but one out of hundreds of similar cases. There has been a loud outcry lately about the over-work of shop assistants, but omnibus men have sixteen hours a day, and scarcely a Sunday's rest. And why? A. F. SYNGE.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN SWITZERLAND.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to correct a misstatement in your issue of the 10th inst., viz., that in the fifteen Cantons of Switzerland where the death penalty is abrogated the proportion of murder cases has been considerably less than before. So far from this being the case, the truth is, that in three at least of these Cantons the rulers have been compelled, by the majority of voices in its favour, to reinstate the penalty of death for murder, the increase of the crime being truly alarming.

Holland is happy in being able to state that in eight years only seventeen murders have taken place. Here, it is sadly different. I am not able to give statistics, but the figures would considerably exceed that sum. I only write for the sake of truth. J. H.

Switzerland.

[NOTE.—The following is an extract from an article on this subject by "Verax," in The Manchester Weekly Times of Dec. 17:—"One of my correspondents refers to Switzerland as having restored the death penalty from a conviction of its necessity in cases of murder. It is true that by a Federal decree of June 18, 1879, the cantons recovered the right of re-establishing the punishment of death in their respective territories, and that seven of the cantons have exercised this right. They are the cantons of Lucerne, Uri, Schwyz, Unterwalden (Upper), Zoug, Appenzell, Rhodes (Lower), and St. Gall, all of them, with the exception of Lucerne, among the smallest in point of population. But though they have recovered the right to hang their criminals if they please, it appears from the letter written by the Chancellor of the Confederation in February last that down to that date the sentence of death had not been passed in any of the seven cantons. The remaining fifteen cantons, including those of Berne, Zurich, Valais, and Geneva, and more than four-fifths of the population of the Republic, have made no change in the law. The death penalty remains abolished."]

DEAR SIR,—I am glad to see in your issue of this week the protest of Mr. Noel against the article on the above subject of the week preceding. It is a question that needs placing in the full light of Scripture, for a great many Christians seem to entertain a false view of it. With reference to the statistics quoted to justify the abolition of capital punishment, it seems to me they are of little value. The truth in such matters is very difficult to obtain, for the moral effects of such principles as the one in question do not readily lend themselves to arithmetical calculations.

It is my impression that here in France, where the death penalty may be regarded as nil, the public conscience has become so abased with reference to murder, and attempts at murder, that numbers get no more than a passing notice in the newspapers. Yesterday, for instance, I took up a Paris journal, and the first paragraph that met my eye was this: "Only three attempts at murder to record to-day." One was that of a boy of 16, who was threatening the lives of two women, whose screams attracted the sergent-de-ville just in time to save them. The two women were the lad's mother and sister. A little while since I read the case of a man who appeared before the courts for having killed his wife by throwing her out of a window five storeys from the ground. The man put on a very penitent air, said his wife was bad, they quarrelled, he had a moment of délire, and the deed was done before he knew it. He was let off "scot free."

Anyone who reads the Paris papers knows that such cases are of common occurrence, while assassinations and suicides occur almost daily. I am very sceptical of such cases ever finding a place in any statistics, or if they do, of such statistics ever meeting the critical eye of foreigners. But is there not also a considerable amount of sophistry in the religious argument that "G." presents? If, Sir, the Gospel permits the judge to hold out to the condemned criminal a hope that God may have mercy on his soul, is not the unique reason that the satisfaction required by the divine law has already been given by another? God's mercy no more destroys or compromises his justice than Christ destroyed the law. To represent the giving effect to the law against murder with intent and malice aforethought as inconsistent with the idea of Divine mercy, is as wrong as to speak of it as taking vengeance. Nothing, it seems to me, can be more clear or indubitable than the law of Scripture as to the shedding of innocent blood. If men refuse to clear themselves of it, God says He himself will make inquisition.

What "G." states of commuted sentences in France is an instance of the facility with which statistics may mislead. All the executions of the communists are included in the period mentioned, which is therefore quite an abnormal one. Only for murders of the most atrocious description is the death sentence passed in France, and out of that small number only a few are executed. As I have said, the death sentence is practically nil.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE RISEN LIFE is a packet of six chromo cards, with texts, bearing on the subject of the resurrection. They are beautifully got up and published by Mr. J. E. Hawkins, price one shilling.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton are just issuing a shilling edition of their popular Life of President Garfield, which, under the title of FROM LOG CABIN TO WHITE HOUSE, has had such a wonderful success both in England and America.

THE BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE JOURNAL, volume for 1883. Ludgate Arcade, E.C. In addition to general information on the Temperance question, this volume gives a record of work done by women in furthering the movement.

THE STORY OF HIS CONVERSION. By R. H. M. JACKMAN. 4d. Nisbet & Co. This little book gives the account of the author's conversion to God, and is suitable for circulation among business men especially.

SIMPLE WORDS TO ANXIOUS SEEKERS. 2s. per doz. Partridge & Co. A small pamphlet, intended as a supplement to the Inquiry Room; it contains some useful instruction for those who are anxious to be saved.

CHRONICLES of CANNELBY CHASE. By JAMES YEAMES. F. E. Longley. A story designed to illustrate "The Lord's Prayer." Those who are weary in the good work of making the rough places smooth will find much encouragement and help in its perusal.

A pamphlet by Lady HOBART, entitled LONDON'S BITTER CRY HUSHED IN CANADA (4d., J. F. Shaw & Co.), shows how numbers of the poor at present in East London may find a home and work in Canada. Many cases are given of those who have been sent out and are doing well. We recommend all who are interested in emigration to read this pamphlet; they will then perhaps help Lady Hobart to send out many others from the courts and alleys of the overcrowded East-end.

THEODORA, AND OTHER POEMS. By GEORGE F. E. SCOTT. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. The prefatory verses to this little volume prepare the reader for what is to follow—the heart breathings of a young, pure, and tuneful poet. There is, perhaps, nothing new in versification or sentiment, and in the poem which gives the title to the book there are two or three halting lines; but a calm purity pervades the whole, and the five concluding verses are sweet and true. "Maidenhood" is purposeful and good, if not very fine poetry, while "Love and Death" and "El Dorado" are fresh in thought and musical. There is light, graceful fancy in many of the "songs," and it is to be hoped that the love and the life and the hope which have inspired the writer may perfect his muse and lead him on to greater things.

JOURNAL OF MERCIES. Partridge & Co. Miss M. Sandeberg issues for the sixth time her annual register for the insertion of daily mercies received. The idea is excellent, and the arrangement good.

THE MINISTER'S CROWN. Nisbet & Co. A small volume on the subject of winning souls, with some account of the doctrine of the Second Advent of Christ. A book likely to stimulate to active service.

THE SHEPHERD OF SALISBURY PLAIN. By Mrs. HANNAH MORE. Religious Tract Society. The well-known story of this good shepherd is here published with two others, viz., "'Tis all for the Best" and "The Happy Waterman." Though the two latter have not the historic fame of the former, they are well written, and teach important lessons.

LITTLE KING DAVIE. By Miss HELLIS. 1s. Jarrold & Sons. The story of a little crossing-sweeper, that will make many boys thankful they are not in the same position. Davie's accident, hospital experiences, conversion, and subsequent life are of thrilling though somewhat painful interest.

THE MONTHLY REVIEW AND YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN JOURNAL takes the place of the "Monthly Notes" as the organ of the Young Men's Christian Associations. The editor is Mr. Cameron Churchill, and it is published from Exeter Hall. This first number has several useful and interesting articles in it, besides notes of work by provincial Associations.

FRIENDLY GREETINGS (Religious Tract Society) is a volume for general reading, and is very suitable for placing in hospitals, workhouses, libraries, and the cottages of our land. It contains numerous illustrations, well got up, while the articles are pointed and lively. The "Friendly Greeting" packets of twelve numbers can be had for sixpence; they will answer the purpose of house to house magazine distribution.

OUR SCEPTRED ISLE, AND ITS WORLD-WIDE EMPIRE. By ALEXANDER MACDONALD. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. The subject of colonisation is dealt with in this able volume from a variety of standpoints. The author brings much practical acquaintance to bear upon his theme, having travelled long in various parts of the world, and carefully studied the question of which he treats. Intending emigrants and all interested in emigration will find much useful information and guidance in this really readable and instructive treatise.

PRESENT DAY TRACTS: ERNEST RENAN AND HIS CRITICISM OF CHRIST. By Rev. W. G. ELMSLIE. THE RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS OF THE SUBLIME AND BEAUTIFUL IN NATURE. By Rev. CANON RAWLINSON. Religious Tract Society. 4d. each. The first of these tracts does excellent service. It traces M. Renan's fantastical scepticism to his training, his false ideas of history, and his literary vanity. It would be well if the personal idiosyncracies of other noted sceptics were thus handled in an equally judicial and incisive manner. The second tract is a prose poem of exceeding beauty. Apart from its immediate object, it deserves to be read by all persons. It is not only an impressive testimony to the witness which Nature bears to the Creator, but is a little treatise on the beautiful in Nature, which meets a real need, and which may be turned to again and again by all Christian people. The admirable series of "Present Day Tracts" does not, we think, contain any more deserving of circulation than these two.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Dr. BERNHARD WEISS. Vol. ii. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. A critic who should glance at this volume hastily and superficially, would be almost sure to err on the side of censure or that of strong commendation. There are passages that are rash and unwarranted, and there is often a tone of freedom in dealing with the Gospels which is not customary with orthodox and evangelical English theologians. On the other hand, this second volume of the "Life of Christ" is of the utmost value, and will be welcomed by those who possess the first. As a book to be consulted by thorough students of the Great Biography it is all but indispensable. In such sections as that on the relation of Christ towards Old Testament law, there is a singular keenness of spiritual insight and discernment. As a reply, moreover, to the school of Strauss it is most valuable; there are passages on the Lord's miracles, and his first conflicts with Jewish authorities, which are very profound in sympathy, and will come to some readers as a revelation. We may add that the translation seems to us an improvement on that of the first volume. It less follows a German mould of construction, and is more English.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing given recently at a ten days' Mission in Christchurch district, Birmingham.——For much blessing at the meeting in Newton Stewart, N.B., conducted by F. E. Marsh.

PRAYER.—For a series of meetings at Whitborn, N.B., by Mr. F. E. Marsh, from Jan. 27 to Feb. 15.—For a Mission being held at North Berstead, and one to be commenced on Feb. 6 at St. Pancras, Chichester.——For a Mission to be held at Heage, near Belper, by Major Graves.——For an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Campsie, by Glasgow.——For a week's special services at Farnborough, commencing Jan. 24.——For special evangelistic services in Palace-road Congregational Chapel, Kirkwall, Jan. 20 to Feb. 4.——For Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Scroggie, bereaved of their little daughter on the 15th inst.

Mission Appeals.

HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, SOHO-SQUARE, LONDON, W.—This institution is in urgent need of £1500 to complete alterations, by which the out-patient will be separated from the in-patient department, and to add the adjacent house in Batemans-buildings to the hospital.

CONVALESCENT HOME, RAMSGATE.—During last summer Miss Hosking was enabled to receive forty-six patients into her Home. She has decided to build a new wing, and will be glad of help for the same. Over 1000 have been benefited by this place of rest, mostly governesses and teachers.

COLLINGWOOD-STREET MISSION, NEW CUT.—Messrs. T. and G. YOUNG, 16, Queen-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E., would be glad of help towards giving free teas to the poor children and parents in this district. The Gospel is preached to them on such occasions. Friends are invited to visit the Mission.

WALDENSIAN MISSIONS IN ITALY.—Signor PROCHET appeals for pecuniary help towards meeting a deficit of £15 0, caused by a change in the value of Italian paper money. He would be glad of sympathy from British Christians. Contributions may be sent to Major FROBISHER, 118, Pall Mall, London, S.W.

SOUTHWARK.—Rev. Burman Cassin and his staff are endeavouring in various ways to help the poor of the parish to help themselves by sewing-classes, mothers' meetings, Temperance Societies, &c. These workers are also active in seeking the spiritual good of the people.

SOCIAL PURITY.—On Thursday evening last, under the presidency of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, a large assembly of men only in the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, listened to Mr. Henry Varley's lecture on "Certain Forms of Temptation." We wish that many ministers and persons of influence had been present to hear and realise how a subject of this kind can be dealt with boldly, plainly, and faithfully, without offending the highest sensibility. It will be well for society and for the Church when ministers will follow Mr. Varley's example, and use the pulpit in giving warning on this great department of "Temperance" (self-control), and in denunciation of sins which are sapping the vitals of the community. Mr. Varley had a sympathetic and solemnised audience, and it was impossible to restrain the bursts of applause which now and again greeted his exhortations to purity, and his withering rebukes of the cruel and debasing sin which drags down so many young women to a life of shame and an early grave.

Forthcoming Meetings.

MR. W. FORBES, Gospel Temperance Evangelist, since returning from America, has given addresses at Clapham, Lewisham, Vauxhall, and Maidstone.

FINSBURY PARK.—A committee of ladies and gentlemen connected with New Court Chapel, Finsbury-park, have visited the district for the purpose of ascertaining whether there were any not in the habit of attending any place of worship. About 2500 houses have been visited, and a cordial invitation was given to a series of Mission Services being held this week, when addresses are to be given by Dr. Thain Davidson, Revs. J. R. Wood, R. Roberts, the pastor, Rev. J. Ossian Davis, and others.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Annual Devotional Meeting Council Chamber,
Exeter Hall.

The Committee have arranged to hold the ANNUAL DEVOTIONAL MEETING on TUESDAY, the 29th inst., in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, Strand, at 7 o'clock.

FRANCIS A. BEVAN, ESQ., has kindly consented to preside, and W. HAIGH MILLER, ESQ., will give an Address.

There are annually at least 1,450 SERVICES held for PREACHING OF THE GOSPEL in the Homes and Open-All-Night Refuge, also upwards of 800 Classes conducted chiefly by ladies in the respective Homes.

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN are most cordially invited. Others who cannot be personally present at the Meeting, but who are interested in this MISSION OF MERCY, are asked to unite in prayer that the work of God on behalf of the Friendless and Fallen may be more than ever blessed in WINNING SOULS TO CHRIST.

WE STILL NEED YOUR HELP.

LATYMER ROAD MISSION.

DEAR FRIENDS,—We earnestly ask for Funds to pay the balance of what is owing for the New Building. We need Furniture for three Class-rooms which are finished, but cannot be used because they are empty. The Boys' Shelter, the Girls' Shelter, the Sunday Schools, and the Night Schools are crowded. Soup Kitchen is now open. Visitors are always welcome. The Mission is situated in one of the poorest parts of London. We gratefully acknowledge £25 from A. P., for Furniture, and 5s. from A. F. Subscriptions may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of "THE CHRISTIAN," or to

SOUL-WINNING

QUALIFICATIONS FOR IT.

AN ADDRESS BY MAJOR WHITTLE.

"Any one who reads the New Testament, especially the Acts of the Apostles, must see that the great reason for the Church existing on the earth is—to win souls. When Churches get to the point that they are not winning souls—when souls are not being born again—they get to the point mentioned in the third chapter of Revelation, 'I will spue thee out of my mouth.'"—EXTRACT.

CONSUMPTION: ITS CURE.

BY AN ENTIRELY NEW TREATMENT.

BY EDWIN W. ALABONE, M.D., M.R.C.S. Eng., F.R.M.S., Lynton House, Highbury Quadrant, London, N.

Dr. Baxter, in writing of this treatment, states: "Cases have come under my immediate notice which have been given up as incurable by eminent medical authorities, and which were cured by adopting Dr. Alabone's treatment."

Dr. Parker writes: "The fact is open to the observation of the world that a patient given up as incurable is now well, and the wonder of all who knew her in her abandoned condition."

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D. L. Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."
The Methodist.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

AND ALL

OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

Containing ONE HUNDRED and THIRTY-THREE SELECTED CASES. May be had from ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER-ROW, E.C., or from Mr. Congreve (the Author), COOMBE LODGE, PECKHAM, S.E.

NINTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of MISS F. C., of CAMBERWELL.

[From the Christian Globe of December 27.]

"THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION."

"That this terrible malady, so constantly declared to be incurable by medical men of all grades, is amenable to judicious treatment, is a fact to be hailed with joy and gratitude by thousands. The subject is one of intense interest, for there is scarcely a person but has, or has had, some friend or relative suffering from this insidious disease.

"The world is much indebted to Mr. G. T. CONGREVE for his discovery of a successful treatment of Consumption. Well authenticated cases of cure continue to appear weekly in this and other journals. We believe them to be perfectly reliable

"We are pleased to call attention to a case which has come under our own personal knowledge. The young lady referred to in the following account was sent to Mr. C. by the Rev. C. H Spurgeon, many of whose students and members have been benefited by Mr. Congreve's treatment.

"When Miss F. C. visited Mr. Congreve she had been ill for two years, during which time Consumption had been stealing upon her. The symptoms commenced with pain in the upper lobe of the right lung, followed by laborious breathing, rapid loss of flesh and strength, cough hard, expectoration difficult. On examination, 'the apex of right lung diseased.' The patient was under treatment for eleven months, during which time she paid nearly monthly visits to Coombe Lodge, and the examinations from time to time gave evidence of gradual and steady improvement. There were certain symptoms of nervous debility, hysteria, and occasional congestion, that required some special treatment, in addition to Mr. Congreve's usual remedies, but, 'in about twelve months she became thoroughly well.' In process of time, this patient married, and is now the mother of a fine, healthy boy. Her husband, in a letter to Mr. C., brimful of kindly expressions of gratitude, and which is dated November 11, 1883 says:—

"'You will remember the case of Miss F. C., "who was in a sad state of consumption," and who is now my wife. You may remember her case caused me deep anxiety. You have been so thoroughly successful in restoring her to health, by God's blessing, we consider it our duty to write you and thank you for your great kindness to her, &c., &c.—J. CHAPMAN, 41, Leipsic-road, Camberwell.'

"The reader of this who has any interest in the matter should obtain Mr. Congreve's book (the largest edition in cloth, for 15 stamps), which may be had, post free from his professional residence, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E.

"With such evidence as this book affords, and that which is weekly brought before the public, none need despair."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

DR. KIRTON'S BIOGRAPHY OF WESLEY

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Limp Cloth, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

John Wesley:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

BY

JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D.,

Author of "Happy Homes, and How to make Them."

"CHRISTIAN LEADER" of January 17 says:—

"The spirit of a great reformer's life has seldom been presented in a form at once so brief and lively as we find in 'John Wesley, his Life and Times,' by John W. Kirton, LL.D. There is no disproportion in the memoir; it portrays Wesley in all the aspects of a character that was many-sided. Every page sparkles with edifying anecdote. The integrity, and also the quiet humour, of the writer are well illustrated in the chapter on Wesley as a husband. The book costs only a sixpence, and ought to have a sale of many thousands. A better bit of biographical work in the same compass and at so moderate a price we have seldom, if ever, seen."

"CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH" of January 24 says:—

"This 'Life of Wesley' is precisely what it is intended to be—an interesting, condensed account of one of England's most popular men, adapted to popular use. Dr. Kirton has the happy faculty of bringing his facts within the comprehension of the common people; and that is an indispensable thing in a work for popular use. Wesley was a man who belonged to the people, and Dr. Kirton has taken his life out of the educated man's library, and given it to the cottage and workshop."

In Tinted Covers, 4d.; Cloth Limp, 6d.

THE ENQUIRY ROOM. Hints for Dealing with the Anxious.

By GEORGE SOLTAU.

These "HINTS" were given in the form of an Address to the Christian Workers who undertook to converse with and assist the Enquirers, in connection with the meetings of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. They are now published in the present form, in the hope that they may be found useful in other spheres of evangelistic work.

"A guide of this sort was greatly needed; and even ministers, as well as lay-workers, may profit by its perusal. The 'Hints' are not the compilation of a mere bookmaker, but the fruit of the personal experience of a man who knows his Bible, and who is also conversant with human nature; and in whom sobriety of judgment and fervour of spirit are finely blended."—Christian Leader.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST.

Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Gilchrist preaches a full Gospel. The fulness of Christ for every need of fallen humanity is set forth in a clear and convincing and attractive manner."
Christian World.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."
Sword and Trowel.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.

Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word 'seven' in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM.

UPON examining the group of diseases called nervous, we find the symptoms presented are strange and various, sometimes strongly marked and distracting, sometimes obscure and distressing, always irritating. There may be weakness of brain-function, derangement of the circulatory, muscular, and digestive systems, and, in their train, headache, languor, debility, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, nervous restlessness, constipation, irritability, and depression of spirits. All that is required is the natural impetus which shall set the various functions in harmonious operation, and convert the symptoms of disease into the healthful glow of normal action; and it is in imparting this vivifying element that Magnetism has been so singularly successful. To the system enervated by excess, to the constitution enfeebled by years of suffering, or exhausted by incessant exertion, business, or family care, Odo-Magnetic treatment will prove most valuable, arousing and stimulating dormant functional energy, and restoring to the nerves a healthy tone.

When it is fully known that Magnetic currents are as healthful as pure air, and as indispensable to the life of man; that they are not confined or local forces, but form a general principle, pervading all material things; when it is understood that man himself is truly Magnetic, and is vigorous only so long as the currents within him are efficient and equalised, then the employment of this powerful agent in the cure of disease will become general. A little further consideration of its marvellous effects will show the inquirer that there is no influence in all the known resources of Nature more powerful, more beneficial, or more strangely adapted to human wants; and will convince the sufferer that, of all remedial agents, it is the one which his condition requires.

From Mrs. PICKARD, Milner-road, Hillsborough, Sheffield.

"January 15, 1884.

"It affords me great pleasure to inform you of the great benefit I have derived from the use of the Nerve Invigorator you prescribed last August, and which I have constantly worn ever since. My health is better than it has been for many years past; I never expected to have been so well, and my friends are remarking upon the visible improvement. I tell them I owe it all, under God's blessing, to your treatment. Both Mr. Pickard and myself are constantly recommending the remedy to all our suffering friends; indeed, we could not speak too highly of it. Many thanks for the pamphlets sent; I shall be glad of a few more, particularly on 'Worry: its Dangers and Remedy,' as I know of a case similar to my own in which I am anxious that the sufferer should try your treatment, as I feel sure it would be of benefit."

Mr. Garratt has, in various papers, endeavoured to convey an intelligent idea of what his method of treatment is calculated to effect. Many who are needing such a remedy would certainly confide themselves to his treatment if they were convinced that his assertions could be relied upon. The names of 850 persons, whose veracity no one will venture to question, and who can testify in similar terms to the above, will be forwarded if desired.

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded, and the required treatment suggested, gratuitously, by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL?

IN answer to this question, we have received sixty-four replies, greatly varying in length, in clearness, and in accuracy. We give the four subjoined letters, which may fairly represent the principal thoughts expressed in the remainder. Of the rest, one condenses the Gospel into the one word "Love." Another amplifies this into "God loves me." Another epitomises thus—"God is light: God is love." Several simply quote John iii. 16, 1 Cor. xv. 1—4, or other texts embodying the like precious truths. Some define the Gospel in the words of Scripture, or state it in their own words; but add that they themselves found salvation from some other text or aspect of the Gospel.

The great majority make Christ crucified the key-note, but more than one omits altogether the blood of his cross.

One of our friends says that there are three Gospels: (1) The Gospel of the kingdom, preached by our Lord when on earth. (2) The Gospel of the grace of God, preached by the Apostles after his death and resurrection. (3) The everlasting Gospel which is to be preached by an angel.

Another makes a similar distinction, except that he is inclined to regard the Gospel of the kingdom as future, and to identify with it the everlasting Gospel, which he is sure is quite different from the Gospel of the grace of God.

In reply to the former of these we remark that, whereas Paul tells the Ephesian elders he has received of the Lord Jesus a ministry to testify the Gospel of the grace of God, he says in the next verse that he has gone among them preaching the kingdom of God: thus clearly identifying the Gospel of the grace of God with the kingdom of God.

In reply to the latter, we would ask, How can anything be a Gospel—good tidings—to a sinful world, which does not proceed from the grace of God?

For ourselves, we are persuaded that the definition in the communication from Mr. R. Heath, that the Gospel is the Declaration of the Kingdom of God, is the most comprehensive and exhaustive that can be given.

The Good Tidings of the Kingdom of God we believe to include every aspect of the Gospel, whether it be the promise implied in the denunciation upon the serpent in the Garden of Eden; the prophecy by Moses of another prophet like unto himself; that of Isaiah of a Child born, a Son given; or any other Old Testament promise. Or again, whether it be the Gospel of God; the Gospel of Christ; the Gospel of the grace of God; the Gospel of our salvation; preaching the Word; preaching Christ; preaching Jesus; the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God; the sufferings of Christ, and the glories which should follow; the Everlasting Gospel; or any other form of words contained in the New Testament.

In past days our fathers may sometimes have magnified God's Sovereignty above his Fatherhood; one of the most widespread and subtle errors of this time is to magnify his Fatherhood at the expense of his Sovereignty. But the Gospel of the Kingdom, and that alone, puts these, as well as every other relationship of God to man, in its right place, for He has bidden all who come to Him, "Fear not, little flock: it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom;" and has promised that in the coming day the righteous shall "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

REPLIES.

The glad tidings of great joy that God, in love to man, has sent his Son Jesus Christ to reveal Him as the Father, and by his death for sin to declare and satisfy God's righteousness, so that in resurrection He might give pardon, life eternal, and power over sin to all who believe the message and trust Him. G. F. T.

The Gospel is very brief. The Gospel is God's glad tidings to sinners as such. Its announcement is salvation full, free, present, and to come. It promises, in the name of Him who cannot lie, immediate deliverance from the guilt and dominion of sin, and ultimately from its very being, on the above ground of Christ's meritorious obedience unto death. Its conditions to the reception of this mercy are heart-faith in the Lord Jesus as Saviour, and confession of his name as Lord, to the glory of the Father, who raised Him from the dead. Its fruit is holiness, its end everlasting life. F. H. W.

164, Westbourne-terrace, Hyde-park, W.

DEAR SIR,—The word "Gospel," as we all know, means "glad tidings," and St. Paul further defines the Gospel by calling it the glad tidings of the grace of God.

And, to state the matter more fully, we may say that the Gospel is the glad tidings of what God has done, what He is doing, and what He has promised yet to do for the salvation of men.

(1) What has God already done for the display of his grace?

"The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world" (1 John iv 14). He laid upon Him the iniquity of us all (Is. liii. 6). He raised Him from the grave, and placed Him at his own right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour (Acts v. 31). He has sent the Holy Spirit to carry on his work of grace until Christ comes again (Heb. ii. 4).

The Son of God came from heaven to fulfil the work which his Father gave him to do (John xvii. 4). He was made man for our sakes (John i. 14), and bore the curse due to our transgressions in his own body on the Cross (Gal. iii. 13; 1 Pet. ii. 24). He rose again from the grave to be our living Saviour, and ascended to heaven to be the Mediator and Advocate of all who come to the Father by Him (Rom. v. 10, viii. 34).

The Holy Spirit has come to carry on the work of deliverance (John xvi. 7—15). He has spoken to us by the prophets and apostles, and given us the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation, through faith in Jesus Christ (2 Pet. i. 21).

(2) What is God now doing for the salvation of men? He is raising men from the death of sin to the life of righteousness (Eph. ii. 4—6). He is leading them to Jesus Christ in repentance and faith (John vi. 37, 44, 45). Jesus Christ is receiving and interceding for all who come to the Father by him (Rom. x. 12, 13; Heb. vii. 25). The Father freely forgives all who repent and believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ (Acts ii. 38, x. 43). He makes them his adopted children (Gal. v. 26). He puts in them his Holy Spirit (Gal. iv. 6). He takes them under his fatherly protection and supplies all their need (2 Cor. vi. 17, 18; Phil. iv. 19). Jesus acts towards them the part of their Great High Priest. He presents to the Father their offerings of praise and service (Heb. viii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 5). He sits upon his throne of grace to receive their petitions and to send them help in every time of need (Heb. iv. 15, 16). The Holy Spirit awakens spiritual life in the dead soul, and sustains it when awakened (John iii. 8; Rom. viii. 9, 10). He enlightens the minds of the children of God (Eph. i. 17, 18), purifies their hearts and lives (2 Cor. iii. 18; Gal. v. 22, 23), and comforts them with the hope of glory (Rom. xv. 13).

(3) What has God promised yet to do for the salvation of his people?

He will never leave them nor forsake them (Heb. xiii. 5). He will keep them from Satan's power, and suffer no one to pluck them from his hand (John x. 27—30; Rom. viii. 38, 39). He will finish in them the work of sanctification which He has begun. (Phil. i. 6; Eph. v. 25—27.) He will take their spirits to Himself when they die (2 Cor. v. 6—8). Christ will come again and raise the dead bodies of his departed saints, and change the bodies of his living saints into the likeness of his glorious body (1 Cor. xv. 51—54). He will gather together all his saints, and take them to share with Him the eternal glory of his Kingdom (John xiv. 3; Matt. xxv. 34). HORACE NOEL.

Woking.

DEAR SIR,—The Gospel is the declaration of the Kingdom of God (Matt. iv. 23; Luke iv. 43). This declaration contains necessarily a proclamation of its nature and principles. In his first proclamation Jesus declared its five points: good tidings to the poor, release to the captives, recovery of sight to the blind, setting at liberty them that are bruised, proclaiming the acceptable year of the Lord.

While the deepest meaning of these points must be a spiritual one, we shall soon lose the reality and power of that meaning, if we forget that the Kingdom of God is all-embracing and in its first and primary stage affects this earth and all visible things.

Jesus next proclaimed the laws of the Kingdom (Matt. v, vi., vii.; Luke vi. 20—47). Then He unfolded in his parables its spirit, and manifested in his miracles its power, and having declared Himself its anointed King, set forth in his own person a perfect example of its character, its principles, its spirit, and its power.

Finally, He revealed the secret which lies at the heart of the Kingdom and ensures its final triumph—life through death, conquest through suffering and defeat. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone: but if it die it beareth much fruit" (John xii. 24). "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me" (John xii. 32).

We are to-day in the same position with regard to the message, only instead of the manifestation of the spirit, principles, and power of the Kingdom of God appearing in one man, the Christ, it has to be manifested by a society, the Church. Before He quitted his disciples, Jesus said to them, "Peace be unto you: as the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whose soever sins ye forgive, they are forgiven unto them; whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained" (John xx. 21—23). And the full meaning of these words is given in John xvii. 20—26, from which we learn that those who believe in Jesus are to be so completely identified with Him, and through Him with his Father, that they are to be as He was—the temple of the Holy Ghost on earth, the continuance of the Divine manifestation and the continuers of the work of Christ.

Thus, part of the Gospel of the Kingdom of God is the actual manifestation of the Kingdom in the life of the Church. It has not only to proclaim the Kingdom, but actually to realise it in the eyes of men, and the Church has to manifest, as Jesus, the same life of absolute poverty, and complete renunciation of all worldly aims and objects, the same identification of itself with mankind, so that all the miseries, sufferings, errors, sins of men, become its own. It has, like its King and its example, to claim the title Son of Man, and taking all the load of men's sins and sorrows on to itself to walk straight to the cross.

When it does this, the Church will understand those wonderful words in which the Apostle Paul sums up his idea of the Gospel (2 Cor. v. 18, vi. 10). R. HEATH.

For the Young.

THE NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

I SHOULD like to tell the young readers of The Christian a true story of a little boy and girl who live near me in a town in Scotland.

Lizzie is seven and Alick four years of age. Both of them have fair hair and blue eyes, and are pretty children; but I think you would be sorry to see what thin poor frocks they are wearing in this cold winter weather, and they have not always enough to eat. Their father is a painter by trade, he has been very ill, and is now only able to earn small wages, so that with a wife and four children to keep, you may be sure there is not much money to spare. The youngest child is a tiny baby four weeks old. This little one is said to be an extra good baby, for she sleeps nearly all day as well as all night, and scarcely gives the other children a chance of seeing her eyes, to find out whether they are blue like their own.

Though living in a small house in a back street, and sometimes with very little food in the cupboard, Lizzie, Alick, and the third child, little Donald, are generally happy children, and play merrily together. Their parents love them dearly, and best of all are teaching them to love the Saviour who is the Friend of little children. When bed-time comes, the father reads to them out of the big-print Bible, and then they kneel in prayer, and they have learned to look for God's answers to their prayers. This is what my story is about.

On New Year's morning, after the usual breakfast of a little porridge and milk, Lizzie and Alick went out to play with their companions who live in the same street. The wind was bitterly cold and our two little friends were shivering before they had been out many minutes. A few minutes afterwards they had begun to cry; but this was not by reason of the cold. It was because they found their companions so happy and pleased with New Year's gifts, oranges, sweeties, and toys. It is a great custom with us in Scotland to give presents on New Year's day, and the children even of working people always come in for a good share when their parents can afford it. However, poor little Lizzie and her brother had no presents this morning, when money was so scarce in the house. Their mother, who tried never to go into debt, dared not spend a penny not really necessary for food.

The children, crying from disappointment, came back to the house to pour out their sorrows at their mother's knee, and I think she also had to wipe away a tear. But then a bright thought struck her. "Children," she said, "the good Lord knows all about it, kneel down and ask Him to send you some money for presents." They did so in simple words; then kissing mother, and that very sleepy baby too, they ran out again much comforted. The street they lived in was a quiet one, and not many strangers entered it; but just as Lizzie and Alick went out of their door, an old man was walking slowly, as if in search of someone. He noticed Lizzie, and beckoned her to come and speak to him. "Here, lassie," he said, "do you ken where old Mistress McPhail lives?" "Yes, I ken," she answered, though trembling a little at being spoken to, for she was a timid child, "she lives in a wee room at the top of yon house round the corner." "Then tak' me to the room, like a good lass, and save my old legs going up the wrong stair." Lizzie hesitated a moment, but quickly made up her mind to do what she was asked, for to show kindness to the aged was a good lesson she had been taught.

Taking little Alick by the hand, Lizzie led the way, and in walking down the street she and the old man became quite friendly, ending by Lizzie telling him how they had just been praying to God to send them money for presents, because it was New Year's Day. "I'm hoping He'll send a little angel with it," she added.

When they reached the top of the stair, Lizzie pointed out which door was Mrs. McPhail's room. The old man, who was rather out of breath, signed to her to wait a minute: then fumbling in an old leather purse, he produced a bright shilling, which he handed to Lizzie. "Tak this, child. I can afford it, though I am no a rich man, and certainly I'm no a little angel!" Before Lizzie could recover from her surprise at the sight of the silver coin, and thank the old man, the door of Mrs. McPhail's room was opened and he had been admitted. The children scampered off home without losing time, you may be sure, and it was quickly agreed that father should go with them to the shop to help them make their purchases. That shilling bought a wonderful store of oranges and sweeties, and to crown the feast, a currant loaf. All these they brought home in triumph, and then, before enjoying the good things, they joined in thanking the Lord, who had so quickly answered their prayer, and in his own way given them their desire. "Perhaps the old man will be an angel some day, when he dies," said Lizzie, "for he must be a good man to have spared us a whole shilling."

I am glad to tell you that New Year's Day has been the beginning of brighter days for the family, as the father's health is improving, and he can get more work to do. A lady has given him some warm clothing, of which he stood much in need, and Lizzie is to possess a new frock in which to attend school. Now, dear boys and girls who may read this story, think how many little ones there are in our midst who have real wants and few pleasures. Try in all the ways you can to help them and make them happy, and may you all be what I am sure my little friends Lizzie and Alick are—children of the heavenly kingdom.

Welcome Home, Cardiff.

DEAR SIR,—The work at the Welcome Home prospers and increases. The house is nearly always full, and the men who stay with us seem fully to appreciate the kindness shown them. We have received men of many different nationalities, and all testify to the value of a clean quiet home.

A young Russian sailor, who seems very grateful, regrets that in his own country the people are "so dark." He wishes he could translate for them all the nice things he reads in English, but, he says, he does not know enough for the purpose; he has made an attempt, however, to translate hymn 386 from Sacred Songs and Solos. Spaniards, French, and others continue to attend in the evenings, and their attention and sometimes eagerness for the truth are very encouraging. A young Spaniard writes: "I feel obliged to write and thank you for all your kindness. . . . . Through you my heart has been renewed, and I have been saved from my evil vices. I was lost and you guided me to the right path."

We are very grateful to friends who have sent us text-cards, tracts, and periodicals. Any contributions of good literature will be most acceptable, as also hymn-books and Testaments.—Yours truly, ELIZABETH LAWRENCE.

A Friend Indeed.

A REST I sought, O Lord,
A rest from care and sin,
Within Thyself I found
That rest, and entered in;
It proved a rest complete to be,
For Thou, my Saviour, gav'st it me.

A Peace I sought, a calm,
Which nought should ruffle here;
And o'er my weary life
Came the words soft and clear:
"My peace to troubled ones I give,
My tired child, that peace receive."

A Home I sought, I longed
For some kind shelter, where I might forever be
Free from mistrustful fear;
I found it on my Saviour's breast,
No other Home so sweet a rest.

My all I found in Thee,
My Rest, my Peace, my Home,
When to Thyself I turned,
At thy sweet welcome, "Come,"
O Lord, no dearer friend I need,
For Thou hast proved a Friend indeed.

MARY SPICER.

Victoria Philosophical Institute.

A LARGE meeting was held on Monday, Jan. 21, at the above Institute, 7, Adelphi-terrace—a society consisting of home, colonial, and foreign members, founded to investigate all scientific questions, especially any said to militate against the truth of the Bible. The paper of the evening was read by Sir Edmund Beckett, Bart., Queen's Counsel. In it he, as a scientific man, described, in popular language, the laws of nature, reviewing the steps in the progress of scientific research recently made in various countries, and showing how they bore on the question, "Is all creation, in its perfect arrangement, its beauty and grandeur, self-evolved, as some assert; or are we not compelled, after patient investigation of its many departments, to confess that there is something beyond, which we are forced to recognise, and which evidences the existence of one Great, all-controlling, wise Mind?" An interesting discussion ensued.

A considerable number of home and foreign applications to join the Institute were announced, raising its total strength to considerably over a thousand, and it was stated that in addition to the very large number of foreign and colonial libraries purchasing its transactions, it now exchanged them with leading London learned societies, whose members—whether in the ranks of the Institute or not—rendered aid in its work.

A Y.M.C.A. has recently been established at Kilmarnock, N.B.

THE LATE KESHUB CHUNDER SEN.—In The New York Independent Rev. Joseph Cook thus writes about this Indian reformer:—"No Asiatic interested me as much as did Keshub Chunder Sen. I came near enough to him to understand something of his nature, his environment, his struggles, his triumphs, his defeats, his hopes. On no one born in India did I build more expectation than on him, as to the future of reform among the educated circles of Hindustan. How noble he was; how serious; how worthy of spiritual leadership; how intense; how eloquent; how prayerful! I saw in his soul the Oriental type, and was taught much by it, and had hoped to be taught more. The news from the Ganges that Keshub Chunder Sen is dead, overwhelms me with a more profound sense of personal bereavement than I can now remember to have felt before at the departure of any public man. A most interesting and noble career ended at an age of less than forty-six. O, my brother, my brother, how lonely the world seems without thee! . . . The Brahmo Creed is not yet fixed. It is likely to crystallise much about the final opinions of Keshub Chunder Sen. Would that Providence had led him to a deeper knowledge of Christianity before snatching him from the world! Mere Theism, in the form in which he held it, cannot save India. Christianity can."

MR. MOODY AND MR. RAINSFORD.

AN immense concourse of people waited for the second meeting in Lavender-hill Hall, Clapham, on Monday evening, last week, to hear the following dialogue between the clergyman and the evangelist. The latter had been preaching from the text: "There was no room for them in the inn."

MR. MOODY.—As a good many people were helped when I asked some questions of Mr. Rainsford at Wandsworth, about how to become a Christian, I am going to ask him a few more to-night. Mr. Rainsford, how can anyone make room in their heart for Christ?

MR. RAINSFORD.—First, do we really want Christ to be in our hearts? If we do, the best thing will be to ask Him to come and make room for Himself. He will surely come and do so. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." "Without Me ye can do nothing."

MR. M.—Will Christ crowd out the world if He comes in?

MR. R.—He spoke a parable to that effect. "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace [the poor sinner's heart] his goods are in peace. But when a stronger than he shall come upon him and overcome him, He taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted [unbelief, false views of God, worldliness, and love of sin], and divideth the spoil." The devil keeps the heart because Christ desires it for his throne, until Christ drives him out.

MR. M.—What is the meaning of the promise, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out?"

MR. R.—I think we often put the emphasis upon the wrong word. People are troubled about how they are going to COME, when they should put the emphasis on HIM to whom they are coming. "Him that cometh unto ME I will in no wise cast out," no matter how he may come. I remember hearing this incident at an after-meeting. A gentleman was speaking to an anxious inquirer, telling him to come to Christ, to trust in Christ; but the man seemed to get no comfort. He said that was just where he found his difficulty. By and by, another friend came and spoke to the anxious one. All he said was: "Come to CHRIST; trust in CHRIST." The man saw it in a minute. He went and told the other gentleman, "I see the way of salvation now." "Tell me," said he, "what did that man say to you?" "Well, he told me to trust in Christ." "That is what I told you." "Nay, you bade me trust in Christ and come to Christ; he bade me trust in Christ and come to Christ." That made all the difference.

MR. M.—What does Christ mean by the words "in no wise?"

MR. R.—It means that if the sins of all the sinners on earth and all the devils in hell were upon your soul, He will not refuse you. Not even in the range of God's omniscience is there a reason why He would refuse any poor sinner who comes to Christ for pardon.

MR. M.—What is the salvation He comes to proclaim and to bestow?

MR. R.—To deliver you out of the power of darkness and from the bottomless pit, and set you upon the throne of glory. It is salvation from death and hell, and curse and ruin; but that is only the half of it. It is salvation to God, and light and glory, and honour and immortality, and from earth to heaven.

MR. M.—If the friends here do not come and get this salvation, what will be the true reason?

MR. R.—Either they are fond of some sin which they do not intend to give up, or they do not believe they are in a lost condition, and under the curse of God, and therefore do not feel their need of Him who "came to seek and to save that which was lost." Or they do not believe God's promises. I have sometimes asked a man, "Good friend, are you saved?" "Well, no, I am not saved." "Are you lost?" "Oh, God forbid! I am not lost." "Where are you then, if you are neither saved nor lost?" May God wake us up to the fact that we are all in one state or the other.

MR. M.—What if any of them should fall into sin after they have come to Christ?

MR. R.—God has provided for the sins of his people, committed after they come to Christ, as surely as for their sins committed before they came to Him. "Christ ever liveth to make intercession for all that come unto God by Him." "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us; if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. . . . For if any man sin we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And He is the propitiation for our sins." He will take care of our sinful, tried, and tempted selves if we trust ourselves to Him.

MR. M.—Is it not said that if we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins"?

MR. R.—Yes. Paul wrote it in his Epistle to the Hebrews. Some of them were trifling with the blood of Christ, and reverting to the types and shadows of the Levitical Law, and trusting to a fulfilled ritual for salvation. He is not referring to ordinary acts of sin. By sinning wilfully he means, as he explains it, a "treading under foot the Son of God," and a total and final apostatising from Christ. Those who reject or neglect Him will find no other sacrifice for sin remaining before Christ came. The Jewish ceremonies were shadows of the good things to come, but Christ was the substance of them. But now that He has come to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, there is no other sacrifice for sin remaining for those who reject Him. God will send no other Saviour, and no further atonement; no second "fountain shall be opened for sin and uncleanness." There remains, therefore, nothing for the rejector of salvation by Christ but "a fearful looking for of judgment."

MR. M.—There are some who say they do not know that they have got the right kind of faith.

MR. R.—God does not ask us if we have the right kind of faith. He tells us the right thing to believe, and the right faith is to believe the right thing, even what God has told us and promised us. If I told you, Mr. Moody, that I had found a hymn-book last night you would believe me, would you not? (MR. MOODY: Yes.) Suppose I said it was the valuable one you lost the other night, you would believe me also just the same. There is no difference in the kind of faith; the difference is in the thing believed. When the Son of God tells me that He died for sinners, that is a fact for my faith to lay hold of; the faith itself is not the thing to be considered. I do not look at my hand, when I take a gift, and wonder what sort of a hand it is. I look at the gift.

MR. M.—What about those people who say their hearts are so hard, and they have no love to Christ?

MR. R.—Of course they are hard and cold. No man loves Christ till he believes that Christ loves him. "We love Him because He first loved us." It is the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost that makes the change.

MR. M.—Paul said he was "crucified with Christ." What did he mean.

MR. R.—Oh, that is a grand text! Thank God, I have been crucified with Christ. The Cross of Christ represents the death due to the sinner who had broken God's laws. When Christ was crucified every member of his body was crucified, but every believer that was, or is, or shall be, is a member of Christ's body, of his flesh and of his bones (Eph. v. 30); again, we read (1 Cor. xii. 26, 27): "If one member suffer all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." So when Christ was crucified for sin, I was also crucified in Him, and now I am dead and gone as far as my old self is concerned. I have already suffered for sin in Him. Yes; I am dead and buried with Christ. That is the grand truth that Paul laid hold upon. I am stone dead as a sinner in the sight of God. As it is written Rom. vii. 4, "I am become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that I might be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that I should bring forth fruit unto God." "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me" (Gal. ii. 20); and God Himself commands me so to regard my standing before Him as his believing child. In Rom. vi. 10, 11, "In that Christ died, He died unto sin once: but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

MR. M.—Should a man not repent a good deal before he comes to Christ?

MR. R.—Repent a good deal! I do not think any man repents in the true sense of the word till he loves Christ and hates sin. There are many false repentances in the Bible. We are told that Pharaoh repented when the judgment of God came upon him, and he said, "I have sinned;" but as soon as the judgment passed away, he went back to his sin. We read that Balaam said: "I have sinned." Yet "he loved the wages of unrighteousness." When Saul lost his kingdom he repented; "I have sinned," he said. When Judas Iscariot found that he had made a great mistake, he said: "I have sinned, in that I betrayed innocent blood;" yet he went "to his own place." I would not give much for these repentances; I would rather have Peter's repentance. When Christ looked upon his fallen saint it broke his heart, and he went out and wept bitterly; or the repentance of the Prodigal, when his father's arms were around his neck, and his kisses on his cheek, and he said, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son."

MR. M.—What is your title to heaven?

MR. R.—The Person, the Life, and the Righteousness, of the God-man, the Son of God.

MR. M.—How do you obtain that?

MR. R.—By receiving Him. "As many as received Him, to them gave He authority to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John i. 12).

MR. M.—What is your meetness for heaven?

MR. R.—The Holy Ghost dwelling in my heart is my fitness for heaven. I have only to get there, and I have, by this great gift, all the desires and faculties for it; I have the eyes to contemplate it, I have the ears for heaven's music, and I can speak the language of the country. The Holy Ghost in me is my fitness and qualification for the splendid inheritance for which the Son of God has redeemed me.

MR. M.—Would you make a distinction between Christ's work for us and the Spirit's work in us?

MR. R.—Christ's work for me is the payment of my debt, the giving me a place in my Father's home, the place of sonship in my Father's family. The Holy Spirit's work in me is to make me fit for his company.

MR. M.—You distinguish, then, between the work of the Father, the work of the Son, and the work of the Holy Ghost?

MR. R.—Thanks be to God, I have them all, and I want them all—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. I read that my Heavenly Father took my sins and laid them on Christ; "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." No one else had a right to touch them. Then I want the Son, who "his own self bare my sins in his own body on the tree." And I want the Holy Ghost; I would know nothing about this great salvation, and care nothing for it, if the Holy Ghost had not come and told me the story, and given me grace to believe it.

(To be concluded.)

"THE STAR IN THE EAST" is the quarterly record of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society, and reports the progress of Christian work in the Turkish Empire, and also in Persia and Greece. It contains accounts of work worth reading and supporting. The office is 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—Mrs. Anne Dove, 110, Cannon-street, E.C., states in her monthly report that the disbursements for December last were as follows: Bouquets, 13,969; cards, 6866; lavender bags, 1268; presents, 2148; making a total of 24,251. Mrs. Dove would be glad to receive evergreens, parcels of ivy-leaves, mosses, &c., with ornamented cards and correctly-written leaflet-texts.

GENERAL GORDON.

BY common consent this Christian soldier is one of the most remarkablem en of the time. Even in an age that has produced many good, great and gifted public men, General Gordon stands out in such a marked fashion as to constitute him a phenomenon among his compeers. With a sagacity and enterprise that are almost equally phenomenal in modern English journalism, the conductors of The Pall Mall Gazette lately secured and published the report of an interview between one of its staff and the General, with respect to the state of the Soudan. Probably it is largely due to this deliverance that he is now in Egypt, charged by the English Government with the mission of evolving order from the chaos that resulted from the recent massacre of the Egyptian troops by the Mahdi and his forces. In The Pall Mall Gazette of the 22nd inst. there appeared another deeply interesting sketch of General Gordon; we think the perusal by our readers of the following extract (which, with the accompanying portrait, we reproduce by permission) will not make them less inclined to respond to the appended requests for prayer on behalf of this truly great and good man. We omit the purely political portions of the article from which we quote:—

GENERAL GORDON AS GOVERNOR-JENERAL OF THE SOUDAN, 1879.

To men like General Gordon there is no such thing as accident. All things were predordained before time began, and kings and peasants are mere instruments in the hands of the Higher Power which cannot err. Even to those who take less lofty views of human destiny, strange indeed was the combination of unexpected coincidences by which it has come to pass that the officer who a week since was all but deprived of his commission in the English army for taking service with the International Associates of the Congo, should to-day be speeding southward as fast as the mail-packet can carry him to act as the supreme representative of British power in the equatorial Empire of Egypt. Since Mordecai the Jew was led in triumph through the streets of Shusan, there has surely but seldom been so sudden an alteration in human fortunes. Great as the change is, it leaves him absolutely unchanged. "For what is this or that to thee?" says Thomas-à-Kempis in the "Imitation," a copy of which, with the page doubled down at this passage, was handed to his visitor on leaving. "Follow thou me. For what is it to thee whether this man be such or such, or that others do or say thus and thus?" And again at another marked passage it is written, "Let not thy peace be in the tongues of men; for whether they put a good or bad construction on what thou doest, thou art not therefore another man. Where is true peace and glory? Is it not in me? And he who covets not to please men and fears not their displeasure shall enjoy much peace." That peace which General Gordon enjoys is unruffled by the contumely, undisturbed by the eulogy, of man.

Slightly built, somewhat below the average height, General Gordon's most remarkable characteristic at first sight is a child-like simplicity of speech and manners. Notwithstanding his fifty years, his face is almost boyish in its youthfulness, his step is as light and his movements as lithe as the leopard. Although he is still excitable and vehement, those who know him best say that he has under much firmer control those volcanic fires which blazed out with fiercest fury in his younger days. But there is that in his face at times even now that contrasts strangely with the sweetness of his smile or the radiance which lights up his face when discoursing on his favourite author and the choice texts of the "Imitation," which for the present seems to have superseded his old favourite, "Watson on Contentment." "This," said he, holding a small copy of the "Imitation" in his hand, "is my book. And although I never shall be able to attain to a hundredth part of the perfection of that saint, I strive towards it—the ideal is here." General Gordon carries with him the saintly ideal of the cloister into the rough realities of the camp. He has a morbid horror of publicity or praise. "No gilt," he would exclaim imperiously, "no gilt, mind; no gilt. Say what is to be said, but no praise." "In all my career," he once wrote, "I can lay no claim to cleverness, discretion, or wisdom. My success has been due to a series of (called by the world) flukes. When one knows the little one does of oneself, and any one praises you, I, at any rate, have a rising in the gorge which is a suppressed 'You lie!'" To him a true perception of the Gospel is entire emptiness of self, an utter absence of any pretension, a complete and entire refusal to accept the world's praise or judgment. "Who is he or who is any man that he should be praised? I do nothing, I am a chisel which cuts the wood. The Carpenter directs it. If I lose my edge, He must sharpen me; if He puts me aside and takes another, it is his own good will. None are indispensable to Him. He will do his work with a straw equally as well. Do not flatter yourself that you are wanted—that God could not work without you; it is an honour if He employs you. No one is indispensable, either in this world's affairs or in spiritual works." "Do not send me your paper with anything written about me," he said on parting; "I do not want to see it, or to have anything to do with it. These things are not in my hands, and mind, do not forget, no gilt!"

In Gordon the tenderness of a woman, the gentleness of a child, the ready sympathy with all the sorrows and sufferings of others, are combined with an iron will and a certain "hardness" which is indispensable to a ruler of men. "I have a conviction," he wrote on first entering the Soudan, "that, God willing, I shall do much in this country. The main point is to be just and straightforward, to hear no one or no one's sayings, to avoid all tergiversations or twisting, even if you lose by it, and to be hard to all if they do not obey you." This capacity of hardness has been put to severe proof. In the Soudan he was to slave-dealers, pashas, and other evildoers, an incarnate terror. On his fleet camel, accompanied only by a single guide, he sped from province to province, like an angel of wrath descending like a thunderbolt upon all who withstood his will. Yet even while the rage of the Berserker flashed in his eye, infinite compassion for the weak, the helpless, and oppressed trembled in his voice. Again and again he refers in his letters in tones of pity and affection to the poor people of the Soudan. "I would give my life for them," he said. "How can I help feeling for them? All the time I was there every night I used to pray that God would lay upon me the burden of their sins, and crush me with it instead of these poor sheep. A strange prayer you may well think for one who has sins enough of his own to answer for, but nevertheless a real one. I really wished it, and longed for it; and now, having had the burden of their sufferings upon me for so many years, can you wonder that I wish to save them from being handed over to be 'slated up' by the Turks?"

In General Gordon's eyes, as every one is aware who has read Mr. Berkeley Hill's edition of his letters from Central Africa, the blacks of the Soudan are immeasurably superior in every way to the Egyptian Government. All the misery in those parts, he used to declare, is due to these Arab and Circassian pashas and authorities. "I would not stay a day for these wretched creatures, but I would give my life for these poor blacks." The people who annexed the Soudan, he maintained, stood in quite as much need of civilisation as those they attempt to civilise. There is no more touching passage in modern writings than that in which he describes his remorse at the share he had in carrying the "blessings" of Egyptian civilisation to the Moogie tribes, hundreds of miles south of Gondokoro. "We do not want beads," they cried. "'We do not want to see the Pasha; we want our own lands and you to go away.' A magician stood and cursed the expedition, and a disaster soon after befalling, General Gordon was inclined to believe that the prayer for protection against the invader had been heard. "'We do not want your beads, we do not want your cloth,' of the poor Moogies rings in my ears. 'We want you to go away.' They knew well enough the little benefits that would ever accrue from occupation. I do believe that God may listen to the cries for help from the heathen who knew him not. These prayers were earnest prayers for celestial aid, in which the pray-er know he would need help from some unknown Power to avert a danger. That the native knows not the true God is true, but God knows him and moved him to prayer and answered his prayer."

He has personal friends in the Madhi's camp. One of the revolted chiefs owes to General Gordon the lives of two of his sons, others have seen him strike terror into the hearts of the pashas against whom they are in revolt. All the natives know his inflexible justice. "Your brother," he wrote to his sister from Khartoum seven years ago, "is much feared and, I think, respected, but not overmuch liked. The people in the Soudan tremble before your brother." Personal popularity, it will be seen, he does not pretend to claim. But he was just, upright, and inflexible, and an especial terror to evildoers of the kind against whom the Mahdi has risen in revolt. If he were left absolutely free now, he would begin by proclaiming a free amnesty to all those who have taken part in a rebellion which he regards as not only morally justifiable but politically necessary.

It is the conviction that he may be able to do some good to the "poor people of the Soudan" that induced him to postpone his magnificent project of cutting up the slave trade by the roots at the headwaters of the Congo until he had re-established decent government on the headwaters of the Nile. General Gordon is the natural tribune of the oppressed. "I believe I can do a great deal to ameliorate the lot of the people." That is why he has gone to the Soudan. He expects no gratitude and wishes for none. The post was none of his seeking. But when it was thrust upon him he could not refuse. The difficulties are great. He carries his life in his hand. Success is almost impossible, and failure would impair a reputation hitherto unequalled. That, however, is nothing to him. "Let me ask," he wrote on one occasion, when he had a great difficulty to surmount, "who that had not the Almighty with him could do that? I have the Almighty with me, and I will do it. No man ever had a harder task than I, unaided, have before me; but it sits as a feather on me. As Solomon asked, I ask wisdom to govern this great people, and not only will He give it me, but all else besides. And why? Because I value not the 'all besides.' I have nought to gain in name or riches. I do not care what man may say. I do what I think is pleasing to my God; and, so far as man goes, I need nothing from any one. I feel my own weakness, look to Him who is Almighty, and I leave the issue without inordinate care to Him. I am quite alone, and like it. I have become what people call a great fatalist—namely, I trust God will pull me through every difficulty. The solitary grandeur of the desert makes one feel how vain is the effort of man. This carries me through my troubles, and enables me to look on death as a coming relief when it is his will." And again he said, "I go up alone with an infinite Almighty God to direct and guide me, and am glad to so trust Him as to fear nothing and indeed to feel sure of success."

Although his energy and health are almost unequalled, he has suffered much from angina pectoris. Describing its symptoms he says, "a rush of blood takes place to the head, and you think all is over. I may say I have died suddenly a hundred times." But in sickness and in health he has followed his standing order, "Keep your eyes on the cloud by day and the pillar by night, and never mind your steps. . . . Trust in the Lord with all thy heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." "Were it not for the knowledge that I have that God is Governor-General," said General Gordon, "I could not get on at all." All must wish that this unfaltering confidence in the Divine Guidance may once more be justified by success, and that "the shrouded Power that cannot err" may find in General Gordon the instrument for achieving successfully the great work he has on hand in the Soudan.

DEAR SIR,—At the call of our Government, General Gordon, in the interests of peace and humanity, has put his life in his hands, but putting his trust in the God he has ever served, has gone to the Soudan. Should not brethren be called on to uphold him with their prayers?—Yours faithfully, JOHN A. WHEELER.

Cheddar, Jan. 22.

DEAR SIR,—I think that in every place where THE CHRISTIAN is read, fervent prayer should be offered up for the Lord's blessing on the trying and perilous mission of General Gordon, that true soldier of Christ. We know well that what he has undertaken has been laid before the Lord in prayer by General Gordon himself. Let fellow Christians join their intercessions to his that the unhappy natives of the Soudan may be the better of his mission, that the Europeans may be rescued from their peril, and that the brave Gordon himself may be preserved.—Yours faithfully, A. H. W-

DEAR SIR,—About the time your next issue will appear General Gordon will be beginning his all but superhuman undertaking, viz., the pacification of the Soudan, the adoption of measures for the deliverance from their oppressors of the tribes of the desert, and the ultimate extinction of a wide-wasting and inhuman slave trade. He will enter on the accomplishment of these great tasks as the representative of England; he then purposes proceeding to the Congo to deal with slavery in its head-quarters.

May I beg a little space to beseech, on his behalf, the prayers of your readers? Rarely could a man more need the guardian care, and the spirit of wisdom from the Lord. Not often in the history of our sinful and selfish world has such a momentous mission been undertaken. Some years ago it was my privilege to have intercourse with Colonel Gordon (which was his rank at that time), and I used often to see him in my congregation. A more reverent, benevolent, humble, and transparently upright man I have not known. I could give many proofs, and only mention the fact to encourage supplications for a humane soldier who fears God. We remember that Livingstone, whose great heart was pierced and oppressed with witnessing the cruelties and horrors of the slave trade, poured out his dying groan in words which men read on his grave in Westminster Abbey, that God would raise up those who should close that "open sore" of Africa. Not, therefore, for the sake of England merely, although that is far from unimportant, but because of this long-standing crime of humanity, let me beseech praying men and women, in an hour of hope and of peril, to surround a firm and brave man with their perpetual intercessions.—Yours ever truly, WM. GUEST.

Tunbridge Wells, Jan. 24.

A work of a theological nature may soon be expected from the pen of General "Chinese" Gordon. The MS. is at present in the hands of his old friend Prebendary Barnes. Readers of the foregoing sketch of the General may be glad to know that a new shilling edition of his favourite companion, the "Imitation of Christ," by Thomas à Kempis, has just been issued by Messrs. Field & Tuer, of the Leadenhall Press, as one of their vellum parchment series.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

SHANKLIN.—A farewell tea-meeting was held at the institute at the close of special services recently conducted by Miss Brryman, when 250 sat down to tea. Addresses were given by the Misses Reade and Hamilton, of Blackgang; Captain Mitchell, of Sandown; Miss Brryman, and others.

EXETER.—At the Bartholomew-street Baptist Chapel, Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a Gospel Mission, assisted by the pastor, Rev. A. W. Hillier. Mr. Bradlaugh has lately given expression to the confident hope that his brother, the famous Iconoclast, will ere long be truly converted.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND has been evangelising at Camden, New Jersey. The meetings held in various churches were crowded, and the people seemed very responsive to the earnest appeals of the preacher. Very interesting services have been held on behalf of the children, among whom Mr. Hammond labours with peculiar success.

THREESHELFORD, KELVEDON.—Mr. John Harris has been conducting special services here. He commenced on Jan. 6 with a small congregation, which gradually increased, both in number and manifest blessing. Many came some distance to attend the meetings, and went home rejoicing. A tea-meeting was held on the last day; about 170 were present.

CARLISLE.—Rev. H. J. Berguer, Vicar of St. Philip's, Islington, conducted a nine-days' Mission in Christ Church, from Jan. 12—21. Much blessing was vouchsafed. Special services were held for men, women, and children respectively, and an address was delivered in church each morning on the "Spiritual Life." At the after-meeting many were led to a decision for Christ, and throughout the Mission an earnest spirit of inquiry was manifest. Mr. J. T. Smith, of Kendal, conducted a daily prayer-meeting, which was well attended. An impressive thanksgiving service was held on the last day of the Mission, when 150 persons remained to partake of the Lord's Supper.

MESSRS. MATLER AND PARKER have been holding successful meetings at Stratford-on-Avon. The congregations have been large, and many were spoken to at the close of each service.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY.—A circular report from this society states that there is much to encourage those who have been engaged in the evangelistic work during the past year. The reports from the vicars of a number of parishes are full of interest. The society is sadly in need of funds to go forward with its work; any help may be sent to the Secretary, Rev. W. Darwin Fox, 21, John-street, Adelphi, W.C.

HALIFAX.—A Mission was held in the parish of Luddenden Foot, from Jan. 5 to 15, by Rev. Dr. Morris, under the auspices of the Parochial Mission Aid Society. Souls were saved and believers helped to a higher and holier stand for Christ. Meetings were held for men only and for women only, also for children. The after-meetings were useful in leading many seeking ones to decision for Christ. At the close of the Mission the Lord's Supper was observed in the church.

FALKIRK.—Dr. Moxey addressed a meeting on Sabbath evening in the Free Church, Falkirk, under the auspices of the Free Church Y.M.C.A. The building was crowded, and the audience largely composed of men. The Doctor told them the story of his conversion, describing with vivid reality his struggles with conscience, his search after the truth, and his agonisings to enter into light and liberty. Then came the blessed sense of forgiveness and peace. The address occupied one hour and a half in delivery; during the whole time the attention of the audience was rivetted, and the divine power was very sensibly present. There was a large after-meeting, and a great number, mostly young men, professed to have found the Saviour. J. M.

Jan. 23.

SUNDERLAND.—During the past two months in our Y.M.C.A. here, a good number of young men have been led to the Lord Jesus Christ. A Gospel-meeting is held every Sunday evening at seven o'clock, after all the ordinary congregations are gathered. From ten to fifteen young men meet for prayer, and then go out into the streets, and give personal invitations to any who are standing about the corners. Care is taken to have the meetings as attractive as possible. Some of the choicest of Mr. Sankey's hymns are great favourites. We thank the Lord that a good many young men have remained after the meetings as anxious inquirers; most of them we have reason to believe have found the Saviour. In several cases where men have received blessing they have brought companions with them to the next meeting. J. J. S.

GLASGOW.—On the invitation of Mr. Quarrier, of the Orphan Home Mission, Glasgow, Mr. George Williams first came to Scotland as an evangelist about six years ago, when he was much owned of the Lord to the conversion of sinners, not only in Glasgow, but in Edinburgh, Dundee, Hawick, and other towns. After two years' absence he returned to Glasgow and commenced services in connection with the Orphan Home Mission on Sabbath, 13th instant. During the week he spoke nightly in the Mission Hall, which was inconveniently crowded. At the close of each meeting numbers of anxious souls were dealt with and a great many professed to accept the Saviour. At the praise and testimony meeting held on Saturday week it was most encouraging to hear young men and young women tell how they had been brought to Christ through the preaching of Mr. Williams and other evangelists. Mr. Williams goes to the Bridgeton district in the east-end of the city for further work.

"KEPT BY THE POWER OF GOD."—This poem, which appeared in a recent issue, may be had in leaflet form of Mr. Burne, 57, Upper George-street, Kingstown, Ireland, at 10d. per dozen.

SUBURBAN LONDON.—A record of seven years' Mission work in Suburban London by Primitive Methodists at Walthamstow is a pleasing account of how difficulties were overcome and the Lord's work made to prosper. It may stimulate young workers to never despair of being successful. The report may be had of Rev. T. Jackson, Hawthorn-road, Walthamstow, price fourpence, post free.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE. — The twenty-fifth report of this society gives a good description of the work, and contains a number of letters from soldiers who have found the value of such a Home. It is one of the oldest and best conducted Homes for soldiers, and deserves support. The report may be had of Mr. I. F. Bottomley, Soldiers' Home, Sandgate.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

Closing at Clapham.

So eager was the desire to be present at the last meeting in Lavender-hill Hall that the doors had to be opened two hours ahead of the specified time. It was speedily full to overflowing; the many disappointed late comers had to betake themselves to the Wesleyan and Baptist Chapels, where, however, ample provision was made for their spiritual entertainment and edification. These overflows are a severe strain on Mr. Sankey; after throwing heart and soul into a couple of solos at the big hall, he is expected to appear as fresh as ever at the smaller meeting. But the Lord has wonderfully sustained him, and enabled him, without any loss of voice, to tell out the tale of love divine night after night, first to one eager throng and then to another. One of his songs at the great hall on this closing night—sung in response to a number of requests—was, "Hallelujah, what a Saviour!" From the grandly responsive way in which the audience sang the refrain, it was evident that many were expressing, "with heart and voice," a new-found and blessed experience.

Mr. Moody gave the good people at Clapham to understand that although he had to leave them and pass on to a distant part of the city, he would not forget them. He invited all who had not definitely started on the Christian pilgrimage and who had any mental difficulty, to write to him at West Ham Lane Hall, Stratford, E.; he would endeavour to help them through the post, if he could not do so in person. Those who had decided for Christ he urgently exhorted to unite themselves at once with some of the Christian communities in the neighbourhood. With some surprise we heard him remark that the charge was still brought against this movement that it unsettles the people and weakens the churches. We can well believe that it unsettles those who have been at ease in Zion, and those who have hitherto cared but little about their personal relations to God. But no charge more false could be made than to say that this work weakens the living, working churches. Most probably, those churches where everything is of the routine, cut and dried and soporific order, will have small attractions for the Mission converts, full of zeal and new-born joy, and fresh from the unconstrained and hearty services of the evangelists. For the hundredth time let it be affirmed, as a matter of scientific certainty, that those churches in any district where the Gospel meetings are held, whose ranks are not reinforced and strengthened by the Mission, can only have themselves to blame. "If I thought there was any real truth in this charge," said Mr. Moody at Clapham, "I would at once give up the work. I do hope that the young converts here will identify themselves with some church or chapel. Not to be drones—we have got drones in abundance in the churches already—but to go to work. The ministers will give you a warm welcome; you will find no truer friends anywhere than these men of God. I have mingled a good deal with church pastors one way or the other, and I want to say that I have never found truer men in America and Britain than the ministers, as a whole. They are not perfect, and the churches are not perfect; you will not discover such perfection this side of heaven. But if the churches are not perfect, instead of pulling them to pieces and criticising them, let us do what we can to make them better."

Mr. Moody's last discourse at Clapham went to prove that the acceptance of salvation is not a long and tedious process, but something that can be done in an instant. It so happened that most of his illustrations had reference, in a greater or less degree, to the calling of the soldier. Perhaps this was due to the fact that a thin line of red coats ran from end to end of the front row in the central division of the hall. The attendance of soldiers at the Clapham meetings has been a very marked and pleasing feature—a result, we suspect, of earnest barrack visitation by Miss Fry, of Dublin, who takes special interest in the welfare of these stalwart fellows, and has been for some time in attendance at the meetings. Another circumstance that we noted with no small interest was the presence on the closing evenings of a group of deaf mutes, to whom a young lady rapidly translated in the finger language the speaking and singing as they proceeded. It was intensely touching to watch the effect on these afflicted friends, of Mr. Moody's lively anecdotal illustrations, as conveyed to their understandings through this wonderful palmistry.

It is not possible, with the space at our command, to mention all the interesting facts in connection with this closing evening; but we must make room for a striking incident told by Mr. Moody. A father, he said, came into the meeting a week ago. One night his two boys had each brought home from the Sunday-school a little card; on one were the words, "Obey God," and on the other, "Draw near to God and He will draw near to you." The little fellow who had the first said: "Father, which verse is the best, mine or Jem's?" The father replied, "I think Jem's is the best, 'Draw near to God and He will draw near to you.'" "But don't you think," said the boy, "that it is very important we should obey God." Although he was not a Christian, the man said he thought it was important. In ten minutes from the time he asked the question the little fellow was gone; he was accidentally drowned. The father came to the hall, and, strange to say, in the course of my address, I pointed in his direction, and said, "Man, won't you obey God?" It seemed to him as the voice of God; he went into the inquiry-room, accepted the Lord Jesus as his Saviour, and has been rejoicing in Christ ever since.

The parting text that the preacher gave to the Battersea and Clapham folks was his favourite one, Isa. xii. 2: "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid." He then proceeded to the inquiry-room to deal with the throng of anxious seekers, while Mr. Rainsford spoke words of exhortation and encouragement to the young converts, who gathered in front of the platform, from Col. iii. 3, 4: "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." An hour or so later the last meeting in Lavender-hill Hall was ended; the last fond lingering look had been taken, and the Clapham Mission, as far as Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were concerned, was a thing of the past. It has been a channel of blessing and of refreshing to many, both saints and sinners, and will stand out brightly in the history of the present London campaign.

We stated in our last week's issue that Major Whittle, with Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, were to continue the meetings for some time in the Wesleyan and Baptist Chapels. During the closing days of last week unfortunately both these brethren suffered from sore throat, and were obliged to rest. The meetings were continued by the local pastors, aided by Mr. Henry Varley and other friends, Mrs. McGranahan helping in the singing. It is fully expected that Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan will be able to conduct the services throughout the present week.

The South London Choir, which rendered such good service at both the Wandsworth and Clapham Missions, are banding themselves together for helping in further evangelistic work; they have already arranged for a Mission in the Clapham Rink, for fourteen days from Feb. 3.

MAKING RESTITUTION.

A worker sends to us the following "case":—"A very striking incident came under my notice at Lavender-hill Hall. The inquiry-room being usually overstocked with workers, I was seeking for sheaves in the half-empty hall, when I accosted a man with a very downcast appearance. He told me he had found peace in the Lord Jesus at the hall four nights before, but that he felt he could not assume the name of Christian until his soul was relieved of a sin committed some years ago. It appeared that, while residing in a provincial town, he had misappropriated the moneys of a loan society, for which he now could be liable to arrest. So miserable was he on this account, that he felt he could go all lengths to do the injured parties justice.

"After prayer, in which he followed me very earnestly, he decided, in the strength of the Lord, to lay by 2s., out of wages of 26s. per week, until the whole sum he had purloined was collected, and then remit the same. This I thought a wiser course than delivering himself up to the law, he being married and having a family to support. Great was the power of God at these gatherings."

Last week's Outlook, at the conclusion of an article on the Clapham meetings, says: "God's blessing has manifestly rested on the work. Christians have been revived and quickened, many souls have been hopefully converted, the ministers and people of different denominations have been brought together and made to realise their unity in Christ, and results are likely to flow from these meetings of a lasting and very beneficial kind. Already the ministers have agreed to hold every week a Monday mid-day prayer-meeting in Clapham Hall, and a monthly united meeting which will take the round of the several churches and lecture halls in the neighbourhood."

Starting at Stratford.

This London Mission gathers volume as it grows. The work at Stratford seems almost to have begun where that at Clapham left off. The very first meeting on the afternoon of Wednesday week saw quite a number rise for prayer, and not a few resorted to the inquiry-room at the earliest opportunity. The closing meetings at Clapham and the opening ones at Stratford were held in the midst of a violent tempest of wind and rain. At the latter place the hall was put to a severe test, but, with the exception of a chimney-can breaking over one of the glass panes in the roof, no damage was done. The elements raged so furiously at times that Mr. Moody's voice was almost drowned. Despite the storm there was a great gathering on the first afternoon, and the evening meeting was crowded to excess; an overflow had to be held in the Parish Church, whither Mr. Sankey bent his steps after singing in the hall. The succeeding evenings of the week brought still larger crowds, until the attendance of last Sunday evening was perhaps the greatest of any that this campaign has yet seen.

Mr. Moody, in his first address, said he was greatly encouraged at seeing so many come together for prayer. He had heard that the spirit of prayer in this district had been very marked and widespread. If there was to be great blessing in Stratford it would be in answer to the united cry of the Lord's believing children. At Clapham this spirit of prayer had been as manifest, perhaps, as at any place he had known for a number of years, and so the blessing had been large. The stirring words of the evangelist on this subject of prayer were fitly supplemented by Mr. Sankey's impressive rendering of that old favourite, "Are your windows open towards Jerusalem?" and the newer, but equally rousing hymn of Dr. Bonar's, "Pray, brethren, pray."

To show how the blessing spreads and is perpetuated, Mr. Moody told one evening that he had heard of two persons who went to the meetings some six weeks ago. They were spoken to kindly by some worker about salvation, but they went away rather offended at the question having been put to them. One of them, however, who is now in the north of England, has been writing to the other in London, asking, "Have you found out yet how to be saved?" She was a little too proud to go into the after-meeting, but she evidently is anxious to have the question answered. Some of the reasons or excuses given for declining to enter the inquiry-room for personal conversation are curious. For instance, last Sunday morning at the close of Mr. Moody's address a worker urged a man who was, to all appearance, deeply impressed, to accompany him to the inquiry-room for a little friendly talk. The anxious one freely admitted the desirability of having the matter settled, but he said he did not yet feel sufficiently prepared! How hard it is to get people down to the simple platform of rejecting self and accepting Christ.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS

were most memorable. The hall was probably more than half full at the early meeting for workers. To these 2500 or so Mr. Moody gave a full meal, as he discoursed powerfully on the qualities that go to make a successful winner of souls—faith, courage, enthusiasm, and sympathy. He gave some very hard knocks to the sectarian bigotry and exclusiveness that are far too common amongst some professed Christians in the present day. If some of our modern ecclesiastics had been asked to help the man that fell among thieves down the Jericho road, probably they would have declined, because it was not in their parish, and might get them into trouble with a brother clergyman! Most likely some would ask, too, whether the wounded man was to be taken to a "dissenting" or an "established" inn? Those who escape personal effort by bestowing their patronage and giving an occasional subscription, had also to undergo a scathing rebuke from the faithful preacher. Few hearts could have remained unmoved, and few eyes certainly were dry as Mr. Moody, at the close, told how he had been brought into fullest sympathy with some poor parents in Chicago, bereaved of their loved children, by putting himself in their place.

At the forenoon service, to a large congregation, many of whom were evidently not of the church-going type, Mr. Moody discoursed with power and pathos on the invitation of the Saviour to the weary and heavy-laden ones to come and get rest for their souls. He appealed to the universal instinct of the human spirit for rest—as common among the rich and comfortable as among the poor and destitute. With rare simplicity, and with many illustrations from the experiences of everyday life, therefore within the comprehension of the meanest understanding, the preacher pressed home the Gospel message. "Come," he said, "not only with the burden of your sins, but with your daily cares and sorrows." Judging from the many sad and wrinkled countenances that could be seen in the audience, the sermon was a very appropriate one. "I can see from your faces," said Mr. Moody, "that many of you are carrying burdens. If the joy of the Lord were your strength, your countenances would be lit up with a heavenly light. Many a man with a very homely face looks beautiful because his countenance shines so brightly. I think Abraham Lincoln was one of the plainest-looking men in America, but I declare to you he seemed to me one of the most beautiful men I ever saw." Right in front of the rostrum sat a little bevy of boys and girls; Mr. Moody did not forget them. "These children have burdens and troubles that are just as hard for them to bear as ours are. Let them come and pillow their young weary heads on the Saviour's breast." Then he exhorted those who had come to the Saviour not to "take up the old bundle again," like the man who, when he got a ride in a vehicle, persisted in carrying his load on his back. "It seems hard for some men to take the step that will rid them of the burden of sin. There was a man in the inquiry-room on Friday night who was asked why he did not rise and confess Christ. He said, he seemed as if he was glued to his chair. Why did he not take the chair along with him?"

Before the sermon Mr. Sankey sang in sweetest and most winning tones Mr. MacGranahan's Gospel lay founded on the words of Mr. Moody's text, with its soothing refrain—

"Weary, heavy laden, come, oh come to Me."

The afternoon and evening meetings for women and men respectively were grand times—crowded audiences and much manifest blessing attending the words of speaker and singer. Mr. Moody was suffering from hoarseness; yet his address to the men on "Sowing and reaping" was one of the most solemnly powerful and impressive we have ever heard from his lips. The fear of God seemed to have fallen on the vast audience; we trust multitudes were led to pause and think, and, better still, to repent and turn to the Lord with full purpose of heart.

In the evening Mr. Sankey sang to a great gathering in the Congregational Chapel (as well as to those in the hall), Mr. Knaggs being the preacher. A men's meeting is held each evening at Brickfields Congregational Chapel, under the conduct of Mr. Henry Thorne. A Male Choir has been organised by Mr. Harry Guinness. We are glad to learn that the St. Pancras site, near the great Midland Railway terminus in the Euston-road, has been secured; the meetings will be transferred to that locality at the close of the New Cross Mission.

"ONE ROOM IN LONDON." *

HOW familiar we are getting with the words, "One room!" How equally familiar with the terms, "Outcast London," "Horrible London," and so forth. This burning question of "How the poor live" ("live," indeed!) is being well aired and ventilated, and is getting so far into the altitudes of the universe of thought that we shall have to take care it does not remain there, to be frozen into the mere theories of philosophy or cant. Busy, true-hearted ones are already at the work; among the many attempts to solve this great problem of London's outcast poor is one by Mr. Archibald Brown, which is not only to be highly commended as worthy of imitation, but demands of itself the warmest support. It may be long ere "the powers that be" put anything definite into practice, and, it has been well asked, "Why should London wait?"

We are glad to make extracts from this little book which gives a descriptive and heart-stirring account of one year's work among the poor of East London, by one who would not be so entirely his Master's servant if he were not the practical, earnest worker that he is:—

"All classes of society, all shades of religious opinion, and those who dwell under the influence of no religious opinion at all, have joined in discussing the condition of outcast London. In this we most sincerely rejoice."

"The lives of shame have not only been laid open to view, but had attention called to them in the strongest language. Reticence has given place to minutest description, and silence has given way to a chorus of prescriptions. It has amazed us to find that those who have only thought on the matter a few weeks can see their way right through it, while years of study have only led others of us to the conviction that, if not insoluble, it is one of the most confounding problems to Society, to the Church, and to statesmen. There are poor—and poor—and poor. To single out any one class and argue that because a certain remedy meets its needs, that remedy meets the whole question, is utterly fallacious and misleading. Some without hesitation find the cause of the whole misery, or nine-tenths of it, in the drink. Their one prescription, therefore, for the whole evil is "total abstinence."

Mr. Brown goes to the root of the matter when he says, "Deeper than all their other needs is their need of Christ and his salvation. Let any man be saved from his sins, and he will be saved from dirt into the bargain." To reach the hearts of the poorest, the lowest, the most indifferent and callous, is the work of this Mission—a work which carries the Gospel of love and light right into the very haunts of these loveless, Christless ones. "It is these we have learned to love," says the writer, and it is this love, this all-conquering love, which alone dare hope for success in labours among the poor.

After describing the wretchedness of whole families, existing in one room, as they are compelled to do, on account of the fierce competition and starvation wages for labour, Mr. Brown goes on to say:—

"In one room we found a husband and wife and four children; one corner of that room, however, was let for sixpence a week to a woman and two children! 'Horrible,' say our readers. 'Horrible,' we say also. But the tenants of that room don't say so. To them it is only 'rather close work.' To our mind their not feeling it horrible is the most horrible part of 'horrible London.'

"During the year over fourteen thousand visits have been made. Relief in some form or another, but chiefly in food and clothing, has been afforded 2956 times. Not this number of persons have been relieved, but this number of times help has been granted."

From the reports by missionaries we take the following:—

"Mr. F—— and his ten children pay 2s. 6d. per week for one room. All sleep in the same room. There is a daughter of 20, and a son of 16. In the next room are Mr. R——, his wife and four children, making 18 persons in two rooms. The wife is ill, lying on the floor, with only a rug to cover her."

"In another square a widow lives in one room with her two sons, aged twenty-two and twenty-four. In the same square, father and mother and eight children live in one room; the eldest son is nineteen."

Many other extracts of a like painful kind could be made, but even a recital of misery may become monotonous. "To the poor the Gospel is preached," a divinely sanctioned labour of love. The faithful delivery of the "good news," and the relief of the distressed appear to be the only present means of alleviating the terrible misery and want of the thousands who go to make up perishing, outcast London. But there are bright spots in this dark picture, as the writer loves to tell. "Every day has brought its song of thankfulness, as we have proved how good it is to trust the Lord." "During the year we have been able to rescue some from paths of danger and shame, and return the runaway to his home. While the work gives many a heartache, it also gives birth to some of our happiest songs." May the Lord own and prosper this work in the hands of his servant with the prayers and encouragement of his sympathising people, so that songs of praise shall continue to ascend in his name!

* A RECORD OF ONE YEAR'S SERVICE. By ARCHIBALD G. BROWN. Morgan & Scott. 4d.

RYDE.—The institution known as "Garfield House" has been recently opened. It will give accommodation to 14 young women who may wish to go to Ryde in search of health and for rest. It is proposed to conduct it on similar lines to the Home for young men known as "Hazelwood."

THE LITTLE OUTCASTS OF LAMBETH.—A good work is being done among the child-waifs of this poor and densely-peopled neighbourhood. Twelve months ago a Tuesday evening service was begun at the Collingwood-street Mission, New Cut, with a few ragged and ill-fed children. By the persevering efforts of the workers, the number of regular attenders has grown to 400. Not only have these services effected a marked change in the outward appearance of the children, but there is good hope for the belief that spiritual blessing has been received.

Notes and Comments.

LORD RADSTOCK has gone to Stockholm. Will our readers pray to God for a rich blessing on his visit there, and also at Copenhagen? He expects to be absent about three weeks.

Our old friend Richard Weaver has been preaching to great congregations, with marked blessing and success, at Macclesfield and at Portsmouth. Dr. Barnardo has engaged him to preach at the Edinboro' Castle as soon as it is complete.

Many of our readers will thank us for reminding them of the all-day gathering for prayer at Exeter Hall on Tuesday next, on the subject of the State regulation of vice. It will commence at 10 a.m., and be continued without intermission till 6 p.m. The attendance of all sympathisers will be welcome. The important events which followed the Christian Convention in January last year have been such as to eminently encourage devout hearts again to bring this matter in united prayer before God. On the following evening (Wednesday, February 6) there will be a public meeting in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P. The Bishop of Bedford, Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, several Members of Parliament, and others, are announced to address the meeting. A few reserved seat tickets, price one shilling each, may be obtained of Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, Amen-corner, Paternoster-row, E.C.

We are glad to see, in the February issue of The Sentinel, some very telling and timely words on this subject from the Bishop of Canterbury. Writing to Mrs. Butler to express regret that he will be unable to attend the Exeter Hall gathering, he says:—

"It used to be the praise of the Gospel of Christ that under it the condition of women was lifted to an honourable equality (not to say chivalrous superiority) in regard to men. These wretched measures which you are endeavouring to undo . . . mean the degradation of women to the pleasure of men, and are surely characteristic of a debased morality which is growing with fatal rapidity among us."

At the near approach of the Parliamentary session, the question of Sunday closing in Ireland is being agitated by the Temperance reformers in the sister isle. An important Conference was held at Belfast last week, the first of a series to be convened in the five Irish towns at present exempted from the benefits of the existing law. We earnestly trust that the legislation which is promised in the coming session will embrace the whole island.

Workers in the Temperance field have no reason to fold their arms, or sit down contented with their successes. Much remains to be done in order to subdue the drink passion. Among the trades most rapidly developing in Belfast, for instance, is the blending and exportation of whiskey. Large quantities of this spirit leave that port almost daily for various parts of the world. A few days ago a vessel, entirely laden with whiskey, sailed for Sunderland, a fact which in itself indicates the great increase in the traffic; no vessel laden only with whiskey has previously left Belfast since 1854. Everywhere Bacchus is worshipped and upheld by hosts of votaries, who display no loss of ardour in his service. Clearly, it is no time for truce or quarter to be given by those who believe Temperance principles to be a blessing to the world.

A conference of delegates and representatives from all parts of the country will be held in London on March 19 and 20 to discuss the following questions: The Sunday Opening of Public Museums and Galleries; the Sunday Drink Traffic and Shopping; Postal Work; Railway Work; Omnibus and Tramcar Traffic; the Press and the Sabbath; the Sabbath and the Young. Arrangements are being made, and will in due time be made known. The matter is being undertaken by the Committee of the Lord's Day Observance Society, 20, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

A General Conference of Christians, of all nations, similar to that held at Bâle, in Switzerland, in 1879, has been arranged by the Council of the Evangelical Alliance, to be held this year in the month of September at Stockholm. The United States will be represented by some forty delegates, and numerous representatives of various European countries have also signified their intention to be present. The King and Queen of Sweden have expressed interest in the proposal, and a successful and highly beneficial issue may be fairly anticipated.

The outline programme which has been issued gives the following varied and important list of topics for consideration:—

"The religious indifference existing among various classes and the best means of meeting it; the Lord's Day question; Sunday-school work; Modern Unbelief, and the best methods of counteracting it; the Harmony of Science and Revelation; Intemperance; Christian responsibility in regard to prevailing immorality; and Home Missions, as well as Missions among the Heathen and the Jews."

The annual meeting of the London Baptist Association was held at Walworth-road Chapel, on Tuesday, 23rd inst., Rev. Dr. Todd, chairman for the year, presiding. The meeting was entirely devoted to the question of Mission work among the outcast poor; Messrs. W. Olney, of the Green Lanes Mission, Bermondsey, Geo. Hatton, of St. Giles', and W. J. Orsman, of Golden-lane, were the speakers. The attendance was not large, and the absence of ministers of the Association was very noticeable; the tone of the meeting, however, was hearty, and an evident impression was produced by the stirring facts and incidents of home missionary experience related by the speakers. It is a good omen that all sections of the Church are thus being aroused to the deep importance of the subject.

All the speakers at the meeting pressed their conviction that the working-classes were far more accessible and open to Christian influence than many seemed prepared to admit. Without sensationalism, bribery, or any pandering to vulgar tastes, so long as the plain Gospel is preached to them in a homely, sympathetic style, the masses are even thankful to have it carried to them. Mr. Hatton's account of the work among discharged prisoners was eminently gratifying, and productive of thankfulness to God for the abundant blessing He gives to it. No less gratifying was his contrast between the St. Giles of twenty-five years ago and that of to-day. But, say what we may for these aspects of the subject, it remains true that the social and moral condition of the masses in London calls for all the consecrated energy and prayerful concern we can bring to bear upon it. Hopeful we may be, but restful or satisfied no earnest observer can possibly be.

It was stated by Mr. W. J. Orsman, as a proof that thrift is increasing among the working classes, that no less a sum than forty-two millions sterling is now in our Post-office Savings Banks, placed there by depositors who are almost exclusively of the poorer section of the community. This is a fact which is suggestive of good results, inasmuch as industry, temperance, and frugality must lie at the root of savings thus accumulated. These are virtues which cannot be too earnestly inculcated; although not graces, or necessarily in any way gracious in their influence, yet they save their possessors from many vices and snares, and often lead to a desire for higher attainments. The young should be trained far more generally to cultivate habits of self-denial in reference to careless expenditure of pence, as it is a wholesome lesson for them to learn, "take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves."

The Spectator for Jan. 5 has a letter on the apathy which exists concerning Mr. Plimsoll's efforts made on behalf of sailors. The letter calls attention to the fact that the legislation required to protect the seafaring class from death and disaster is by no means secured, and urges the formation of a healthier public opinion as to the need for such legislation. The writer thus speaks of what he regards as a growing danger in reference to this subject:—

"In every class bound together by common interests and corporate responsibility, the sense of interest is heightened by the association, the sense of responsibility is lowered. It is marvellous to reflect on the chasm that separates the acts a man can bring himself to do, from those he can bring himself to palliate, ignore, or defend. There is no bond which unites men which is not liable to this danger; everyone must have seen something of it in family life, everyone must see much of it in national history; but in the life of a family or a nation certain noble elements come in, which to some extent counterbalance the danger. A family or a nation is a unity in a high sense, it has an organic life, it is founded in bonds we did not choose and cannot break, it is part of a great order, associated with the foundations of duty. In an assemblage of men bound together by their interests, even taking this word in its best sense, there is nothing of this. They are all the dangers of family selfishness and national selfishness, and none of the safeguards which attend both. When a profession or a trade discovers that somebody says the men who compose it are 'worse, very much worse, than they are,' even the good men among them are apt to refuse to recognise that every profession contains a few bad men, and a great many weak men. The best men in every class ought to welcome the enactments which defend their average brethren from the temptations of the worst."

Among those worthy of honourable mention, and of respectful tributes from their fellows, are many who are but little known beyond a limited circle. Of this number, one has just passed away—John Harris, the "Cornish Poet," as he was called in the West of England. He was a true man of God, quietly and unobtrusively so, but in his own sphere most effectively serving his generation. He was the son of a miner, and for twenty years worked himself in the famous Dolcoath mine. As a town missionary in Falmouth, where he died on Jan. 7, he did for many years a valuable work, and lived respected and beloved by all classes. His published works are voluminous, and highly spoken of by those who know them; they deserve to be far more widely known for their native genius, Christian tone, and often rare poetic simplicity and pathos. He was one of a class of men only too few and too rarely to be met with. His great features were a kind heart and simple faith.

It is a cause for congratulation that men of decided character as Christian social reformers, like Mr. S. Smith, M.P. for Liverpool, and others of similar calibre, are securing for themselves constantly widening areas of popular influence as well as Parliamentary status. We see that Mr. Smith has been selected to second the address to the Throne at the opening of Parliament. It is to such statesmen that England must look more than ever if the State is to be saved from the troubles and perils threatened by social evils and wrongs which have long called ineffectually for remedy and redress.

Tidings have come from Wolverhampton of the death of the Rev. Andrew Fuller, son of the well-known divine who bore that honoured name, and did so much in the latter half of the last century to free the Baptist denomination (to which he belonged) from the withering influences of the hyper-Calvinism which at that time prevailed. Mr. Fuller was formerly a missionary in South Africa, but was for many years well-known as a writer and preacher in this country. His latest work was to write the biographical sketch of his father's eventful and devoted career, which was recently issued by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton in their "Men Worth Remembering" series. He was in his eighty-fifth year. The Times, in its obituary notice of Mr. Fuller, says that he was one of the founders of the Baptist Missionary Society, but as this society was formed before he was born it will be seen how the father's work in this respect is attributed to the son.

The conduct of officials in Russia in relation to persecution for conscience sake is disgraceful in the extreme. While nothing can excuse Nihilism in its plottings against life, it is by no means surprising that movements of a desperate kind should be set on foot against so despicable and despotic a form of government as there prevails. Even Imperial decrees seem powerless to prevent religious intolerance taking the form of cruel persecution. Col. Pashkoff's agent lately employed several of the Molcchans, to whom at the coronation of the Czar a special grant of religious freedom was made, on account of their loyalty and nobleness of character. A few days ago, we learn, he was ordered at once to discharge them, simply because of their religious convictions. M. Almanoffsky, at St. Petersburgh, has also been thrown into prison without a trial, solely because he is a Christian, and impelled by zeal for Christ to labour in the dissemination of the Word of God. All the Bibles and Testaments found in his house were seized by the police. Such acts are truly a blot to civilisation, and a curse to the land in which they occur.

Dr. Pressensé, writing to the Christian World, has been treating on the perils of democracy. Referring to the fear expressed by many that polite society will suffer from any further advance in democratic directions, he says that so-called polite society is itself doing the work of deterioration, and cites, as proof of his statement, the tone of its comic papers, the character of its popular novels, and of its most favoured theatricals. The Doctor is only speaking sober truth when he says:—

"The distinction of classes is rapidly becoming a mere matter of dress. It has ceased to be marked by a difference of speech. Drawing-room slang is no better than the slang of the streets. The lessons and examples which debase the common people are given from above, if we may so speak. The people supply the victims of lawless licence, but who incites and maintains them? Gloved hands scatter the vile gold which purchases the infamy of the daughters of the people."

It is useless to ignore these facts; the path of wisdom is to face them, and, by exposing their evil, help to bring about their correction.

It is the example of lawlessness and vice set by numerous members of the class known as "the upper ten" which accounts for similar recklessness of a more vulgar type, it may be, but not of a more reprehensible character, in the lower classes. To punish and prohibit gambling, late hours at the public-house, and immoral practices on the part of the poor, while similar things are winked at and passed over among the rich, provokes jealousy and just indignation, and must, in course of time, bring its own penalty in social anarchy and determined resistance. Aristocratic vice and ungodliness differ from democratic only in this, that they are as much more shameful as they are committed under more favourable circumstances, in the face of responsibilities more weighty, and of fuller and clearer light.

Taking his cue from the Apostle Paul's appeal on Mars Hill to certain Greek poets and their works, the Rev. E. Paxton Hood has been employing the pulpit of his chapel in Falcon-square to preach a sermon on the Gospel according to Tennyson. How far this plan of making our secular literature the basis of preaching the Gospel to the souls of men is calculated to win them and to increase reverence for sacred themes, is open to question. It may be safe in the hands of some men, but would be dangerous, we apprehend, were it a common practice. Readers of Tennyson, however they may admire him, will admit that there is enough of speculative genius and of poetic license in his poems to make the distinction between his work as a poet and as a Christian teacher tolerably clear. Happily, the Bible is by no means exhausted as a text book, and preachers will find it ever safest and best to confine themselves to its authority. Its light is clear, and as Herbert says,

"He cannot be mistook
Who speaketh by this Book."

Among good works carried on in distant lands, that accomplished by the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution deserves to be held in high repute. It is the only institution in the whole of India in connection with which native Christians can receive a full medical education, and be trained for the work of medical missionaries. Its objects are to provide a home for native Christian youths while studying medicine at the Agra College, to assist the students in their medical studies while attending the college, and to impart to them a systematic knowledge of divine truth, so as to prepare them for practically engaging in the work of healing and preaching. The principal, the Rev. Colin S. Valentine, LL.D., F.R.C.S.E., is eminently qualified for his task; and in every way this young but extensively useful and unsectarian institution, is worthy of support. We learn that the committee are earnestly endeavouring to raise a sum of £10,000, in order to place the work on a permanent and extended basis.

It is instructive for us at home to note what those in far-away lands say of us and of our doings. The Bombay Guardian lately had a stirring leader on "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London." Our Indian contemporary regards the state of things existing in our midst as intimating that some great judgment must be near "a city where the truth of God is preached in a thousand comely churches to the respectable, and the fires of hell light a far larger number of outcasts to perdition." The Guardian argues that the sin which cries loudest from earth to heaven is not the sin of Ashantee or Juggernaut, but of those who sit where the Gospel of the grace of God is most abundantly lavished. This is a truth that our Lord emphasised in his teaching, and one which London may well take to heart.

The State as well as the Church comes in for just censure in the Indian journal from which we quote. Some facts, with which we are but too familiar, are thus commented on:—

"What is the State doing? It is licensing gin-palaces in such numbers that if they were made lodging-houses for the poor, there would be at once a marked relief of the overcrowded districts. But the light and brilliancy and music of these places lure the surrounding victims to come and spoil themselves of clothes and food and shelter and lights and fuel and self-respect that the gin-vendor may become rich. The riches of the gin-vendor furnish the tribute of householders moving in the best ranks of society, of brewers and wine merchants who sit in the House of Commons. Alas! the reports of the Ecclesiastical Commission admit that the rent of many public-houses goes to support the Church and enable the Bishops to have their five or six thousand a year. Is God blind? Will he not judge for these things? 'The time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God,' says Peter (1, iv. 17)."

As was fitting and right, the Metropolitan Tabernacle—that hive of busy workers—has been included in the Pall Mall Gazette series of "Centres of Spiritual Activity." The Rev. V. J. Charlesworth, than whom no better exponent of the work and the place could have been found, has told the story of its development and truly wonderful growth. At present there are 5339 members in the fellowship of the church, presided over by the Pastor, the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and his brother, the Rev. Jas. Spurgeon, who is co-pastor, and renders much aid in the oversight of the church. The Pastors' College is maintained chiefly by the weekly offerings of the congregation. An Evangelists' Association, composed of voluntary agents, labours extensively in preaching the Gospel in various parts of London, while a Country Mission extends its operations to the home counties. Missions of an extensive and flourishing character are sustained by the church in various districts, that known as the "Green Walk Mission," conducted by Mr. W. Olney, Jun., for which a large block of buildings is now in course of erection, being one of its offshoots.

A philanthropic work of no slight magnitude is also carried on in addition to the usual church agencies. The Stockwell Orphanage ranks first in importance among these; nearly 1000 orphans have benefited by its provisions, 400 being now in residence. Almshouses for poor women, members of the church above 60 years of age, have also been built and endowed; indeed, every form of want and suffering, as Mr. Charlesworth says, finds a response in the various ministries of this immense assembly of avowed disciples of Christ. Mr. Spurgeon's jubilee occurs on June 19 next, and it is indeed a marvellous fact that so gigantic a work as Mr. Charlesworth describes should be the result of the labours of a man not yet fifty years old. No one more earnestly than the pastor himself would join us in saying. To God be all the glory.

PRAYER AND MISSIONS.

AN ADDRESS DURING THE WEEK OF PRAYER,

By Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

IT was foreseen by God that his cause would be opposed and that great difficulties would present themselves to those who sought to obey the command to preach the glad tidings in all the world to every creature. But the cause in which we are engaged is one that rests not on human power or human strength—it rests on the prayers of God's believing people. We know how the little company were united before the outpouring of the Spirit on the Day of Pentecost. They waited upon God for the promise of the Father, and they waited not in vain. When the Spirit was poured out from on high, great things were done in the name of God's holy Son, Jesus.

In these words we have the purpose of God—"Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." The connection of prayer with the extension of the kingdom of God among the heathen, unto the very uttermost parts of the earth, is very closely brought before us here. "Ask of Me, and I shall give thee." How is He to ask? in person on high before the throne, or on earth in the person of his members? I think we see this very clearly shown in the first verse of the Acts of the Apostles: "The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day in which He was taken up." All that Jesus began both to do and to teach" He has gone on working ever since. He is working still, but it is through his members who are upon the earth. It is through the united prayers of his people that He is to ask the Father to give Him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.

We do well to connect with these two passages a third very familiar passage (John xiv. 12—15): "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it." Then He connects with these words, "If ye love Me, keep my commandments." Asking in the name of the Son, is it not the Son asking through us? We all know what it is, as a matter of business, to give a power of attorney to one to act for another, to act in his name, to act by his power; and, so to speak, Christ has given to us the power of attorney to offer our prayers in his own name and by prayer to draw down from the Father those things that He is prepared to grant and glad to grant in answer to the united petitions of his children.

What petition is there that should come so close to our hearts as this: "Ask of Me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." We are met together to do this this morning. We are a small company here, but we are met here as parts of the Church universal, gathered in every land. It seems to me all through these united meetings, united in spirit though separate in body, the Church of God is collected as never in times past, to ask those things on which we are all agreed, and that we may look during this year on which we have entered for God's manifest answer to prayer in giving a great blessing in the home field and a great blessing in the foreign field; for the field is the world. It is well that home and foreign Missions should be brought together. Those whose hearts are right with God, those who are seeking to benefit humanity and to glorify the Redeemer, surely must feel an equal interest in the home work and in the foreign work. There is nothing opposed to the interests of the home work in the foreign work, and there is nothing that will further the interests of the foreign work more than successful work at home. Therefore we ask God to pour out his Spirit all over the land, to bless his people everywhere, and to grant that the spirit of Missions may prevail more widely than ever before.

In offering this petition in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, we do so realising that He Himself is working in us, that the Father will be glorified in our petitions being answered, that God will receive glory in the highest, while great blessing will prevail in answer to the prayers of his people in every part of the world. I do not think the Church of God has yet grasped the mighty power that God has given us in prayer. It has been realised in some measure, but yet how feebly. How weak our faith, how feeble our expectations. When we have the name of a good man at the back of a bill, we present that bill at the bank for payment with full expectation that it will be honoured, A doubt never enters the mind of anyone who takes a good Bank of England note to the bank that on presentation it will be honoured. Do we go to God in prayer with the same confidence and the same definiteness? If one may speak for others, it is often far otherwise. We hope, perhaps rather confidently expect, that we may receive answers, but sometimes so small is our expectation that the very prayers that we offer to God pass away from our memory, and when the answer comes, if we recognise it at all it is with surprise rather than with the confident expectation that a strong faith would have produced in us. If we believe in Him, then the Lord says we shall ask in his name what we will and it shall be granted.

There is one subject that we need to bring before God in connection with our meeting today especially, and that is, that He will deepen in the hearts of all his people, in every land, a consciousness of the great need of the unsaved, and of the great responsibility and privilege of Christians in connection with it. If the Church of the living God were only to fully arouse herself, and to realise her privilege through prayer, and her responsibility to the unsaved, there would be no difficulty whatever in fulfilling the command of the Lord Jesus Christ, in a very short time, of preaching the Gospel to every creature. How near the most remote parts of the world are brought to us now! The first time I went to China, thirty years ago, we were only a few days short of six months on the way; now six weeks is quite sufficient to make the same journey, and every distant part of the world is brought very near to us in point of time as regards travel.

And then, how many languages that were unwritten 30 or 40 years ago, have been reduced to writing. With what comparative ease the languages of all the great nations can be acquired now, compared with the toil and labour those who set themselves to study those languages originally had to pass through. We are amazed at the toil of Dr. Morrison and of others, who, in other lands, commenced their work under the most trying and disadvantageous circumstances. Now a very few months will put a student in a position that formerly required years of toil and years of labour to reach, and thus in this way we are brought nearer to the great needs of humanity.

How wonderfully God has been opening up the various parts of the world in answer to the prayers of his people, and in a remarkable manner, since this week of prayer was instituted. How wonderfully every land in the world has been opening up since that time, and how much has been done in the way of speading the Gospel. Then how closed China was, now how open. Then there was no access to Thibet, now both on the east and west there is no difficulty in coming in contact with the Thibetans. Then Corea was a closed territory, and also Japan; now both are opened. Then Africa was an unknown and unsealed continent. How wonderfully explorations and openings in Africa have gone hand in hand since then; and how much has been done in South America and North America, and indeed in every part of the world, compared with what was done before. We have been brought very near to the great needs of humanity.

Now, if the Church of God were to arouse and shake herself from her sloth and set herself at all in earnest to work, how easy it would be within the next ten years to bring the Gospel within the reach of every living man, woman, and child, in the world. There is no difficulty at all. There is wealth enough, there is energy enough in the Church of God to do it, if it were only properly applied. There is gift and talent enough to do it; all the necessary appliances are within reach, and what is wanted is that we should plead mightily with God to fill those who are already his with his Holy Spirit, and to make the work of the Master and the glory of the Master the one great object of life. If we only were in as great earnest to fulfil the command of the Lord Jesus to preach the Gospel to every creature, as we are to carry out other objects that are near and dear to our hearts, within ten years' time there would not be a man, woman, or child on the face of the globe to whom the Gospel would not have been presented.

Should we not pray, then, in regard to a responsibility so greatly increased by these enlarged facilities? There are a thousand times the facilities now for the spread of the Gospel that there were half a century ago; and are not our responsibilities increased a thousandfold thereby? There can be no doubt there has been a spread of interest of late in the cause of Missions, and as the work of God revives it will increasingly be so; but perhaps the interest is not so deep as it was at one time, and we need to pray very much that it may not be a superficial but a deep-seated principle within each one of us to live for the glory of God, and, with full consecration of all our powers to Him, to leave no stone unturned to accomplish this great object, for which we are left on the earth. "As the Father hath sent Me into the world, even so I send you."

God has given us great encouragement in the work in China. Many of you are doubtless aware how God has answered prayer in opening up all those provinces that were long sealed to the Gospel. So soon as we had men ready, so soon did God open the door. I am satisfied that God would do the same all over the world if there were men prepared. If there were men knocking at the doors the doors would be opened. When we pay a call we do not wait, without knocking, for the door to be opened. We knock, and as soon as the knock is heard the door is opened. And so it is not for us to say a certain part of the world is closed to the Gospel, and we must wait until it is opened. Why should we wait? Why not knock? No sooner will God's servants go into the closed parts of the world in the spirit of faith and prayer, than the door will be opened and access given. May God grant to us an ever-deepening sense of our responsibility, of our duty, and of our great privilege. The time is short in which to sow the seed for eternity, but the harvest will be glorious indeed.

A SERVANT'S THANK-OFFERING.—A highly respectable, first-class servant, who recently read "Miracles of Mercy," by Miss Leakey (J. F. Shaw & Co.), was deeply interested and affected by the account, and sent through her mistress 10s. for the Exeter Home, "as a thankoffering for having, by the grace of God, been kept pure until now." "Tell Miss Leakey," she said, "I have been reading her book, and I do not feel I can possibly do less than send her my little offering." If every virtuous woman would, according to her means, thus give a thankoffering to God, how much might be done for the impure.

MIDNIGHT MEETINGS IN LEEDS.—Two meetings, having for their object the reclamation of fallen women, have been held in Leeds, a noticeable feature was the presence of a number of women, who on the occasion of meetings held in Leeds about sixteen months ago, were induced to forsake the evil life they were then following, and who have since become worthy and respectable members of society. At each of the gatherings one of these young women told how grateful and happy she felt that she had been able to escape from her former wretched career. There was a good attendance on each occasion, and at the close of both there were many penitents. Nine were taken at their urgent request to suitable refuges, and the addresses of others were obtained for the purpose of future attention.

Foreign and Continental Notes.

FRANCE.

IN the year 1883, one colporteur, F. Pointet, has sold 7713 New Testaments and 78 Bibles, besides 17,355 almanacks and illustrated journals. In the same year he distributed freely 48,000 Gospels. This is a sower whom may God preserve from dangers without and within!

There is some talk among a few French Protestants of giving up the Bassuto Missions, in order more thoroughly to concentrate men and money on Algiers and Tunis. In view of the blessing given to the French Mission in South Africa, we hope they will take the advice given in the Semaine Réligieuse, and "redouble their efforts of zeal and generosity, and so fulfil their duty to both North and South Africa."

CHILI.

Rev. William Taylor says he finds Chili a much harder field for evangelistic work than India. The school work is prospering, however, and some are being converted to God, so that the work is full of hope and good cheer. At the usual services at Coquimbo two and three are brought to Christ each week.

WINNIPEG.

The New Year's reception under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. was even a greater success than was anticipated. Through the whole day the rooms were thronged with people. The hearty greeting and warm hospitality were calculated to brighten up many young men who would otherwise have spent a gloomy and despondent New Year's Day. There is no way of measuring the power for good excited by such an effort.

MEXICO.

Rev. J. M. Greene recently went on a missionary tour for seven weeks from the City of Mexico into the State of Guerero, a district so intense in its fanaticism that it required great courage to venture upon evangelistic work within its borders. Yet everywhere Mr. Greene was received with favour. During the journey he held thirty-two services, established thirteen congregations, baptized 285 persons, and thoroughly organised six churches.

NEW ENGLAND.

Young People's societies of "Christian Endeavour" have been established in many churches in northern New England, and have been the means of doing great good. They are simply an organised effort to lead young people to Christ and into his Church, establish them firmly in the faith, and set them at work for the Lord. The main point insisted upon is the weekly prayer-meeting, which each active member attends, unless necessarily detained, and takes some active part.

The Boston City Missionary Society received over $3500 from Sabbath schools and individuals in response to its appeals for funds to carry on its thanksgiving dinner charity. This enabled it to carry cheer and gladness to about 900 families, numbering 4000 persons.

SWITZERLAND.

At Geneva, the Week of Prayer was observed by a noon-day meeting. Three large evening meetings were also held; the first was devoted to the subject of prayer; the second to the observance of the Sabbath, and to temperance and social questions; and the third to the Y.M.C.A., and all work concerning childhood and youth. The reunions were closed on Sunday evening by a united celebration of the Lord's Supper. At Lausanne, also, the interest was great enough to fill two places of worship at the same time, some being present who are not usually seen at prayer-meetings, especially from among the poorer classes.—Journal Réligieux.

The Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger says the Alliance prayer-meetings were attended by extraordinarily large numbers. In twenty-four meetings an average of 400 at each place was counted.

HONG KONG.

Some German missionaries at Hong Kong have, through their Consul, sent a petition to the Governor of the two provinces of Kwang, praying him to issue an edict recommending the people to have respect to the lives and property of the German missionaries and their followers. The Governor gave a very reassuring reply, and it appears that an edict has been promulgated by the Emperor himself, so that in case of war, only the French residing in China will be obliged to quit the country. "This proclamation marks a progress so enormous that we are amazed at it, and can only say, 'Bless the Lord, for He is good, for his mercy endureth for ever.'"

ALGIERS.

The Signal gives good reports of evangelical work at Algiers. Five times in the week the réunions populaires continue to be held. Only once has there been any attempt to disturb the meetings, and then the disturbers were sought out in their own homes and reasoned with. The next Sunday the most prominent opposer again appeared at the meeting, and on being spoken to said, "M. de Rougemont, I wish I were like you. Do you think I should be here if I were not most unhappy?" Conversation and prayer followed, and it is hoped that God may make him a witness of his glorious salvation. Four young Jews have said they much like to hear Jesus talked of, and though they cannot go so far as to worship Him, they yet think "He may probably be the Messiah."

Dublin Deaf and Dumb.

THE annual meeting of the Dublin Protestant Deaf and Dumb Association was held last week. The attendance of the deaf and dumb and the general public was larger than on any former occasion. The deaf mutes seemed thoroughly to enjoy the plentiful supply of tea and cakes provided for them. After tea the chair was taken by Rev. W. Robinson, Rector of Tallaght.

Mr. Maurice Hewson, the deaf mute secretary and chaplain, presented the annual statement, in the sign and figure language, which was interpreted. I have with God's blessing been able, he said, to visit many towns in the North of Ireland in addition to carrying on the regular work of the Society in Dublin, and have met many deaf mutes in Belfast, Holywood, Dundalk, Tillystown, Loughlinstown, Slane, Drogheda, &c. They were always glad to see me, and gave great attention to the reading of God's word and prayer. I found most of my afflicted brethren in the North industrious and happy, and hope this year to visit other parts of Ireland, and read the Gospel to any deaf mutes I can find out. I am glad to say my Dublin congregation (who are nearly all here present to-night) are able to earn honest livelihoods by working at different trades, &c., and I make it part of my business to try and provide employment for the deaf and dumb of all denominations who apply to me for help.

INTEMPERANCE IN INDIA is said to be on the increase. At a Conference in London last week Mr. F. T. Atkins, Grand Worthy Chief Templar of India, said:—"If we would see the people of India raised in the social scale we must remove many abuses which are now tolerated by the Government. Since England had taken over India nothing had been done to check the sale of intoxicating liquors. He did not see a drunken native in Calcutta twenty years ago, but he could not say that now. The stills had greatly increased in number during the last seven years, in which period the Government had granted licences for 'out-still' manufactures. The out-still system had been the means of strong drink finding its way into the zenanas, had increased smuggling, and degraded all classes. The Government of India was a despotic one, and appeals from natives for reform in this matter were almost useless. Hence he wanted to call the attention of the British public and the Government to the danger attending the encouragement of the drink traffic. A resolution was passed requesting that a memorial should be sent to the Earl of Kimberley urging him to make inquiry into the relations of the Government to the drink traffic."

"That Pilot, Wise and True."

FROM A LETTER TO AN ENGINE-DRIVER IN TEXAS.

MAN oft true pleasure loses,
And benefit abuses,
But still himself excuses.

When sorrow comes to 'bide,
And in his heart to hide,
He takes a look inside.

If, then, with Gospel lamp,
He'll search within the camp,
He'll wish his sins would tramp.

But wishes are not prayers;
They never pluck the tares;
And hard the poor soul fares.

Then rain the bitter tears,
On penitential fears:
Eternity he nears.

Now mighty Christ comes in,
To cleanse away his sin,
And heavenly joys begin.

As hurries on your train,
Through dark, and wind, and rain,
Oft will you look in vain

For track, or light to guide:
Perils you know betide
Upon the route you ride.

If Christ be then by you,
That Pilot, wise and true,
Will pull you safely through.

New York, New Year, 1884. A. L. STIMSON.

Working Class Congregations.

WE have more than once spoken of New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, and its minister, Rev. J. Ossian Davies, who assumed the pastorate less than a year ago. An endeavour has been made during the past few weeks by Mr. Davies and his united and zealous people to reach their non-church-going neighbours of all classes; over 2500 houses were visited, and and probably 15,000 persons individually invited to attend meetings held nightly during the past and present week.

The result has justified the effort, and two-thirds of the large congregations have been genuine working-men and their wives, many of them evidently unaccustomed to attend such meetings, while others had previously been attracted into one or other of the Mission-rooms in the locality.

We hope these meetings will be continued, and the like method adopted in other churches and chapels in London and the country. Why should our houses of worship be the least-used buildings in the land? The gin-palace is kept open every hour allowed by law; why should not the house of prayer be open all day long for rest and meditation? And why should there not be a proclamation of the good tidings of great joy, and an after-meeting for conversation, every night?

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.—At a recent meeting of the International Arbitration and Peace Association, Mr. Hodgson Pratt reported, as the result of a special visit to Paris, that peace principles were meeting with considerable acceptance in France. The next International Conference of the Association is to be held at Berlin.

"NO INTOXICANTS."—A very comprehensive and interesting sketch in The Pall Mall Gazette, of the three suburban estates on which houses are erected by "The Artizans' Labourers' and General Dwellings Company" thus concludes: "The most remarkable fact of all, however, is that on all these three large estates there is not a single public-house, and that the inhabitants not only do not demur to this regulation of the company, but actually congratulate themselves on the existing condition of affairs, and strenuously resist all attempts to open public-houses near the estates."

A New Mission Hall in Manchester.

A WEEK of special services was held at the opening of a new Mission Hall in connection with the Boys' and Girls' Refuge, Strangeways, as part of the extension of this institution, which has already rescued some 1400 boys and girls from the streets and common lodging-houses of Manchester and Salford. It was the desire of the committee of the institution, which has for some time been engaged in active Mission work in the common lodging-houses of the city, to make these services the means of drawing to the new hall the lowest and most hopeless class by which it is surrounded.

The meetings throughout the week have been decidedly evangelistic, the hall being filled to overflowing by an audience largely composed of the class for whom it is intended. The opening service on Monday, the 14th, was taken by the Bishop of Manchester, who was surrounded by many of the clergy and other ministers. His lordship spoke in very earnest tones on "There was great joy in that city."

On Tuesday, Rev. Preb. Macdonald, the well-known earnest minister of St. Paul's, Kersal, preached a most touching and powerful sermon from Luke xv.; and on Wednesday, Dr. Barnardo spoke from Pilate's question, "What shall I do then with Jesus?", to a crowded congregation. Mr. W. P. Lockhart spoke most earnestly the next evening on the word "Salvation," showing that unless a man possessed salvation from a wasted life it was not a salvation worth the name. The Rev. H. D. Holland spoke on Friday on "Temptation," applying it specially to the drink question, and thus paving the way for the Saturday evening Gospel Temperance meeting, which was looked forward to with much interest, for the speakers were to be a number of converted colliers from some large pits in the neighbourhood. These worthy fellows, about twelve in number, have been brought out of darkness into marvellous light, chiefly through the agency of an earnest Christian gentleman, Mr. Frederick Smith, who has consecrated all his spare hours after business to work among colliers, and has been made a great blessing to that class. These twelve are Mr. Smith's body-guard, and if anyone wanted their faith strengthened in the power of the Gospel of Christ, they should hear these men tell in their own tongue "what great things the Lord had done for them."

At the close of this meeting ninety-six signed the pledge and took the blue ribbon.

The special services closed on Sunday, the 20th inst., when the hall and adjoining room was packed from end to end. A portion of the Sacred Song Association sang the Gospel, and three short addresses were given by Messrs. Kirlew, Sandiford, and Shaw.

The Refuge Hall is surrounded by a mass of ungodliness; some bad streets, containing large lodging houses, are close by, while German Jews abound. But each class was well represented at the services all through the week. Very touching was it to see, aged Jews and rough men, from the common lodging houses, joining many of the Lord's people in singing, "There is a fountain filled with blood." We cannot doubt but that joy has been in heaven during the past week over many repenting ones. The prayers of God's people are asked for a continual blessing on the work.

L. A. Shaw.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT AND BOOK SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND, in its latest report, is able to show an increased interest in the work. There are now 13 book-agents at work in 206 districts. The extracts from the letters of the colporteurs show an appreciation of the visits and books of the agents. Nearly 30,000 Bibles, and over 300,000 other books and periodicals have been circulated. The directors ask that an interest may be taken by persons living in the districts, and urge the support of the society for the prosecution of their useful and praiseworthy effort. The secretary is Rev. Geo. Douglas, 13, South St. Andrew-street, Edinburgh.

Work among Glasgow Sailors.

THE report of the sixty-first year's work of the Glasgow Seamen's Friendly Society was submitted at the annual meeting, held in the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, on Monday week. Sir James Watson occupied the chair, and he was surrounded by a large number of well-known ministers and merchants interested in Christian work.

Mr. Richard H. Hunter, the hon. secretary and treasurer, submitted the report, which stated that seven agents had been constantly at work among the sailors during the year, and eight for part of the time, and that the work had been carried on with great vigour and very great blessing. 40,000 sailors had taken advantage of the institute, while about 90,000 sailors and their friends had attended the indoor Gospel meetings, and very many had been led to the Saviour. One of the agents during the year sold to sailors 999 English and Gaelic Bibles and Testaments, and 51 foreign, in ten different languages. Upwards of 5000 ships had been visited, and services held on board many of them. The foreign sailors had been specially looked after; 120 meetings were conducted among them in different languages with blessed results. The Bethel on the south side of the Clyde has become much too small for the increasing needs of the work; ground was purchased at a cost of £2000, and a new chapel, reading and recreation rooms, coffee-rooms, and library, with rooms for distressed seamen are now erected, and will be opened very shortly. £4750 have been subscribed towards this object, but £750 to £1000 is still needed to open the premises free of debt; it is hoped that this will soon be provided. Upwards of £1500 was given for the general fund, and £300 for the relief of the widows and orphans of seamen, but all was required. The port is so rapidly extending that the directors feel it is necessary to press on and increase the work, so that all sailors coming to Glasgow will be brought under the influence of the Gospel.

Sir James Watson said there was no class of the community more worthy of the respect and sympathy and encouragement of the public than our seamen. It was well known that the seamen when they came ashore were in danger of falling into the hands of vicious and depraved persons, by whom they were often misled and robbed, and the efforts of this society in endeavouring to shield them from such dangers could not be too highly commended.

Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod said our country depended in a large measure upon our seamen. Their life was one full of romance and full of peril—a life that called for a high sense of duty, and for much chivalry and self-sacrifice. He did not believe there was any set of men more open to kindness than the sailors, and they did not get it often at sea.

Rev. Mr. Johnston spoke of the necessity of providing the sailors with something like a home when they were on shore, and surrounding them with friends. Mr. James Campbell, of Pilichewan, said it was the duty of Christian people to try how many luxuries they could deny themselves, and give during their lifetime as much as possible to all work of this kind.

Mr. J. Campbell White urged that more money should be placed at the disposal of the ladies who gave their time in visiting the widows and orphans of the seamen; and Mr. Alexander Allan, the chairman of the society, said that from his personal experience he felt it was impossible to over-estimate the value of this work.

Mr. R. H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow, will be glad to give further information regarding the work, or to receive any help.

BLIND POOR IN LONDON.—The annual entertainment to blind poor in London and suburbs, given by the Christian Blind Relief Society, took place last week at the East London Tabernacle (Mr. Archibald G. Brown's), Mile-end-road. There were about 550 blind persons present, and about 1000 guests sat down altogether to tea. Each blind person, as he or she left the meeting, was presented with a shilling. The society has at present 140 pensioners on its list, and is much in need of funds.

Christian Fellowship Meetings.

ON Tuesday, the 15th inst., a company of Christians met together at the Drill Hall, Malvern, for mutual edification by a local Christian, who for some years past has arranged for similar gatherings; union with the Lord Jesus Christ being the only ground of communion. The meeting was thrown open to those who were led by the Spirit of God in exhortation, &c. Mr. Nelson urged the advantages of a recognition of the fact that Christians of every sect are one in Christ Jesus, and should seek to cultivate a spirit of brotherly love and communion. The cheering fact was mentioned that sectarian walls are not now so high as formerly, hence it is possible to hold an interchange of experience which was impossible thirty or forty years ago.

Gospel Temperance.

EDINBURGH.

NO less than ten of the Presbyterian churches in this city have adopted the use of non-alcoholic wine at the Lord's Supper.

STIRLING.

Mr. T. E. Murphy, with other friends, had a six days' Gospel temperance mission at Stirling, N.B. The audiences were good, and the exhortations of the various speakers made an evident—we trust a lasting—impression.

LONGTON.

The Mission held here by Mr. A. G. Marment resulted in over 400 pledges. Mr. Marment spoke at Hanley on Sunday, January 20, at the Imperial Circus in the afternoon to about 4500 persons, and in the evening to nearly 6000 persons. Mr. Marment would be glad of tracts for distribution; they may be sent to him at 40, Ricardo street, Dresden, Longton, Staffordshire.

DULWICH.

On Wednesday, the 11th inst., the ladies' committee of the Barry-road Temperance Society held a meeting in the Wesleyan Church reception-room, when an address was given by Mrs. Bradley, who very clearly proved by facts the awful results from the use of intoxicating drinks. The meeting was well attended, and pledges and ribbons were taken at the close, and some temperance literature circulated.

MISSIONS IN PUBLIC HALLS.

The Mission, promoted by the committee at Hoxton Hall, held in Victoria Baths, Peckham, was concluded on Sunday, the 20th inst., by two services of song by Professor André's Alpine choir, that in the evening being attended by 1700 persons. The meetings during the week were addressed by Mr. William Noble, and others, resulting in 457 pledges. The third Mission of the series is at present in progress at Bermondsey Town Hall, having commenced with a special address by Mr. William Rains, under the auspices of the usual Sunday Service Committee.

SHOEBURYNESS.

A week's Gospel Temperance Mission has just been concluded here, and with very encouraging results. The speaker of the week was Mr. George Blaiklock, assisted by local ministers and others. The meetings throughout were crowded by most attentive audiences, and towards the end especially great numbers had to be turned away for want of room. Over 260 pledges were taken, and many were induced to don the blue ribbon who before entering the meeting had declared themselves fully resolved never to do so. The work thus auspiciously begun has already been heartily taken up by others on the spot, and gives promise of being at once consolidated and extended.

FOOD FOR THE POOR.—Under the auspices of the Prince of Wales, Sir Edmund Johnson and other gentlemen have taken a large site in Limehouse, near the West India Docks, for the purpose of assisting the poor in that district. The idea (says The Citizen) is to establish a kitchen on a large scale, cook dinners for the labouring classes, and send out the food in carts to the homes and places of work of those it is intended to help.

WELSH PREACHERS and PREACHING.

LAST Monday evening Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of New Court Chapel, Finsbury-park, lectured to the young men at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. on "Christmas Evans," the far-famed Welsh preacher. In his introduction the lecturer had some very interesting things to say about Welsh preachers and preaching generally. Being himself an ardent Welshman and a preacher, and having such a congenial topic, it is needless to say that the lecture was entertaining and edifying to a very high degree. We are glad to be able to present our readers with some portions of Mr. Davies' eloquent utterances:—

"Wales has been made what it is by those fiery preachers who moved through the land like spiritual volcanoes—men whose words were thunderbolts, and whose voices were storms of power. To those who decry the sermon we would say: 'See what the sermon has done for Wales.' It was the trumpet-blast of Vavasor Powell, and Walter Cradoc, and Dr. Rowlands, and Howell Harris that awoke the Principality from the dead. Before the advent of these holy men it was a region of darkness and the shadow of death. The few who possessed the Bible treated it more as a dream book than as a book for serious study. An old man suffering from asthma would put it under his pillow for three nights in order to drive away the complaint! A farmer had a sick cow; he gave her a dose of medicine, and then read for her edification a chapter out of his charmed book, and the cow (so they said) was perfectly cured! A clergyman went to see a sick man one day, with his Bible and Prayer-book in a green bag. Said the man's wife: 'What have you in this bag?' 'A Bible.' 'Well, heaven be praised,' said she, 'there never was one in our house before, and there never was any need of it!' Of course, she treated the Bible as a charm-book, and nothing more.

"The moral night was dark and terrible until these God-kindled torches appeared. Dr. Rowlands, the so-called 'mad parson' of Llangeitho, in Cardiganshire, was the brightest of these great lights. He preached until his words echoed in cottages, and farms, and barns, and churches—the whole country was in a holy blaze! Rowlands had a voice of great compass and melody, and sometimes, in the middle of his sermon, he would break down with weeping, and all the congregation would weep with him. Llangeitho was a very sequestered spot in Cardiganshire, and the roads leading to it were almost impassable; but on a Sunday morning you would find from 2000 to 3000 persons from all parts assembled there to hear the simple Gospel, unadorned with gorgeous ritualism or classic culture. Some of them would travel 200 miles going and coming, and would brave the torrents, the snows, and the piercing frost winds! It is computed that about 100 of those who were saved under Dr. Rowland's preaching became ministers of the Gospel. I do not hesitate to say that the Christian pulpit has made Wales what it is to-day."

Mr. Davies attributes the extensive growth of "Nonconformity" in the Principality to the fact that many of the clergy appointed to minister in Episcopalian pulpits were ignorant of the native tongue. Some of these good men struggled bravely to master the vernacular, but with scant success. Amusing stories are told of their blunders; here are two instances cited by the lecturer. Only the other day, he said, an English Archdeacon was reading in public a Welsh phrase, the English equivalent of which is "the earth and the sky." By some ingenuity of mispronunciation the words that fell on the ears of his astonished audience were those that stand for "two hen's eggs and two crows' eggs"! Another Welsh-Englishman, through a similar mishap transmogrified "Hail, King of the Jews," into "the old straw cow of the King of Ireland"! Surely with good cause does Mr. Davies lay down the axiom that none but Welshmen should be placed as pastors over Welsh flocks.

Proceeding to unfold the chief characteristics of Welsh preaching, the lecturer said: "My English friends will pardon me when I say that there is more heart force in the Welsh pulpit than you find in the majority of English pulpits. The latter is more scholastic and refined; the former is more weird, forcible, rugged, and poetic. I suppose those stern mountains and wild torrents have something to do with the tempestuous force of our pulpit oratory. Another characteristic of Welsh preaching is fire. A dull, drawling, soporific, insipid, monotonous preacher is detested by the Welsh peasantry. Alas! that there should be so many of us like the parson in the Laureate's ditty:—

> "An' I'eerd 'um a bummin awaäy
> Loike a buzzard-clock ower my 'eäd,
> An' I niver knaw'd whot a meän'd,
> But I thowt a 'ad summut to saäy,
> An' I thowt a said whot a owt to a said
> An' I coom'd awaäy."

"Another marked characteristic of Welsh preaching is its pointedness. The conscience is always aimed at. The old preachers pointed their arrows straight at the heart, they made the greatest sinners fearfully uneasy, they sent the fire into their false refuges, they drove them out of their lurking places, they disarmed them, and at last they vanquished them. They never forgot to appeal to the sinner's conscience. Louis XIV. once said to Massilon, 'I have heard many great preachers, and I was always delighted with them; but when I listen to you I am always disgusted with myself, for you show me my character.' Our old preachers seldom failed to make men displeased with themselves, and this was the secret of their success in the land of the mountains. Hard-hearted sinners would faint away under the heart-piercing appeals of these grand old evangelists.

"We are not ashamed of our rude evangelists of the past. Their holy feet have made the mountains of Wales beautiful for ever, and they have their stately monuments on hillsides and in valleys. For what are our Pisgahs, and Hermons, and Tabors, and Ebenezers but the monuments of their faithfulness to the Master's flag? Let Bohemia boast of its John Huss, let Germany proudly boast of its Luther, let Geneva boast of its Calvin, let France boast of its Rassillion, let England boast of its Whitfield, let Scotland boast of its John Knox, who in his pulpit was a mightier monarch than any on her throne. All these countries have a right to boast of their great preachers! But little Wales need not hang her harp on the willows while Snowdon's peak pierces the sky. Walter Cradoc, and Vavasor Powell, and William Worth, and Dr. Rowlands, and Howell Harris, and John Elias, and Williams of Wern, and Christmas Evans will stand in the forefront of the servants of the living God. Long may the Welsh pulpit retain its naturalness, its heart-force, its fire, and its power of awakening the conscience, and never may that dear old land depart from the simple truth as it is in Jesus!"

We have not space at command to quote from Mr. Davies' vivid sketch of the life and personal characteristics of Christmas Evans. The main outlines of these are tolerably well known to the reading public, through the biographies by Rev. Paxton Hood and others. It was at a great open-air conclave that Christmas Evans first came into prominence as a preacher. Mr. Davies thus described one of these memorable gatherings:—

"Do you know what a Welsh 'Association' is? Well, it is the Welsh passover, when all the tribes ascend for open-air worship. Two or three counties unite as a rule to hold a grand open-air preaching festival. A stage is erected in a convenient field, and sometimes eighty or one hundred ministers may be seen on this stage supporting those who are invited to preach. For weeks prior to the meetings the Association is the topic of conversation in the field, and in the barns and farm kitchens, and in the smithy, and in the cobbler's shop. Who is coming? Is Mr. So-and-So coming? And when the great day arrives, the whole country, for twenty miles round, turns out: the fields are all deserted for the day, and all the farms entrusted to the juniors. The roads are filled with worshippers in brakes and waggons, in phaetons and gigs, in market carts and donkey carts; some are upon horses, others upon mules, and others upon donkeys, and the majority on foot—all making for the Association field, and all expecting a rare Gospel feast. It is not unusual to see 7,000 or 8,000 thus assembled in quiet country districts.

"As soon as a popular man stands up to preach, he is the focus of thousands of eyes! How they watch his every movement! Some of them look upon him as almost superhuman. It is not difficult to make an impression at such a time; the people are expectant, and their hearts open just as the eyelids of the lily open to the first rays of dawn. How the preachers roll forth their Welsh oratory in all its masculine grandeur! How clearly they enunciate! How fervently they declaim! How earnestly they appeal! How beautifully their cadences float on the perfumed summer breezes!

"The Welsh sermon, as a rule, grows in power of thought and language and eloquence until at last it breaks into a furious tempest, and the audience is left vibrating like a harp. Oh! I have seen some glorious Association meetings. Strong men mingling their tears with those of the preacher, groans, shouts of joy. I have seen whole audiences carried off by the resistless tide of sacred eloquence, their cries of 'Hallelujah!' and 'Thank the Lord!' drowning for a time the preacher's sonorous voice. These were the times of the Lord's right hand."

We must make room for the fine peroration of an intensely interesting lecture; we advise all who may learn of its re-delivery and who desire a real treat, to go and hear for themselves:—

"Christmas Evans left poor Wales mourning as a widow, but God has not forsaken it. The Gospel still rings melodiously among its towering mountains. Our judges have given to it the name of 'the land of the white gloves'; at county assizes they frequently receive white gloves, as a proof of the social purity of the land. Our superstitions are fast disappearing. The gaols of Cardigan, Flint, Dolgelly, Pembroke, and Radnor have been converted into dwelling houses because the prisoners were so few. Our Sunday is observed, and 80 per cent. of our population attend the Lord's house. Our public-houses are closed on the Lord's Day. Our Sunday-schools are more prosperous than ever. Our pulpits are better filled than ever by men of eloquence and of might; our congregations were never so large, so intelligent, and so attentive as they are now. We have no Biggars and Healys disturbing our peace; we have no Phœnix Park murders disgracing our annals; we have no O'Donovan Rossas preaching dynamite and daggers; we have no infernal league for the destruction of landlordism, and the prostitution of liberty.

"And what has produced these sublime results? Not the statesman, with his tongue of eloquence; not the soldier, with his flashing sabre; not the judge, with his spotless ermine; not the magistrate, with his armorial bearings; not the schoolmaster, with his grammar and arithmetic; not the policeman, with his uniform and truncheon. No! but the Christian ministers and lay preachers, who, with tongues of fire, have for over 100 years preached 'the old, old story of Jesus and his love.' Among those sons of the mighty, no nobler herald, no sublimer poet-preacher, no bolder sin-hater, no more thrilling orator appeared than Christmas Evans, of Anglesea, the John Bunyan of Wales."

THE TYROL.—A magic lantern with slides for Scripture and other lectures is greatly needed by a Christian labourer in the Tyrol. Contributions may be sent to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 15, Beresford-road, Highbury New Park, N.

TORQUAY HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT.—DEAR SIR,—Will you please allow me space in your columns to state that I have resigned the position of Physician to the "Torquay Hydropathic Establishment," and have now no connection whatever with that institution.—Faithfully yours,

Letters to the Editor.

ON KEEPING CLOSE TO SCRIPTURE.

SIR,—I hope my beloved brother, Mr. James Van Sommer, will not think that I am forgetting a friendship of forty years, if I ask him to reconsider his remarks in THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 10 last, page 18.

(1) The Great White Throne.—The Book of Life is opened, indeed; but what proof is there that one single name of that multitude of dead is found therein? May not this Book be opened (ver. 15) expressly to supply this damning negative evidence?

(2) The βῆμα of Christ.—My friend Mr. Robert Nelson has replied to the error, "that all, converted and unconverted, are to appear before this judgment-seat;"—an error exceedingly prevalent, though I do not see that Mr. Van Sommer says this. That the Bema concerns believers only, and only in the aspect of servants, is clear from the connection; where motives for faithful service are arrayed, from iv. 7 onward. At v. 9 the Apostle shows that a believer's ambition (φιλοτιμούμεθα) is to be well-pleasing to the Lord [Christ]; and adds, "for we must all stand," &c. Why "for," if he is not still speaking of servant-saints? But the English Version does not quite accurately render another clause of this verse. Literally it reads: "——in order that each may receive the things, by means of the body, for what he did——." The grammar surely requires this construction. And the careful mention of the "body" (the raised body, doubtless), in which this reward is to be received is in harmony with what had just before been said, about being "clothed-upon." The passage is thus brought into harmony with other important Scriptures, such as Matt. xxv. 13—30, Luke xix. 12—27, 1 Cor. iii. 11—15; while it does not contradict the assurance of our Lord, in John v. 24, that the believer "shall not come into judgment (εἰς κρίσιν)";—i.e., a judgment whose issues are life and death; what we may call a criminal court: this Bema being exclusively a civil court, dealing only with reward, and not touching life. The believer is already "passed into life;" and he that suffers loss "shall be saved," if "through fire."

(3) Mr. Van Sommer seems to consider it unscriptural,—"sowing imaginary ideas,"—to suggest "that we may have to decide upon the eternal destiny of anyone."

But the Holy Ghost, by Paul (1 Cor. vi. 1—3), not only asserts that the saints shall judge the world, but wonders that the Corinthians did not know this. These "saints," too, he calls "you" in the next clause; even the naughty, perverse, quarrelling, carnal, puffed-up, wrong-doing, heretical believers, that constituted the Church in that luxurious city. To them he says, "The world shall be judged by you!" Even the very angels (see Gen. vi. 2; Jude 6) are to receive their final doom from us, the saints.

Yet why ought the Corinthians to have known all this before Paul wrote his letter? Multitudes of believers, I fear, do not know it now. Surely they knew that the Father hath committed all judgment to the Son, judging none Himself (John v. 22). And had they not been taught the full, indissoluble union of every believer with the risen Son, so that "we are members of his body; [made] out of his flesh, and out of his bones"? And also, corporately, that "the Church is his body, the filling up (τὸ πλήρωμα) of Him that filleth all" (Eph. v. 30; i. 23). Only add Rev. iii. 21, and every glory that belongs to the throne of the glorified God-man is spread before the wondering eyes of the tried, tempted, struggling believer!

OBITUARY.—Mrs. Thomas Needham, the wife of Rev. T. Needham, and sister-in-law of Mr. George Needham, has recently fallen asleep, after much patient suffering. She died at Asheville, North Carolina, on January 1, whither she had gone in search of health. Her faith was firm, and her end was peace. Mr. George Needham is now carrying on the services inaugurated by his brother at Asheville.

Liverpool Sheltering Homes.

THE annual meeting of this institution was held on the 21st inst. in the Town Hall, which was crowded. Several hymns were sung by some 125 children, recently admitted into the Homes. The MAYOR presided, and amongst those present were the Bishop of Liverpool, Mr. Stephen Williamson, M.P., Rev. R. Hobson, Dr. Knox, Dr. Townser, Professor Blackie, &c.

The MAYOR urged those friends who had never visited the Sheltering Homes to do so occasionally; it would awaken some of the tenderest sympathies of the human heart more powerfully than eloquent sermons or finely-turned speeches. He trusted the work Mrs. Birt was engaged in would continue to excite more and more their practical sympathy.

Mrs. BIRT said that during the past year 230 children had been admitted; 180 of these were successfully carried through and placed into happy homes in Canada, besides a great number of others not emigrated, but under training, and assisted for longer or shorter periods until situations were found for them. They had received over 800 good applications from Canada for children. The visitation of the young emigrants already settled there greatly encouraged the committee to prosecute the work with increased vigour. She hoped Liverpool would be roused to its importance, and contribute the requisite means for its extension.

The Treasurer read the financial statement, from which it appeared that the institution was in a thriving and hopeful condition.

Mr. S. WILLIAMSON earnestly appealed for liberality, in order to enable the Committee to carry on the work. The Bishop of LIVERPOOL said that of all the admirable institutions in Liverpool, he had seen none that appeared to him more deserving of the support of the public. Rev. R. H. LUNDIE said he had visited many of the homes in Canada where the children had been placed. Professor BLACKIE thus ended a long and interesting speech: "To go into the streets of Liverpool, look upon the castaway weeds of humanity, pluck them up, nurse them, put them into hothouses, is something that can only be done by those who live in the most purified atmosphere of the highest Christianity."

Notices of Books, &c.

"GO FORWARD" is the title of a New Year's address by Rev. James Stephens. 2d. J. F. Shaw & Co. It is specially addressed to young Christians.

A SHORT EXPOSITION OF MASSAGE as a Curative Agency, and of the Physiological Principles on which it is founded. Baillière, Tindall and Cox. 6d. This little book should be highly prized in every family, for the strong light which it sheds upon the importance of perfect circulation of the blood. No one can doubt that "Massage," or "Shampooing," is a preserver, as well as a restorer of health.

The Edinburgh Health Society has issued a useful penny series under the title of "Health Lectures for the People." The specimen before us, entitled PHYSICAL EXERCISE: ITS USE AND ABUSE, considers the question in relation to school life, based upon a large amount of testimony gathered from eminent educationalists all over the country. The information it contains is valuable to all parents and teachers.

THE ROYAL CUP-BEARER; OR, LESSONS FROM THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAH. By Rev. THOMAS ROUSON. E. Stock. A very useful, instructive, and pleasing volume. The author has succeeded in producing a book eminently calculated to stimulate Christian zeal, and to lead the mind and heart to devout practical recognition of the need there is for faithful and courageous action on the part of all the people of God in dealing with the difficulties of these times. Sound exposition, evangelical tone, and no little freshness characterise this treatise on the life of the cup-bearer in the court of Artaxerxes.

THE GREAT COMMANDMENT. By CAROLINE FRY. Whiting & Co., Sardinia-street, W. It is well that the memory of one so gifted, and withal so gracious, as the authoress of this book should be revived, so that even on this ground we are glad to see a reprint of one of her works. Her life was love; she was, therefore, well qualified to write of that first of all graces. The book abounds in passages of great beauty, rare pathos, and spiritual force. The reader cannot fail to be enlightened, quickened, and drawn heavenward by its perusal. There certainly is no theme that the Church more needs to be reminded of, and this book is well adapted to enforce the lesson.

A CHAPTER OF SCIENCE; OR, WHAT IS A LAW OF NATURE? Six Lectures to Working Men. By PROFESSOR JAMES STUART, M.A., Cambridge. Christian Knowledge Society. Those who know Professor Stuart only as an ardent politician, or as a prominent worker in the cause of social reform, will be agreeably interested to know that he is as much at home in the realms of science, and one of the first mathematicians of the day. These lectures present the answer as to what constitutes a law of nature in a thoroughly original aspect, interesting to others beside working men; they will be particularly relished by anyone who enjoys a close and well-reasoned argument. The fourth lecture is interwoven with bits of biography concerning the men whose successive discoveries in astronomical science have been of such vast importance to the world.

POLAND: HER GLORY, HER SUFFERINGS, HER OVERTHROW. By Professor KALIXT WOLSKI. Kerby & Endean. We have here a concise history of Poland, a history of war, bloodshed, and misrule; from the earliest authentic records there does not appear to have been one single reign in which Poland was not at war with one or other of her immediate neighbours. Provinces obtained at the point of the sword in one generation were lost by the same means in the next, to be again seized upon the first opportunity. To sum up, the glory of Poland seems to have lain in the success of these raids, her sufferings ensued from the reprisals which followed, while her overthrow was caused as much by the want of just and equal laws and by the internal disunion of her people, as by the greed and rapacity of her neighbours, to which latter cause it is of course ascribed. The writer is a member of the Polish Literary Society of Paris, and cherishes the hope that "Poland will again play a brilliant part in the history of Europe." May we not hope that, grown wiser by past sufferings, Poland may rather seek to perpetuate a future renown in the arts of peace, which are only incidentally alluded to in this volume.

Evangelical Society of France.

THE services held on the occasion of the dedication of the new chapel of Fouqueure, Charente, have had a lasting influence on several persons. Fifteen years ago, the schoolmaster of F——, when on his deathbed, gave a bible to the daughter of a man named A, which he entreated her to read, saying that she would find in it what he himself had found, namely, peace to her soul. It is now six years since this young girl died of consumption, at the age of eighteen. She, also, on her death-bed begged of her mother to read the Bible, which had been to her the first and best of books. The afflicted parents read the Word of God, at first in remembrance of their only child, but they soon took pleasure in its perusal, and now they cannot do without it. They openly proclaim their faith in Jesus. The department of the Charente sadly needs the light of the Gospel.

In the adjoining department of the Creuse, the inhabitants are Freethinkers. The men go to Paris and work as masons, there they assist at meetings held by socialists and atheists, and return home with high and ridiculous theories about or against God. "All you have said is false," said one of these learned Freethinkers to our evangelist one evening after a meeting. The evangelist replies, explains, then asks each auditor his opinion. All the men present, except two, side with the opponent. Nevertheless, the same evangelist presided the other day at the funeral of one who, formerly an infidel, had been brought to the knowledge of Christ, and had for many years sought to bring his fellow-men to hear the Gospel preached.

At Guéret, the chief town of this department, one evening lately, ten charcoal burners entered the meeting-house, most likely seeking shelter from the inclemency of the weather. Their master, affected by what he had heard, returned several times, and now has frequent intercourse with the pastor, and contributes in favour of the Evangelisation Society. Where is the Christian who, knowing the value of redemption, would say, After all, it is only one soul saved? Must we not, therefore, continue to seek those who are lost? At Auxerre, Yonne, the agent has family worship at friends' houses in two of the suburbs of the town, where at least a dozen of the neighbours assist. At Clamecy, Nièvre, three young men approached the Lord's table on Christmas day; one of these walked sixteen kilometres every day for more than a year, that he might assist at the Bible-classes.

It is just when God blesses here and there the labours of the society, when the increase of infidelity demands the twofold efforts of Christians, that fearful pecuniary difficulties paralyse the society. This month, January, 1884, the difference between the expenses and the receipts is only £800, while in January, 1883, it was £1760. "The affairs of the society are at present directed with great prudence and strict economy.' Unfortunately, the deficit is increased by old debts. Who will come to the aid of our devoted agents, so poorly remunerated, of our noble work, which we believe to be a holy one?

H. MOURON, Secretary.

BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK IN ISLINGTON.—The work done by this agency embraces the sale of Bibles and good books and preaching the Gospel in the streets, besides the circulation of tracts. The work is not self supporting. Contributions are solicited, and may be sent to Rev. F. Jewell, 93, Packington-street, Islington, N.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Mr. Wilkinson, 179, Mildmay-road, London, N., writes: Messrs. Baron and Barnett leave London on Tuesday, 29th inst, on an itinerant Gospel Mission to the Jews in Cheltenham, Cardiff, and Swansea. We shall be grateful prayers and co-operation of Christians residing in the towns to be visited. Clergy and ministers would find this a good opportunity for gaining an introduction to the Jews in their own town.

Y.M.C.A. of New York.

DEAR SIR,—We have been led to rejoice greatly because of the divine blessing on the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Our field is about 450 miles in one direction and 300 in the other. Here we have in all the principal cities an organised effort for young men.

Seven years ago we had in the state of New York 54 associations, now we have 104. Then we had 16 general secretaries employed, now we have 66. Then there were 5 buildings, now there are 14, valued at about one million dollars. Then we had 1 railroad branch, now at 13 points our work is organised among railway men. At that time but two associations were organised in the colleges of our state, now associations are actively at work to save their fellow-students in 10 of our colleges. At that time many of our young men were more anxious to hold great meetings than to definitely reach and save young men one by one. This has largely passed away, and now in all parts of our work we have an earnest band who are leading individual souls to the blessed Master. For all these things we rejoice and praise God, and ask your readers to especially pray for this work in our State.

GEO. A. HALL, State Secretary.

Evangelisation in Australia.

THE following extracts from a letter by an English naval officer who has long lived in that colony, and is now in his 90th year, were published in Australia at the close of Mrs. Hampson's Mission:—

"The question now appears to be, how is this awakening to be kept alive? what succession is to follow? Some forty years back, we formed a Colonial Missionary Society on evangelical principles; and subsequently a similar union, in which clergymen of the various denominations united; but both were premature, and were therefore short-lived. May we not now resuscitate such a mission? Let us cast aside our divisions, enfeebling the cause of Christ and alienating souls from the Gospel, and unite in spreading abroad Christian fellowship; adopting things essential, and exercising charity in things non-essential, in the spirit of St. Paul (Rom. xiv. and xv.)

"From our disunion, which God forbid we should continue to perpetuate, we increase expense, we fail for agency, we perpetuate disunions, and spread them broadcast through future generations, upon questions which all broad-minded Christians feel pained in, and subjects of reproach in which infidels rejoice and the devil triumphs. I therefore propose a Colonial Missionary Association, such as was contemplated years ago. I have yet the documents, and will be glad to meet those who may be influenced by a Catholic Christian spirit to consider the proposal. Let us remember that the young converts made under Mrs. Hampson's ministry need fostering care, and to feed the babes in Christ with the pure milk of the Gospel. Old as I am, I am ready to devote myself to the cause. RICHARD SADLEIR, Capt. R.N.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing on services at Brayford, Stoke Rivers, and Bratton Flemming, North Devon, from Jan. 6 to 17.——For much blessing attending a twenty-one days' Mission at the Congregational Chapel, Milborne Port, Somerset, conducted by Mr. Thomas Wales.

PRAYER.—For an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the district of Heath-row, Harmondsworth, Middlesex.——For a series of meetings in Edinburgh for the deepening of spiritual life, between Feb. 18 and 23.——For the support of British Syrian schools and Bible Mission.——For evangelistic meetings commencing Feb. 3, by A. M. Scott and Major Oldham.——For a blessing on Gospel services in Glasgow, conducted by Mr. George Williams, evangelist.——For blessing on the Mission to young women at Swansea, Feb. 10 to 17, to be conducted by Mr. Legge.——For blessing on a Gospel Temperance Mission to be held from Feb. 2 to 9 at Barrow-in-Furness, by Mrs Bradley.

The Edinboro' Castle.

THE new and splendid evangelistic hall at the Edinboro' Castle was opened on Monday; the Right Hon. the Earl Cairns presiding over the large assemblage in the afternoon, and S. A. Blackwood, Esq., C.B., over the larger gathering at night. The present structure is called The People's Mission Church. It seats 3500 instead of the 1500 accommodated in the former hall

The cost is about £6000, besides another £2000 for other necessary alterations and improvements. This is remarkably cheap; we question if any hall in London has been more economically built. Dr. Barnardo has received, or been promised, £5500, and has wisely determined not fully to open the church until it is free of debt. Our report of the meetings must be reserved for our next.

Young English Women in Paris.

A LONG and interesting outline of Miss Leigh's work during the past year was telegraphed to The Times of Monday last by their Paris correspondent. We extract the following:—"The Mission Homes for Young English Women in Paris held their annual meeting on Saturday at the Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, under the presidency of Dr. Bishop, the honorary physician of the Homes. The report stated that there had been 408 admissions to the establishment during the past year. The Bible-class and weekly prayer-meetings had been well attended. The free registry had received 2447 visits from those requiring situations, while the applications for governesses and servants had numbered 900. The usual caution was reiterated as to the undesirability of accepting situations abroad from advertisements and unsatisfactory agencies.

"The Young Women's Christian Association showed a decided increase. A branch home in connection with this part of the work for young women employed in shops and houses of business will soon be opened near the Madeleine. The Mission-hall, with its group of services, night-school, library, and soup-kitchen, showed a general increase upon the figures of the previous year. The Temperance Association and Band of Hope had additional members, and through the visit of Canon Wilberforce in November, the Blue Ribbon movement had been instituted. The orphanage, which the late M. Galignani built, numbers forty children, of whom a large proportion were present, and between the various speeches sang with the Kindergarten children their action and part songs. Ten more children have been received, and six have left for service during the year.

"Revs. T. H. Gill, R. W. McAll, D. de Mouilpied, and Doctors Faure and Miller, were among the speakers who bore testimony to the indomitable zeal and self-denial of the lady workers associated with Miss Leigh. The treasurer's statement was most satisfactory. Though beginning the year with a deficit of over £514, it ended with a balance in hand of £238. An interesting allusion was made in the report to the home for respectable English girls employed in Paris theatres."

JEWISH REFUGEES' AID SOCIETY.—A member of the Jerusalem Committee of this Society writes, January 2:—"In Artouf all is well, and the Gospel is making progress; but unless we can, during the winter, buy the necessary animals, implements, and seed, I do not know how we shall fare If Artouf were three times its size, we should not have room enough for all the people anxious to come to us." The Jerusalem correspondent of The Record writes, January 9:—"On the Sunday before Christmas Day three adult Jews, a Jewess, and two children, were admitted into the Christian Church by baptism. These are the first fruits of the work of Mr. Friedlander amongst the refugees."

THE BITTER CRY of OUTCAST LONDON.

FUNDS are now being raised, and are urgently needed, for the purposes indicated in the pamphlets issued by the London Congregational Union.

All communications should be addressed to the Rev. Andrew Mearns, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. Cheques should be crossed Smith, Payne, and Smiths.

Bands of Volunteer Helpers are being organised to undertake the kindly visitation of the homes of the very poor. Money specially given for relief will be used for providing food and clothing for the deserving, and in giving free dinners to poor children found to be in need of such assistance. Money sent to the General Fund will be devoted to the erection, purchase, or hire of halls or suitable premises which may serve as centres of benevolent aid as well as religious and moral instruction, and where medical advice may be gratuitously obtained, and those in real need promptly relieved.

The aim of the present movement is not sectarian. The object is to improve the homes of the poor, and to help them to healthier and happier lives.

N.B.—Clothes of every description will be gladly received by Mrs. MEARNS, 25, Oakley-street, Chelsea, S.W.

SOUL-WINNING

QUALIFICATIONS FOR IT.

AN ADDRESS BY MAJOR WHITTLE.

"Any one who reads the New Testament, especially the Acts of the Apostles, must see that the great reason for the Church existing on the earth is—to win souls. When Churches get to the point that they are not winning souls—when souls are not being born again—they get to the point mentioned in the third chapter of Revelation, 'I will spue thee out of my mouth.'"—EXTRACT.

The Life of GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

By J. R. ANDREWS,

Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell to the Death of Charles I."

In cloth (with Portrait), 1s.

Superior Edition in large type, for Presentation, cloth, bevelled boards (with Portrait), price 5s.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."—Methodist Recorder.

CHOICE SAYINGS.

Being Notes of Exposition of the Scriptures.

Revised by ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Tinted Covers, 9d.; Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.; Morocco, Gilt Edges, 3s.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in the Sword and Trowel for September, 1883, says:—"Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. His name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

"TELL JESUS."

Recollections of EMILY GOSSE.

By ANNA SHIPTON.

Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.; cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. (post free).

"Presents us with notices of a life spent in loving, intimate, and uninterrupted communion with a personal Lord. . . . We have read the book with deep interest. We would that indolent professors might read it and be quickened, and that suffering saints might read it and be comforted."—Christian Times.

"The sentiment of this book is illustrated in a pleasing narrative, in which its influence upon the experience of an eminently pious friend of the author's, and of her own, is admirably pourtrayed. It is calculated to produce a certain impression upon the hearts of true Christians that will be greatly beneficial to them."—Sword and Trowel.

NINTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.
CASE of MISS JACOBS.
(Reported by Mr. John Rayment, B.M.)

Mr. Rayment says:—"For many years I have proved the value of your inestimable medicine in my own case and that of members of my family, and in cases when, visiting the afflicted in various parts (where I have travelled in connection with Christian work), I have induced them to adopt your treatment. Your kindness in supplying medicine to the very poor at reduced cost has been a great help.

"The case of Miss J., so recently restored, by God's blessing on your advice and medicine, should be well made known. She was suffering at the time I first saw her with very severe cough, wasting of flesh, loss of appetite and all the symptoms of one fast fading away, with much mental sadness and despondency.

"After a few weeks' taking the medicine, and use of the external application ordered by you, there was a great improvement. By continuing the same for a few months, her health has been restored. She is now quite well.—JOHN RAYMENT, 10, Clarendon-place, Camberwell New-road, January 7, 1881."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D. L. Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."

The Methodist.

A SIMPLE, NATURAL, yet POTENT REMEDY.

THE most successful methods of curing disease rely more upon the healing power of Nature than upon medicinal remedies, and when the natural influence of Magnetism is allied with the recuperative force of the system, it energises the whole organism most successfully. The results accruing from its use clearly prove that Nature is the healer, and that by aiding Nature we effect a restoration as certainly as water when applied to the root vitalises every branch and leaf of a drooping plant. The general results of Odo-Magnetic Treatment establish its claim to a first place among Nature's remedies. It penetrates and permeates every atom and tissue of the living organism, every deep-seated gland; but it cannot injure the finest capillaries in the most delicate membrane. Every corpuscle of the blood is impregnated with its vitalising influence; consequently every organ of the body is simultaneously energised. This potent force of Magnetism can be made sufficiently powerful to lift several tons' weight from the earth; but by our treatment its influence on the nervous system is so subtle and intangible that it quickens life into vigorous exercise, and gives resolution of purpose to concentrate the mind upon chosen subjects of study, so harmonising the mental and physical as to restore the conscious possession of a sound mind in a sound body.

Although urging these facts, we do not wish to imply that Magnetism is a cure all; but we do say that it is a restorative calculated to alleviate and gradually eradicate all remediable weaknesses, and remove the chronic affections arising therefrom. By careful adaptation this powerful energiser becomes a remedy of the most general application. Its efficacy is now generally admitted as a controlling agent in nervous affections, and in all forms of general debility it has, perhaps, no rival in all the resources of nature. As a means of providing against the ill effects of mental and physical toil it will undoubtedly be welcomed by many; and our advice respecting its early application should be accepted by such as lack usual energy, while the help it affords to those who have already allowed health to decline till they need a cure, should leave no room for indecision as to the choice of the method of treatment they will adopt.

From Mr. W. T. MARK, 76, Partridge-road, Roath, Cardiff.

"December 20, 1883.

"I have now been under your treatment seven months for functional derangement and palpitation of the heart, especially after meals, and violent throbbing by night. I am very thankful to say that it has had the desired effect in regulating the heart's action. The good work has been going on slowly but surely, so that now, while I am writing, I hardly know I have a heart, the action is so normal. The nocturnal throbbing is vanishing almost like darkness before the day-dawn.

"Supposed incurable heart disease is so prevalent that I think sufferers should know that there is a 'balm in Gilead,' and I am glad to give my name with this statement of experience for any use you think well to make of it, and the more so because it has been in no way solicited."

Concurrent with the above will be found the following remarks of a gentleman who wrote me a short time since:—

"September 20, 1883.

"I am thankful to say your treatment has been of great service to me. Before I adopted it my heart (pulse) gave 12 good beats, and then an apparent 'miss'; now, however, my pulse is plumper and regular."

Letters commendatory of Mr. GARRATT'S treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally or by letter. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

REVIEWS.

"These simple and strong writings hold into the most vivid light especially the following truths; viz. the sphere and power of faith; the certain prevalence of prayer; the particular providence of God; the proposition that nothing is secular which is sacred enough to be mentioned to God in prayer; the necessity of continual labour for Christ; the vital importance of seizing opportunities to do good, and to illustrate in the life the difficult and Christly graces of forbearance, forgiveness, and that charity, or love, which literally 'beareth all things.' By various arguments, by numberless touching and startling incidents, these truths are brought to view. There is something in the revelation of such implicit confidence in God and His written word that staggers the philosophy of materialism, and does mightily brace the faith of believers."
The Christian at Work.

"Those readers especially, who by sorrow or suffering are 'shut in' from active service for Christ, and who often lament that they can do so little for Jesus, will find in these books much instruction and comfort, and learn something of the mysteries of God's dealings with His chastened ones. Those who may have read the books will appreciate the aptness and beauty of these remarks, and any who may yet read them will, I am persuaded, do so with an increased interest."—New York Advocate and Guardian.

THE STORY OF A KINGDOM.

GOD is the Great King. When He made man in his own image He set him over the works of his hands. But man, tempted by Satan, fell from his allegiance to God, who suffered the tempter to usurp the dominion of which he had despoiled Adam by guile and falsehood. Thus Satan, the conqueror of man, whom he led captive at his will, became the prince and god of this world.

All things were delivered unto him (as he not untruly declared (Luke iv. 6), though the ill-gotten dominion should work out his own destruction); and all creation through him was made subject to vanity.

From the moment of the fall there could no more be rest or peace until the reign of God should be re-established in the human soul, the dominion over creation recovered by man, the usurper destroyed, and the kingdom, with infinite increase of glory, be delivered again by man to God, man being raised above all created intelligences, and God being all in all. This is the goal to which revelation leads us, and it leaves us there (1 Cor. xv. 28).

The grand and glorious story of the accomplishment of this mighty redemption and restitution of all things is the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, which is preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things the angels desire to look into. This is the Good Tidings of the Kingdom of God, in its broadest aspect.

In order to comprehend the significance of the parts of a thing we must have a conception of the whole. In order to harmonise the manifold grace of God with the righteousness of God we must understand the Kingdom of God. Let the Gospel of the grace of God, which bringeth salvation, and the everlasting Gospel which commands men to "Fear God and give glory to Him, for the hour of his judgment is come," be brought into line with each other and with the Gospel of the Kingdom—the good tidings of the Reign of God—and it will be seen that the three are one. The Everlasting Gospel of his righteous grace, in which mercy and truth have met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other, is the everlasting Gospel of the kingdom of God.

Set the stationary foot of your compass upon the throne of God; the other on the beginning of Genesis; when you have described your circle, the end will be the last of Revelation, where Moses and John, the historian and the seer, clasp their hands together. The woman, the serpent, and the woman's Seed, the river and the tree of life, which we found in Genesis, meet us again in Revelation; the Adam who reigned in Paradise finds his counterpart in the King of kings and Lord of lords; the man who sinned is replaced by the sinless Man who suffered—the Lamb in the midst of the throne.

The God of Genesis, who in the beginning created the heavens and the earth, is He who in the Apocalypse sitteth upon the throne. And the rainbow of promise, the token of the covenant which God made with Noah, is seen to encircle the throne, its hue an emerald green, the characteristic colour of earth and sea.

Within the circle you have thus described is written the history of the Reign of God, so far as it relates to his highest creature, man. It tells of the temptation and the fall of man; of the discovery of his nakedness, and of his vain attempt, with flimsy leaves, to cover it from the eyes of God. It tells of the condemnation of the serpent to eternal shame, and the bruising of his head by the bruised heel of the woman's Seed. It shows the expulsion of man from his primeval home, but not without a God-provided covering, which foretells an everlasting righteousness, beneath which his guilty nakedness should disappear.

This wondrous story gives us the rehearsal in the first two sons of man of the parable of the two worshippers, the Publican and the Pharisee, and traces the two lines of men down to the great catastrophe of the Flood. Cain, the man of the earth, the man of violence, who stains the bosom of his mother-earth with his brother's blood, impresses his character upon all his sons, and though in the line of Seth there is a holy seed, all outside of this is intermingled with the evil family, and the earth is filled with the murderous violence which raged in the heart of Cain. The first great period of human history, the first era of God's government, was closed by his bringing the Flood upon the world of the ungodly.

But immediately another epoch, a new era is begun. God makes a covenant with Noah that He will not again bring a flood of waters upon the earth. Later prophecy, however, tells us that a more terrible and more effectual purgation shall take place, and that the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with fervent heat, the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up; and this destroyed creation shall be succeeded by a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

But within the long period which intervenes between the flood of water and the destruction of the world by fire, three great governmental dispensations are interposed—the legal, the evangelical, and the millennial. Or rather, we would say that from the fall to the end of the millennium there are four great epochs or dispensations—(1) From Adam to Moses without law; (2) from Moses to Christ under law; (3) from Christ's first coming to his second coming under grace; and then (4) the millennial reign of Jesus and his saints—his bride.

The first dispensation was marked by two great catastrophes, the Flood and the Confusion of Tongues. Then God called out Abram, and when He had increased him into a nation, training that nation in adversity and giving it experience of his righteous judgment and of his redeeming power, He placed them under a covenant of works, making their blessing conditional upon their obedience. We know the result—rebellion against God, rejection of his Son, blasphemy against the Holy Spirit.

Then came the dispensation of grace. The previous one had been elective—it had taken a nation from among the nations to be a peculiar people unto God. The present dispensation also is elective, but on another principle; not taking up a single nation, but taking out of all the nations, one by one, every individual who receives the Son of God as his Saviour and his Lord.

The Theocracy under the former dispensation had been disestablished because its foundation had not been laid in the hearts of the people. Therefore, in this later dispensation no attempt is made to set up a Theocracy in the world: but the foundations of the Kingdom are being deeply laid in the hearts of those who believe in the Son of God.

In the millennial dispensation this royal priesthood, this holy nation, this peculiar people, this chosen generation, will live and reign with Christ; the Theocracy will be established on a sure foundation. Like Jonathan's armour-bearer, the Church will say to Christ, "Do all that is in thy heart; turn Thee; behold I am with Thee according to thy heart." And He will say, "Or ever I was aware, my soul set me on the chariots of my willing people" (S. S. vi. 12). He will reign until He has subdued all enemies under his feet.

During that age Satan will be bound, and righteousness will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. At its close, however, Satan will be loosed, and will make one last futile attempt against the government of God. He will be overcome and cast into the lake of fire, and the dead, small and great, will be judged by Christ, who sits upon the great white throne. Then, when all things have been put under Him (i.e., under man in Christ), then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that did put all things under Him—when He shall have delivered up the Kingdom to God, even the Father—that God may be all in all.

Thus the circle of history is completed. In the beginning God put all things under the feet of Adam. The man of the earth earthy, loses it to Satan, the tempter, liar, murderer, usurper. The second Man, the Lord from heaven, expiates the sin of the first Adam, and of all those of his race who will accept the benefit; brings to nought the devil, and destroys his works, subdues all things under his feet. Thus the Man Christ Jesus recovers and restores to God the kingdom which the man Adam received from God and lost.

The whole story is one of a kingdom lost and regained, and restored to God with infinitely increased power and glory, while the creature to whom it was given, and who lost it, is raised from the earthly Eden to the Paradise of God, from a condition a little lower than the angels, to one far above all angels and principalities and powers, not only now in the image of God, but a partaker of the Divine nature, made perfect in One.

The Gospel, the good tidings first declared in Eden, and to be full-filled when the Son shall have delivered up the Kingdom to God, even the Father, is a unity throughout. It has had its progressive stages of development; but in essence it is one, from first to last. It is the Everlasting Gospel—the Gospel of the grace of God—the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God—the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. And the great joy of its good tidings consists in this: its promise that the kingdoms of this world, misruled by Satan and by man, shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever.

The chief end and object of this stupendous drama is not the glory which He receives from his creatures, but which outshines from Him unto and upon his creatures. For in this, as in all else, He is not the Receiver, but the Giver, as it is written, "The heavens declare the glory of God." The Gospel of the Kingdom is the Everlasting Gospel of the glory of the blessed God—the God of all grace.

M.

A GAMBLER SAVED.

ABOUT six years ago, at the close of a Gospel meeting in an Opera house, a young man arose to express his concern for the salvation of his soul. His manner showed deep conviction and distress. To the Secretary of a Young Men's Christian Association, who spoke to him, he confessed that he was a professional gambler, and a fugitive from justice on account of a forgery committed in a distant State. His sins trooped about him like the ghosts of the victims he had fleeced and ruined; "and the pains of hell gat hold upon him."

Of course he was promptly told, upon the authority of the Word, which liveth and abideth for ever, of God's willingness to save him (2 Peter iii. 9), of Christ's death for sinners (1 Cor. xv. 3), of his coming to seek and to save the lost (Luke xix. 10), of his readiness to save the chief of sinners (1 Tim. i. 15), of his promise to give the water of life freely to every one that thirsts (Rev. xxii. 17), of his pardon extended to a dying thief (Luke xxiii. 43), of his precious blood which cleanseth from all sin (1 John i. 7), of his tender invitation to all the labouring and heavy-laden to find in Him the rest they need (Matt. xi. 28), of his own distinct declaration, that every one who believes has everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment, but is already passed out of death into life (John v. 24).

The heart of the troubled gambler was opened to attend to these messages; he received them as true, and true for himself, and straightway peace and joy took the place of the agitation and alarm that had surged through his breast. As he was a young man of more than ordinary brightness and intelligence, injudicious friends urged him to enter at once upon active Christian work in public testimony for his Saviour. But he wisely and modestly declined, saying that he had another work to do, before he could take a prominent part in the service, which he recognised as claiming all the affections of his grateful heart, and all the energies of a life that had been worse than wasted.

He obtained employment with a Christian, to whom he frankly told his history, and gladly undertook hard manual labour, to which his delicate hands were wholly unaccustomed. His fidelity and quickness, however, soon gained him promotion to a place less arduous and more lucrative, and every dollar over that which was needed to supply his actual necessities he sent to the man he had robbed by his forgery. As the sum was considerable, the work of refunding has been long and difficult, but he persevered with unfaltering purpose, and quite recently paid back the last cent, principal and interest, which he had wrongfully taken.

In a letter received from him he says: "How merciful God has been to me after all, and from what a fate I have escaped! It seems incredible to me now that I could have been so blinded and reckless as to stake so much for so little. And yet I sometimes think that it has been in a measure God's way of waking me up from the sleep of sin. It aroused me to a realisation of how far I had gone, and where I would ultimately land; it robbed me of my peace of mind, and thus led me to seek the true place of refuge. Blessed be his name! What shall I render to Him for all his benefits? What a change since then! How complete the revolution! Instead of restlessness, now peace; instead of unhappiness and ill-content, I can now calmly look into the future, and say with perfect assurance, 'He leadeth me.' My eyes fill with tears of gratitude, of which I am not ashamed, when I think of these things, and I feel like shouting, 'Oh that men would praise the goodness of God!'"

The converted gambler is now not only honourably employed, but actively engaged in the service of Christ, with a love that never tires and a zeal that never flags.—The Truth.

For the Young.

AN ABUNDANT ENTRANCE.*

By the late Dr. RALEIGH.

"For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—2 PETER i. 11.

I HEAR you say: "What is the special use of bringing this subject before us? It is delightful to those who are in a certain state of Christian progress, or to those who are far advanced in life; but it is not very suitable to us." On the contrary, my young friends, you are the only persons, as a class, in the condition to get the whole application and benefit of this passage; you, and such as you, who have begun the Christian life in youth, and who have been going on steadily ever since.

Can we speak of an abundant entrance ministered to a man dying in the prime of life, but who has given all his strength to the world, and who is only now, amid the shadows and agonies of death, beginning to turn to the Lord? He would say: "Tell me of mercy—tell me of Him who saves 'to the uttermost.' Read to me of him who found mercy at the eleventh hour. Say nothing to me about song and triumph at heaven's gate! I have nothing corresponding to that in my life. I have burnt precious life to ashes. I have covered it with blackness. I shudder to think of it all as lost and dead. If I can get in at all, as I hope I yet may, it must be in quietness, or with only the murmur of the publican's prayer on my lips—'God be merciful to me a sinner!'"

Or, can we speak of an abundant entrance to quite old people who have turned late to the Lord, and who, with a long lost life behind them, are going away, through the mercy of God, to begin anew? Or to those who, although they began early to live the Christian life, have not lived well; who have put frivolities and passions among the virtues, and darkened and disordered the beautiful harmony of grace? No. The one highest kind of life is described here, and you who are young, with life all before you, have the opportunity of making it that one thing, and you cannot have that opportunity later.

You want to speak the language of a country to which you are going. What means do you take? Do you, having plenty of time before you, neglect the literature, the grammar, the very alphabet, saying: "I shall at the last catch up a phrase or two that will get me in at the gate of the frontier city"? If you were a husbandman, with wide rich-soiled fields lying about your house, for which you wanted a great increase in harvest time, would you loiter all through the crisp spring days, while your neighbours were busy with plough and harrow and seed-bag? In summer, would you spend your weeks smiling among the flowers or lounging under the trees, and then on an early day in the autumn, when the corn is yellowing fast in other fields, would you come out as a sower into your own? If you were captain of a ship, with orders to make direct across one of the great oceans, and if you wanted to get into port without having lost a spar, your sails all set, and your colours flying, would you, in the first instance, steer your vessel away from your course to the stormy north, and spend a year among the ice?

I am not sure that the most tender and beautiful parable that was ever spoken, that of the Prodigal Son, has not sometimes done harm by a partial and one-sided reading of it. Such an air of romance has been thrown around the poor ragged creature, and his home-coming has been so dilated upon and glorified, that the half-thought may have entered the mind of some young people: "Is it not almost worth while to be a prodigal to realise all this?" No, no, it is not worth while. The prodigal lost, in his prodigality, what he never could regain. He never lost his father's love, but he lost for the time his approbation. He never really lost his home, but he left it, and it could never be the same to him again, even when he came back to it. He lost his simplicity. He lost his purity. He lost his self-respect. True, he got these back, as far as might be; but still the loss was loss for ever, in a very real sense.

And he lost all the time he spent in the far country, and that he never got back. What did he get when he came? Everything that could be given. A wonderful welcome. The father's arms. The open house. The best robe. The ring. The shoes. The feast! But oh! how little to be desired is it all to be compared to this—"Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine!" Oh, my young friends, be wise. Begin the life work in the morning. Do it honestly; fully; without scamping it; without leaving it; without wearying in it; and your reward will be the highest and best.

I tell you again, if you want abundant entrance, you must show abundant diligence in order to gain it. If you want your life to be all saved, you must give it all to God. You have no time to lose. You have no strength to spare. Begin at once. To the undeclared and to the undecided, I say: "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." To those who have just begun, or who are now beginning, I say: "Cast the lines of your purpose high enough, far enough. Take the noblest view of the possibilities of your own life. You believe in God—believe in what God says. You believe in Christ—believe in what Christ promises to do and to be to you. Believe in going from strength to strength. Believe in a Light that shines more and more. Believe in glory, honour, and immortality."

This is a busy, fretful age; find time and make quietness to read sometimes about the golden city, and the robes washed white, and all the glory that life here borrows from the life celestial. What will perhaps do as well, read such a passage as we have been considering. Read it again and again. Again and again. Day after day. Rise up afresh and go along the line it opens. Do, and be, as far as you can, the thing that is here described; and then? You will groan, being burdened, many a time. You will struggle hard for the freedom that does not seem to come. You will sigh for the love that does not seem to warm your breast. You will look sometimes, with dim and tearful eye, for the city that will seem for the time to have disappeared. But you will struggle on. If you continue faithful, you will always be on the gaining side. God, on his part, will be faithful to his promise. He will develop his own Divine nature in you. He will see the graces in you that you cannot see, and, as his own gift, they will be owned and crowned in the peace and triumph of your latter end, and in the "entrance ministered abundantly into the everlasting Kingdom."

* FROM DAWN TO THE PERFECT DAY. Sermons by the late DR. RALEIGH. A. and C. Black.

MR. MOODY AND MR. RAINSFORD.

DIALOGUE AT CLAPHAM.

(Concluded from our last.)

MR. M.—What does it mean when it says that Christ saves "to the uttermost"?

MR. R.—That is another grand truth. Some people are troubled by the thought that they will not be able to hold out if they come to Christ. There are so many crooked ways, and pitfalls, and snares in the world; there are the power of the flesh and the snare of the devil. So they fear they will never get home. The idea of the passage is this. Suppose you are on the top of some splendid mountain, very high up. You look away to where the sun sets, and you see many a river, and many a country, and many a barren waste between. Christ is able to save you through and over them all, out and out, and beyond, to the uttermost.

MR. M.—Suppose a man came in here just out of prison; all his life he has been falling, falling, till he has become discouraged. Can Christ save him all at once?

MR. R.—It is just as easy for Christ to save a man with the weight of ten thousand sins upon him and all his chains around him, as to save a man with one sin. If a man has offended in one point, the Scripture says he is guilty of all.

MR. M.—If a man is forgiven will he go out and do the same thing to-morrow?

MR. R.—Well, I hope not. All I can say is that if we do, we shall smart for it. I have done many a thing since the Lord revealed Himself to my soul that I should not have done—I have gone backward and downward; but I have always found that it does not pay when I do anything that grieves my Heavenly Father. I think He sometimes allows us to taste the bitterness of what it is to depart from Him. And this is one of the many ways He keeps us from falling.

MR. M.—What do you consider to be the great sin of sins?

MR. R.—The Word of God tells us that there is one sin of which God alone can convince us. If I cut a man's throat or if I steal, it does not need God to convince me that that is a sin. But it takes the power of the Holy Ghost to convince me that not to receive Christ, not to love Christ, not to believe in Christ, is the sin of sins, the root of sins. Christ said, "When the Spirit is come, He will convince the world of sin, because they believe not on Me."

MR. M.—What do you mean by the Word of God?

MR. R.—The Son of God is the Word of God incarnate; the Bible is the Word of God written. The one is the Word of God in my nature, the other is the Word of God in my language.

MR. M.—If a man receives the Word of God into his heart, what benefit is it to him, right here to-night?

MR. R.—The Father and the Son will make their abode with him, and he will be the temple of the Holy Ghost. Where he goes the whole Trinity goes, and all the promises are his. "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

MR. M.—Who is it that judges a man to be unworthy of eternal life?

MR. R.—Himself!! There is a verse in Acts xiii. that is worth remembering: "Seeing that ye put it [the Word of God] from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles" (ver. 46). God does not judge us unworthy. He has given his Son for our salvation. When a man puts away the Word of God from him and refuses to receive Christ into his heart, he judges himself unworthy of salvation.

MR. M.—I understand, then, that if a man rejects Christ to-night, he passes judgment on himself as unworthy of eternal life?

MR. R.—He is judging himself unworthy, while God does not so consider him. God says you are welcome to eternal life.

MR. M.—If anyone here wants to please God to-night, how can they do it?

MR. R.—God delights in mercy. Come to God and claim his mercy in Christ, and you will delight his heart.

MR. M.—Suppose a man says he is not elected?

MR. R.—Do you remember the story of the woman of Canaan? Poor soul, she had come a long journey. She asked the Lord to have mercy on her afflicted child. He wanted to try her faith, and He said: "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." That looked as if He had Himself told her that she was not one of the elect. But she came and worshipped Him, saying, "Lord help me," and He helped her there and then. No; there is no election separating between the sinner and Christ.

MR. M.—Say that again.

MR. R.—There is no election separating between the sinner and Christ.

MR. M.—What is there between the sinner and Christ?

MR. R.—Mercy!!! Mercy!!!

MR. M.—That brings us near to Christ?

MR. R.—So near that we cannot be nearer. But we must claim it. In John vi. 39, 40, we get God's teaching about election. "This is the Father's will which hath sent Me, that of all which He hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." He will do his work, you may depend upon it. Then in the next verse we read: "And this is the Father's will which hath sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise Him up at the last day." That is the part I am to take, and when I have done so I shall know the Father's will concerning me.

MR. M.—What do you mean by the new birth?

MR. R.—I judge it by what I know of the old birth. I was born of human parents into the human family, so I belong to Adam's race by nature and by generation, and I inherit Adam's sin and curse accordingly. The new birth is from my union by faith with the second Adam; but this is by grace, not nature; and when I receive the Lord Jesus Christ I am born of God, not by generation but by regeneration. As I am united to the first Adam by nature and generation, so I am united by faith through grace and regeneration to the second Adam, and I inherit all his fulness accordingly.

MR. M.—What is the meaning of being saved by the blood?

MR. R.—A gentleman asked me that in the inquiry-room: "What do you mean by the blood?" It is the poured-out life of the Son of God—forfeited as the atonement for sinners' sins.

MR. M.—Is it available now?

MR. R.—Yes, as much as ever it was.

MR. M.—You mean it is just as powerful to-day as it was 1800 years ago when He shed it?

MR. R.—If the blood of Abel cried out for vengeance against his slayer, how much more does the blood of Christ cry out for pardon for all who plead it? It cleanseth (present tense) from all sin.

MR. M.—How do we get faith?

MR. R.—By hearing God's word. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

MR. M.—How do we get the Holy Ghost?

MR. R.—In the same way as we get faith. The Holy Ghost uses the word as the chariot by which he enters the believer's soul. The Gospel is called the ministration of the spirit (2 Cor. iii. 8).

MR. M.—Is the Word of God addressed to all here?

MR. R.—"He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the Churches."

MR. M.—What is the Gospel?

MR. R.—"Good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." If our Gospel, proclaiming life, pardon, and peace, is not as applicable for salvation to the vilest harlot here as to the greatest saint in London, it is not Christ's Gospel we preach.

MR. M.—What reason does the Scripture give for the Gospel being hid to some?

MR. R.—It is "hid to them that are lost; in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine into them" (2 Cor. iv. 4). May God open all our eyes, and take away the veil of unbelief with which the devil may be blinding any of us.

MR. M.—Are there not many who give an intellectual assent to all these things, and who yet have no power and no divine life?

MR. R.—An intellectual assent is not faith. I have never found any one who really believed God's Word who did not get power in believing it. People may assent to it, but I do not admit that that is believing it. I do not think there is any man or woman here who really believes the Gospel of the grace of God, who has not been taught it by the Holy Ghost. I could easily cross-examine any one of those "intellectual believers" who imagines he believes God, but really does not, and he would break down in a few minutes.

MR. M.—For whom, then, did Christ die?

MR. R.—For the ungodly (Rom. v. 6).

MR. M.—Why is salvation obtained by faith?

MR. R.—That it might be by grace, for this cause it is of faith that it may be according to grace (Rom. iv. 16).

MR. M.—What is the meaning of Christ dying for us?

MR. R.—As our Substitute, in our place, in our stead.

MR. M.—How may a man know if he has eternal life?

MR. R.—By not treating God as if He were a liar when He tells us He has given us eternal life in his Son (1 John v. 10—12).

MR. M.—What is the means by which the new birth we were speaking of is effected?

MR. R.—James i. 18: "Of his own will begat He us with his word of truth.", 1 Pet. i. 23, 25: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, even through the Word of God, and this is the Word, which by the Gospel is preached unto you."

Navvies in Scotland.

ABOUT three hundred "navvies" and workmen employed in the construction of the Edinburgh suburban railway, were lately gathered in the Hall of the West Port Free Church to a tea and service of song, under the auspices of the newly-formed "Scottish Navvy Mission Society." A lady kindly sang to them; then followed a short address from General Nepean Smith. The well-known story, "Christie's Old Organ," arranged as a service of song, was given with marked effect by Dr. D. A. Moxey and two of his pupils, supported by an efficient choir.

The men listened with great attention; and it is hoped that the Gospel message, so plainly set forth in the touching story, may have found acceptance among its hearers. After singing "Bringing in the Sheaves," each man received one of Drummond's floral tracts.

The Society employs a Scripture-reader to work among these men, and has engaged another who will next month take up his post at Queensferry, to labour among those employed upon the works in connection with the Forth Bridge.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, Mr. A. M. Brown, W. S., 6, Shandwick-place, Edinburgh; and it is hoped that friends may be found among the Scottish readers of THE CHRISTIAN who will take a kind interest in this important work.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.—An "Anti-Sunday Travelling Union" has been formed by Miss Chase, Haddon Lodge, Kilburn, N.W., and Miss Smith, 103, Belsize-road, Kilburn, N.W., by whom a pamphlet has been issued advocating the cessation of Sunday travelling.

HELP FOR DISCHARGED PRISONERS.—The Chaplain of Clerkenwell Prison has established a small wood-chopping depôt, to give work to discharged prisoners. Perhaps some of our readers can help this work by sending orders. It is a small, but a very real way of doing the work of Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost. The address of the Chaplain is Rev. J. Horsley, H.M. Prison, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

CONTEMPORARY OPINION.

What Mr. Champness says.

In last week's issue of Joyful News there appeared a three-quarter length fancy portrait engraving of Mr. Moody; it was accompanied by the following editorial:—

"The success of our American friends is much greater even than when in London before. They had the crowd then, but now there is a larger amount of soul-winning done. Wherein lies the secret? It is a question too many-sided to be disposed of in one article, but we will, in a few words, give our view of the matter.

"The part Mr. Sankey takes is no small one. His presence and singing ensure that there shall be no dulness. That marvellous manner of his in presenting the truth has, in our opinion, done more to prepare the way for his colleague than many suppose. There can be no commonplace meeting where Mr. Sankey is, and for the preacher to know that the audience is sure to be interested, is to lift no small weight from his shoulders.

"Then, the fact that Mr. Moody is representing no denomination, gives him the sympathy of many who would not otherwise lift a finger to help. Whether it is all gain is another question. We are inclined to think that some of the harvesting would be better done if each of the great bodies had their turn; but this would shut the Church of England out, and no one knows better than our friends they are needed there as much as anywhere.

"Outside of all these things remains success that cannot be accounted for, only in the fact that Dwight L. Moody is a God-made evangelist. He is taught of God, and has not only had the schooling, but has made use of his lesson. We have been struck with two things, which we believe, more than anything else, account for the results. Faith is one of them. Mr. Moody believes in the Bible. Many other men think they do, but there is an antinomianism peculiar to the pulpit. Works here, as elsewhere, prove the faith. He has no doubts. 'If it is in the Bible, then it is true, and we must prove it.' He expects signs and wonders to be wrought at every service. He believes that the Holy Ghost is as powerful now as when Peter preached in Jerusalem, and this God-honouring faith brings its own reward.

"Courage, too, has something to do with the results. Mr. Moody is fearless. What is it to him that other folk don't agree with him? He is sure he is right, and so goes on; if they will fall in with him, all well; if not, he will go on without them, whoever they may be. He has learned that he must not be afraid to let the crowd smile. It is a relief to the pent-up feelings, and 'keeps way on her.' You cannot steer if you have not 'way on' the ship. Knowing this, he gives his audiences the chance to relieve their feelings by almost a laugh, but he never lets go the helm. The people are in his hands all the time.

"He has the courage to go on preaching old sermons, though he has many new ones. Like some skilful angler, he turns over the leaves of his book, and passing by many a gay fly, takes out one he has tried many times, saying, 'This is a killer. I have pulled out hundreds with this.' So he goes over and over again the well tried story, not fearing what men may say. There are not a few among us who might succeed much better than we do, if we had only the same trust in God, and distrust in man, which shown every day by Mr. Moody."

From "The Primitive Methodist."

During the last few weeks we have had frequent opportunities of hearing the American Evangelist, Mr. D. L. Moody; diligent observation of the substance and manner of his preaching has convinced us that evangelistic preaching amongst ourselves would be more successful if we gave more careful and intelligent thought to the conditions of success. It is true that Mr. Moody's sermons to the unconverted are on elementary topics; but it would be a serious mistake to suppose that they are, therefore, elementary sermons. Regarded as works of art, they are among the best discourses we have ever heard. They are full of rich and robust thought; often illuminated with fine imagery; frequently enlivened with fresh and striking illustrations; and their appeals are almost irresistible in their directness and force.

Mr. Moody has learnt that it is not by the monotonous repetition of a solitary truth, or by putting an incessant strain on a solitary motive, that all sorts of men are to be converted. He closely studies the manner in which the varied contents of the Christian revelation affect the varied powers, and passions, and susceptibilities of human nature; and he tries, in turn, every possible access to the conscience and the heart. To tell men over and over again that they ought to repent and believe the Gospel, to entreat them, no matter with what vehemence, to "accept Christ," will not produce the real and permanent results we desire. The day for mere exhortation has passed, and we are not going to accomplish much by just telling men to "Believe! Believe!" In an intelligent fashion we must present to their minds those truths which will make men wonder at the infinite greatness of the love of God, those truths which will create repentance and inspire faith.

Mr. Guinness Rogers' View.

In the February Congregationalist Rev. J. Guinness Rogers has a lengthy article on the London Mission. We quote the following, leaving some further extracts for a succeeding issue:—

"The meetings which Messrs. Moody and Sankey are at present holding in various districts of the metropolis are a phenomenon which deserves the careful study of all who are intent on dealing wisely with the great religious work of the age. In some respects these meetings are unprecedented. To compare them with the great gatherings attracted by Wesley and Whitefield would be misleading, since the circumstances are so entirely different that to institute a parallel between the two would be unfair. The evangelists of to-day appeal to a far larger population than that from which the revivalists of the eighteenth century drew their audiences, and therefore less significance might attach to the enormous numbers attracted to the movable iron halls—themselves a curious feature in the new movement—were it not that these buildings are crowded night by night, and well filled even in the daytime for week after week and even month after month. This continuous success, which at present is distinctly on the increase, is certainly one of the most surprising incidents in this new religious revival. From Islington to Wandsworth, from Wandsworth to Stepney, from Stepney to Battersea, the tide of numbers and the tide of enthusiasm have continued to spread and deepen. There is an important difference between his present visit and that which Mr. Moody paid to London in 1874. On the former occasion he had great central gatherings; he has now gone into the separate districts of London. The object was to get nearer to the people, and in that object he has succeeded.

"I have heard it said in the country that the newspapers say less of the present than of the former series of meetings, and that it was therefore inferred that they had not been so marked a success. But this is a distinct mistake. They have not, indeed, kindled so much excitement in the fashionable world; and from the fact that they are held at points of the vast circumference rather than at the centre of the metropolis, have not bulked so largely in the public eye. But the object being that to the poor the Gospel should be preached, they have been distinctly more effective. Large numbers have been drawn from the humbler classes in the social scale. To what extent they are of those who have been in the habit of neglecting public worship is a question which it is not possible to answer. Mr. Moody's own opinion does not agree with that of his more sanguine friends, who are confident that they are gathering in numbers who have hitherto been aliens to all our churches. He, on the other hand, complains that many of those for whom he is specially concerned are excluded in consequence of the thronging in of those who have already given themselves to God. It is certainly in favour of his view that so many of the same faces are seen both at the afternoon Bible reading and the evening meetings. As he also observed, with his characteristic shrewdness, it is hardly to be believed that ungodly people would besiege the doors of a religious meeting long before the time of opening, and would quietly wait for an hour or more in order to hear an evangelistic address.

"So far as I am myself able to judge from personal observation and careful inquiry, the audiences are largely, I believe mainly, composed of the members of Christian churches and congregations, and of a miscellaneous class who have been trained in Sunday schools, and who perhaps occasionally drop into a church or chapel, but who cannot be regarded as attendants on public worship. That vast numbers of a class morally and religiously lower than this have attended the meetings, at all events in my own district, is certain, but the exact proportion is not easy to ascertain. It is satisfactory to learn on undoubted testimony that this proportion is increasing. As to the attendance of religious professors, I can only say that one does not often meet with any who have not been present at one or other of the services. Some there are who, unable to find time to be present even occasionally at a week-day service in their own places of worship, assiduously attend these meetings from day to day, and even sometimes twice in the same day. Of the benefit they have derived the time to judge will come when the excitement is over, and the season for quiet, steady service follows.

"Whatever the ultimate results, the facts as they are before us are so striking that it would be worse than unwise to dismiss them without an endeavour to ascertain their real significance, and to learn any lessons which they may have to teach. One point is beyond controversy, and it is one which may well encourage those who are prone to take pessimist views of our position as Christians. The crowds are there How they are drawn is a point at which I shall look presently. The grand fact is undeniable that crowds gather, not once or twice on a great occasion, but continually. For what? Simply for a religious service. Nothing could well be more unlike the extraordinary sights and sounds by which the Salvation Army attracts multitudes. Yet the people come, and come night after night, in multitudes which I venture to predict would not be gathered in any hall thrown open for mere entertainment.

"Could anything show more conclusively that the Gospel has a deeper hold on the sympathies and hearts than unbelievers in their premature exultation, or faint-hearted believers in their hours of despondency, are inclined to admit? Of course a man with a strong faith, a sympathetic nature, and a powerful utterance, may secure an occasional audience. Mr. Henry George crowded St. James's Hall, and might possibly have filled a larger place, but we cannot suppose that any one believes that he could have continued to crowd even St. James's Hall for a single week. But the preacher of the cross, who has nothing beyond 'the old, old story' to proclaim, succeeds in attracting multitudes to listen to his earnest, direct, and forcible words. Is there not something here to teach unbelieving hearts that the Gospel of Christ is neither dead nor dying? It is clear that there is in it that which masses of the people still hear gladly.

"For reasons on which it is unnecessary to say anything here, except that they do not affect Mr. Moody or his Mission at all, I was not disposed to regard the movement with special favour. Revivalism did not, and in its ordinary forms does not, commend itself to my judgment. I had, perhaps, too readily assumed that Mr.

Moody's work was only a form of revivalism, with its undue exaltation of an individual, its unhealthy stimulus of the emotions, its tendency to sentimental gush, and its almost inevitable reaction. I have never doubted the possibility of revivals. It is revivalism—the endeavour to secure by outward expedients, often merely mechanical, effects which, if genuine, must be the fruit of spontaneous emotion—to which I object. My impression was that Mr. Moody's work was to be classed in that category. Possibly had he only carried on such a work as that done on his former visit, I should have remained undisturbed in that impression. But when he came into my own immediate neighbourhood I came gradually to feel that it was incumbent on me to look more closely into the movement. Many of the preliminaries and surroundings did not dispose me to regard it favourably. Dogmatic utterances as to the want of zeal in the churches pronounced in some cases by those who had done nothing towards quickening that zeal; uncharitable denunciations of all who did not see their way to throw themselves into the work; strange, unwonted outbursts of activity on the part of some who, in their own church life, have been mere drones, certainly did not tend to remove the doubts which were in my mind. It was manifestly, however, my duty to examine for myself. I had the opportunity, and I felt that it would be not only unfair to Mr. Moody, but unfaithful to my own instincts to neglect it. I had, indeed, heard the preacher before; and though I was interested, I found nothing to explain the secret of the wonderful power which he undoubtedly exerts.

"I must say that when I was once within the building, the marvel of the crowd to some extent ceased. Provided there was any faith at all in the truth to be preached (and this does seem necessary as an antecedent condition), it did not appear to me hard to understand how such vast numbers had congregated. About the number there had been no exaggeration. The great building was packed in every corner, and a spacious Wesleyan chapel adjoining was filled by an overflow meeting. A more lively, inspiriting scene it would not be easy to picture. Before the service began, hymn after hymn was sung and taken up with a gusto and fervour which showed how popular the music was. If any one desires to learn how much an English audience, composed largely of artisans, small shopkeepers, clerks, and domestic servants, enjoy a good, hearty, congregational "sing," he had better go to one of these meetings. But, in fact, it was not they alone who enjoyed it. There were others of a different class who seemed to enter into it with all heartiness. I felt at once that here was one of the great attractions, and that the experience was one which Christian churches ought to utilise. There are plenty of places where the killing power of slow, dull, spiritless singing is felt. Here was an example of the quickening effect of bright, easy, cheerful hymns in which all the congregation can join. Mr. Sankey's solos belong to another category. They have their effect, but it is evidently distinct in its nature from that of these swinging congregational melodies. One effect was to make the time before the service, which otherwise must have hung heavily on the hands of all, a period of true religious enjoyment, which contributed even to the success of what was to follow.

"Mr. Moody's conduct of the entire meeting was a remarkable manifestation of the way in which the fervour of his zeal is helped by the extraordinary sagacity and tact of a shrewd mind. Sanctified common-sense is characteristic of the man everywhere, and quite as much in his management of the proceedings as in his own address. He understands how much depends on little details, and there is care in relation even to the veriest trifle. He remembers, too, what many even of those who claim to be scientific forget, that men have bodies as well as souls, and that these two act and react upon each other, and he does his utmost to guard against the discomfort or weariness which may so easily mar the effect of the best sermon. His one aim is to get that into the hearts of the people, and if he sees anything which seems to hinder him, he spares no effort to remove it out of the way."

THE STRATFORD MEETINGS.

The past week has been one of great blessing for Stratford. There has been no diminution of public interest, as shown by the attendance at the meetings night by night. The overflows have been accommodated in Mr. Knaggs' Congregational Chapel; though that edifice is about a mile distant from the hall, it has, on some occasions, been filled with the late comers. In the chapel, Mr. J. M. Scroggie has been the preacher. Mr. Sankey has equally divided his favours between hall and chapel, sounding forth in both his trumpet-calls to service or to surrender. Mr. Moody has suffered considerably during the week from hoarseness, probably induced by the strain on his voice in battling with the storms on the first days of the Mission. He has never been absent from his post, however, and the new week has happily brought with it a measure of restoration.

Many facts of the deepest interest in connection with the meetings are coming to light. We are not in a position to enter into much detail, but we can indicate some of the circumstances that are causing the hearts of the workers to overflow with thankfulness and joy. A man of influence residing in a distant town came up to London and attended some of the meetings. His soul was mightily refreshed, and he returned to his home, not only determined to let his light shine there, but to bring others within the circle of blessing at Stratford. A wife came to one meeting and was led to a definite surrender of heart to Christ. The very next night the husband, who had been powerfully affected by his wife's conversion, came to the meeting. He was conversed with by an experienced worker, yielded to the claims of the Saviour then and there, and returned home to erect the family altar and fill up the cup of joy in his household. A young lady, of musical gifts and worldly tastes, was lately led to seek and find happiness in the service of Jesus Christ. She has been a constant attender and helper at the meetings, and her example is telling wonderfully upon others of her own rank and age, who have hitherto cared for none of these things. These are but stray specimens of what is going on at the hall in West Ham-lane. All cannot be known, and much that is known cannot now be told; but the Lord, of a truth, is working through his servants, and rewarding the faith of those who have sought to introduce their sin-sick friends and neighbours to the Great Physician. Some men of standing in the locality, who were known in days past to be opposed to evangelical truth, have attended the meetings; barriers of prejudice are thus breaking down, and we are fain to hope that the blessing these friends may receive will not be a purely negative one.

AMONG THE SCEPTICS.

It appears that the dreary creed of scepticism—if it can be said to have a creed—has a good many adherents in Stratford. The leader of the local synagogue of unbelievers was present at West Ham Lane Hall on one of the early days of the Mission, and even got as far as the inquiry-room—with what object or motive we do not pretend to say. At any rate, he came again with a little regiment of his followers, all of whom listened with the greatest courtesy and attention to a very earnest and impressive discourse from the evangelist on the words of Moses, "Their rock is not as our rock." Mr. Moody exposed with unanswerable force, both by argument and illustration, the hollowness of the atheistical position. The very fact of these pronounced unbelievers and opposers of the truth being there at all was an omen of the most hopeful sort. We are sanguine enough to believe that not a few of them will be led to choose the better part. Indeed, it is known of a truth that several professors of sceptical views have been brought to their right mind and are now resting on the sure foundation of a living faith in Him who is the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. Mr. Moody incidentally mentioned on Thursday evening that two nights before he had met in the inquiry-room the wife of a sceptic, who was converted, with herself, at the Stepney meetings. She had now come to Stratford with two daughters; one of these had found rest of soul, and the second was there as an anxious inquirer. "How is it with your atheism now?" asked the evangelist of this good woman. "Oh, it is all gone!" was the ready reply.

In the course of Sunday's meetings, while referring to the subject, Mr. Moody also said that one of the very band of infidels to which we have referred stood up in the hall before his fellows, and said he would accept Christ as his Saviour, going afterwards into the inquiry room. An interesting case of the same kind from the Battersea district, came under our notice on Sunday evening. We chanced to enter into conversation with a man in the inquiry-room, who said he was a convert of the Mission at Battersea, and had come all the way from there to Stratford, in order to hear the evangelists once again. He told us of a man, a noted atheist, who was brought savingly to believe in Christ as his Saviour the last week of the meetings in Lavender-hill Hall. He is employed in large public works in that district, and is now active in holding prayer-meetings and Gospel services, thus upholding the faith he once disbelieved and sought to destroy. Yet another sceptic came out definitely on the Lord's side at the meeting for intemperate men last Saturday night, as will be seen from the very interesting account by Mrs. Guinness appended to our report.

THE BIBLE LECTURES.

The afternoon Bible lectures, with the half-hour prayer-meetings that follow, are wonderful seasons of soul refreshing. One good pastor, out of the fulness of his heart, quaintly described them in his prayer as "those Sundays in the middle of the week." One of the noteworthy incidents of the week happened at the Bible lecture of Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Moody on that occasion gave the first of a series of addresses on "Grace." The burden of this address was to show that salvation is the free gift of God, through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and is not to be attained by any human merit or good deeds. In the course of its delivery Mr. Moody said:—

"I remember when I was in this country before, a Church of England minister got hold of me, and he said that I was teaching false doctrine because I said salvation was all through grace. He said that works had as much to do with our salvation as grace. At that time I had never read the Thirty-Nine Articles; if I had I should have been ready to meet him. I got the Prayer Book, and looked all through the Thirty-Nine Articles, and I found, to my amazement, that they put it a good deal stronger than I did. I want some one to take the Prayer Book and read these passages to you. And that you may not think that it is some other book that I have got hold of, and not a Prayer Book at all, I want to ask a Church of England minister here to read the 11th, 12th, and 13th Articles. I won't read them myself, because I want you to see that it is a regular Church of England Prayer Book." Articles 11, 12, and 13 were accordingly read by Canon Scott, of Stratford. "There!" said Mr. Moody, "that's stronger than I ever put it. The Articles of the Church of England say of works before justification that they have 'the nature of sin.' I never called them sin. So you see this is not any new doctrine that we are preaching; when the Church and the world wake up to the fact that works before salvation go for naught, then, I believe, men will come flocking into the kingdom of God by hundreds. We work from the cross, not to it. We work because we are saved, not in order to be saved. We work from salvation, not up to it. Salvation is the gift of God."

Perhaps the most heart-moving of all the meetings is the half-hour of prayer at the close of these Bible lectures. Those present are asked publicly to present their individual burdens and cares, so that they may be unitedly borne up before the throne of the gracious and merciful One. Requests for the conversion of near and dear ones are sent up in a constant stream, and in tones fitted to soften and break the heart of the most hardened sceptic. One afternoon last week, a man was so overcome with emotion when presenting a request for the conversion of his children that he wept very sore. "Their dear mother," he sobbed aloud, "has gone to heaven, and I want them all to meet her there. Oh, I would rather perish myself than that any of them should perish." Then he told the Lord how he himself had aforetime wandered a long way off, and had known Him but a little while; but, oh! how he loved Him, and how he longed that all his family might be saved! Certainly, no one need resort to the shallow, painted bathos of the tragic stage in order to have their deepest emotions stirred. The same afternoon, prayer was asked on behalf of a young man who was about to leave the University to be ordained for the ministry while yet unsaved; also for the son of a widow, who would shortly come out of prison.

SAVING THE DRUNKARDS.

Among the workers from a distance—of whom we may say there are not a few—is the venerable Mr. Robert Simpson, of Glasgow, who has long taken a deep personal interest in the Temperance reform. He was moved with compassion for the drinking men of Stratford; as anyone might well be who has had the chance of seeing the havoc that is being wrought in the East End through the agency of the public-house. Never perhaps in the same short space of time has the present writer witnessed so many evidences of the fearful liquor leprosy that is infecting our youth—mere boys and girls many of them were—than on a recent evening's journey between Mile End and Stratford. Fairly possessed, as they seemed to be, by this rum, or gin, or whiskey devil, these boys and girls fought—like savages we were about to say, but it would be, perhaps, more correct to say like wild beasts, or fiends from the pit. It is one of the most insoluble of all mysteries how Christian (!) England permits this drink demon to stalk abroad at large. When is the thrice happy day to arrive when it shall be exorcised, or, at least, chained up within the bottles of the chemist's laboratory?

To return from this digression—excusable, we hope—Mr. Simpson proposed that a meeting for prayer on behalf of these victims of the alluring cup should be held in the inquiry-room on Saturday evening last. Rather novel steps were taken to secure the attendance of some of these drinking men. The local policemen were asked during Saturday to inform any whom they thought likely to come, or whom they believed to stand in need of such an effort. Some of the more zealous of the stewards visited the saloons to apprise as many as they could encounter. In the result some 400 men presented themselves, many of them presumably of the sort wanted. Mr. Moody felt so interested that he gave up his usual rest on that evening in order to be present. He and the other friends were fully rewarded. He said on Sunday morning that he thought it was perhaps the most touching of any meeting he had attended. It will be seen from Mrs. Guinness's communication that a most encouraging commencement was made of what we trust will be a memorable and wide-spread work of grace among the slaves of drink in Stratford.

The sequel to the meeting came at the early gathering of Sunday morning, when Mr. Moody told something of what had happened, and said it had been decided to form a Stratford "Mizpah Band," similar to the Glasgow band of rescued men which has proved such a blessed outcome of the late Mission in that city. Mr. Moody called for volunteers to form a nucleus of this band, and also for recruits to the Gospel Male Choir. About two hundred men responded, and it is desired to raise the numbers as soon as possible to 500 or so.

We have only space to say in a word or two that the gatherings of Sunday last were quite in keeping with all that had gone before. The power of the Lord was very manifestly present at all the meetings, morning, forenoon, afternoon, and evening. The last meeting, for men only, could hardly have been surpassed for power and for results. Both of Mr. Sankey's songs, "Eternity" and "The Ninety and Nine," made a remarkable impression on the vast congregation. This was especially seen in the case of the latter hymn; the solemn stillness during the singing and the universal rustle of relief as Mr. Sankey's triumphant notes died away, showed that the attention had been strained to its utmost extent. The sermon on "Excuses" was delivered with most marvellous unction and force, and the responses given at the close were grand and inspiring beyond all power of description. This was repeated in the after-meeting in an intensified form. Early in the meeting several of Mr. McGranahan's new pieces were effectively given by a small male choir, under the leadership of Mr. Godfrey.

A new and very effective song was sung by Mr. Sankey at the early workers' meeting; the refrain will indicate the character of the song:—

"Out in the highway, out in the byway,
Out in the dark paths of sin,
Go forth, go forth, with a loving heart,
And gather the wanderers in."

The music is by Mr. G. C. Stebbins, and the hymn is included in the new collection of Sacred Songs just issued by the publishers of this paper, entitled "The Gospel Choir."

The Gospel Temperance Meeting.

By Mrs. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

The Saturday evening meeting for men addicted to strong drink was one of the best of the week's meetings. Mr. Moody raised the question—Can the Gospel deliver drunkards from their besetting sin? Has Jesus Christ present power to give men the victory over this terrible vice? It was a question for testimony; we wanted to hear evidence on the point. Let those who had experienced such deliverance, if any such were present, bear witness, and after hearing their witness let the audience either reject it as untrustworthy or accept it as true.

Numbers of men rose one after another for an hour, giving clear personal statements, in the strong vivid language of the working classes, of the horrors of a slavery from which they had been delivered, and joyfully attributing their deliverance to the power of Christ. Old men of 70, young men of 25, and men of various intermediate ages, spoke out with evident sincerity and some with touching earnestness. One man, then under the influence of liquor, tried to make a speech, which, however, only elicited laughter. This was checked by Mr. Moody, who exclaimed, "Would you laugh if you saw a man cutting his own throat? Remember, it's not that man speaking—it's the whiskey that's in him."

Subsequently an appeal was made to those who wished to get the victory over drink to rise and seek the help of the intercession of those present. Many did so, and a move was about to be made to register their names, and to unite into a "Mizpah Band" the men, who, having been delivered themselves, were willing to labour unitedly for the salvation of the drinking men of Stratford, when a young man, who did not look at all like a drunkard, rose and said, in a voice full of emotion, "Will you pray for me too? I am an atheist; but I am very miserable. I am sailing in a few days for New Zealand, and I don't want to go away an atheist. Do pray for me." Mr. Moody, who was standing close by the young man, instantly quieted the meeting, and said, "Let us pray right now for this young man." He did so with simple faith and earnestness, while a deep "Amen" arose from many hearts and lips. He then requested me to accompany the young man into his private room, and talk to him. I did so. He was much moved, trembling with emotion. "Oh, I know there is a God; I know that there is a Jesus; but I have denied it so long and so often! Only last night I blasphemed when my sister, who has been converted at these meetings, spoke to me about Jesus. I told her there was no such person, and never had been. Oh, I am so wicked! I have been so wicked!"

I scarcely spoke, but allowed him to pour out his groaning. Then I asked a question or two as to the origin of his atheism. He was the child of Christian parents, his father already at home in heaven. He went to sea at 14, and fell under the dangerous influence of a very pleasing, high-minded, clever young man of 25 or so, who made it his business to destroy the lad's faith, and lead him into utter atheism. "Was he a wicked young man?" I asked. "O no! Very much the reverse! Rather a model young man; just the man a boy would like to imitate; as far as I could see, he was most moral and respectable. And then there was another of our set who made a profession, and was not what he should have been. So I respected the atheist and despised the Christian, and by degrees I came to be proud of my atheism." "Did it make you happy?" "No, never! but oh! it is so hard to believe in God, and yet perhaps harder to disbelieve!" and he groaned again.

Feeling I was by that time in real sympathy with the dear lad, and realising how vitally important was the crisis for him, I said, "Let us kneel and speak to God." For half an hour we continued in prayer. I quoted in prayer at intervals many of the words of Christ; he groaned out an assent from time to time. I put the language of confession into his lips, which he most readily adopted and repeated. Then I tried the language of supplication, and most earnestly he echoed it, accompanying me in many petitions; in the frequent silent pauses, which I purposely made, he kept groaning out, "Oh, it's very hard, but do, Lord, save me—do!" At last I tried the language of faith. He did not at first take it up, but turned it again into prayer. Then I prayed for him, that he might be enabled to grasp the promises, quoting one or two. He joined in these prayers with intense earnestness, but there was pain only, not peace in his words, and in his heart. He kept asking Christ to come into his heart. When he paused, I prayed that he might listen to Christ instead of speaking to Him, and hear Him saying, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man will open unto Me I will come in and sup with him, and he with Me," emphasising and pausing on the words italicised.

There was silence for a few moments; then he said, "O Lord, do come in," and soon after added in an entirely different tone—calm, soft, and quiet, "I thank Thee, Lord, Thou hast come in! I feel Thee in my soul! I know Thee! I love Thee! I trust Thee! I am Thine!" It was sweetly solemn and real: the storm was calmed by the divine "Peace, be still." We praised God together, and my son, who came in just then, pointed out to him, and made him read, several passages as to prayer and pardon, confession and forgiveness, and the gift of eternal life. He left us full of peace and joy and wonder, unspeakably glad that he had not sailed for New Zealand before these meetings. May he be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation!

Paving the Way at New Cross.

On Monday, January 28, Mr. Moody held a Conference with the Local Committee for the S.E. district of London; notwithstanding the hour at which the meeting took place—3.30 p.m., when business men are so much occupied—between sixty and seventy were present.

After prayer by Rev. J. T. Wigner, a letter addressed to Mr. Moody, and subscribed by five clergymen in the district, was read, expressing anxiety lest the measures adopted by him for the safety of the inquiry-room should be insufficient to guard it from the entrance of improper people, and unqualified spiritual advisers, and urging as a remedy that distinctive cards of admission should be given to those who were allowed to enter it as workers.

Mr. Moody spoke at some length on this subject. He had tried and fully tested the system of distinctive tickets for inquiry-room workers, suggested by this letter, but had found it a complete failure; nay, more, it had proved most mischievous in its results in many ways. He was glad to say that hitherto, since the commencement of the London meetings, there had been no trouble in the inquiry-room arising from the cause suggested. He made use of those workers of whom he felt most sure; besides the local helpers in each Mission, he had the assistance of tried friends, who made it their business to take part in the work in all the various districts he had visited.

It was hoped by a minister present that all Congregational week-day services would be suspended during the Mission. Mr. Moody advised that the Sunday services of all, and the week-day services of churches at a distance, ought not to be interfered with. A minister trusted that non-churchgoers especially would be dealt with during the Mission. Another observed that most of the regular churchgoers would get great benefit from it, and needed it just as much as the other. Mr. Moody remarked that the largest proportion of attendants during the last four Missions in different parts of London have been non-churchgoers. As an encouragement, several rows of seats in the front were occasionally reserved for such of the working classes as could not be at the hall until about the time for closing the doors, and who would otherwise have lost their chance of a good place, or possibly any place at all.

It was mentioned that some ladies were making arrangements for a Crèche, close by the hall, to enable mothers to leave their infants in safety whilst attending the services.

Mr. Moody closed with prayer this most encouraging meeting, in which the spirit of unity and brotherly feeling and deep interest in this great mission were abundantly manifest. It was felt to be true what one present afterwards remarked, surely "there was a sound of abundance of rain."

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND M'GRANAHAN.

These friends are now largely restored to their usual condition of health. Mr. and Mrs. M'Granahan were present at all the meetings last week in the Victoria Baptist Chapel, Wandsworth-road, and Major Whittle was able to be at the meeting of Sunday evening. There have been good attendances, and not a few conversions to God. We learn with pleasure that since the great meetings at Lavender-hill Hall the congregations of the churches and chapels around have largely increased; it is expected that considerable accessions will soon be made to the membership of several, as a fruit of the Clapham Mission.

Christ All and in All.

WHILE looking through some papers, says Mr. Moody, I got this wonderful description of Christ. I do not know where it originally came from, but it was so fresh to my soul that I should like to read it to you:—

"Christ is our Way; we walk in Him. He is our Truth; we embrace Him. He is our Life; we live in Him. He is our Lord; we choose Him to rule over us. He is our Master; we serve Him. He is our Teacher, instructing us in the way of salvation. He is our Prophet, pointing out the future. He is our Priest, having atoned for us. He is our Advocate, ever living to make intercession for us. He is our Saviour, saving to the uttermost. He is our Root, we grow from Him. He is our Bread, we feed upon Him. He is our Shepherd, leading us into green pastures. He is our true Vine, we abide in Him. He is the Water of Life, we slake our thirst from Him. He is the fairest among ten thousand, we admire Him above all others. He is 'the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person;' we strive to reflect his likeness. He is the upholder of all things, we rest upon Him. He is our Wisdom, we are guided by Him. He is our Righteousness, we cast all our imperfections upon Him. He is our Sanctification, we draw all our power for holy life from Him. He is our Redemption, redeeming us from all iniquity. He is our Healer, curing all our diseases. He is our Friend, relieving us in all our necessities. He is our Brother, cheering us in our difficulties."

Young Women in Woolwich.

THE seventh annual report of the Woolwich Y.W.C.A. gives a most interesting account of the work carried on during the past year. We give the following extracts:—

"On November 25, having secured for the purpose a large central hall, we began a week of special services for young women, when from 200 to 300 were present each evening. Many were impressed by Miss Brryman's earnest Gospel appeals, and remained to be spoken with; some nights we had from ten to twenty in an ante-room seeking the Lord; many of these have decided for Christ. We closed these meetings with a tea, when the Hon. Emily Kinnaird, of the London Central Y.W.C.A., gave a most interesting account of the work of the Association.

"In our Institute we have now 109 local members, and more are joining every week, while many others come in to our meetings who have not joined.

"One matter presses much upon us—the need for increased accommodation. Young women often reside with us for longer or shorter periods, mostly those needing a temporary home while out of employment, and we have had to refuse admission for lodging from time to time, as our room is limited. We are anxious to build some more bedrooms, and, if possible, a larger room for meetings. About £200 would do all that is needed in this matter. We hope that our readers will help us with funds for this special purpose, as well as contributing to the present yearly work carried on."

The Secretary is Mrs. M. Mandeville, 28, Woolwich-common, S.E.

Village Missions in the Punjaub.

IN this district one solitary English lady began itineration in January, 1881, aided by one Bible woman, and in course of time by others whom she was able to gather round her and prepare for the work. Other ladies have since joined in the work, but surely the fact that the district is at least sixty miles in length and twenty of average breadth, that it contains 1550 towns and villages, should be enough to convince anyone that four English ladies are utterly inadequate.

The Punjaub is a comparatively new Mission field, and therefore is necessarily in a much earlier stage than are those of Bengal and South India, where in some districts the work began a century ago or more. A much larger staff of devoted English workers is urgently required. We need four central stations (one for each tehsil), occupied by English workers, and connected with each a group of out-stations occupied by native workers. Then, and then only, may we hope in God's strength to reach with the message of life each of the 1550 towns and villages which are so much on our hearts.

How is it that the Indian Mission field gains so little from the consecration meetings held in England? Surely this is a question that calls for "great searchings of heart." Why is it that so few come out "to the help of the Lord against the mighty"? Then, again, when we know how many ladies of suitable age have more or less private means, how is it that so very few who are able to come at their own cost, do so? Only recently we have heard from members of the Zenana Mission Committee, who would gladly send us the needed helpers if they could, that it was impossible, for not one honorary worker had volunteered this year; a similar remark was made last year. Oh, that consecrated workers would come forth in thousands, so that the glorious light of the Gospel might be carried into all the dark places of the earth. Volunteers are invited to communicate with Mrs. Weitbrecht, 16, Chesterton-road, North Kensington, W.

Letters to the Editor.

THE JUDGMENT-SEAT OF CHRIST.

SIR,—The rendering of 2 Cor. v. 10 proposed by your correspondent in number 729, p. 34, "that each may receive the things in the body," is indeed derivable, as he proposes, by admitting the word understood "done;" but the force of the Greek idiom requires some such addition, as in the Authorised and Revised Versions.

Your correspondent's difficulty is, however, capable of much relief by a more exact rendering of the original word for the "appear" of the Authorised, by the "made manifest" of the Revised text. D. J. ROWAN.

Kingstown, Jan. 22.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

SIR,—Many of the advocates of the abolition of capital punishment can cordially sympathise with your correspondents in Switzerland and France, who complain of the terrible murders which there, as in Italy, Spain, &c., afflict and horrify the community. But they appear to mistake the cause of these murders. Capital punishment is the law of the land in France, Spain, Italy and Switzerland. Executions take place there from time to time, except in the last-named country, which has only restored the extreme penalty in name, or upon paper. But however deterrent this penalty may be, in theory, or even in actuality, if uniformly enforced, the great practical point to be noticed is, that in not one country in the world is it capable of being inflicted with any certainty, or regularity, as compared with other penalties.

This arises from several causes, but mainly from the peculiar and often insuperable difficulties which an irrevocable and fatal punishment involves. Questions of insanity, of identity, of probability, of circumstantial evidence, which would not be weighty enough to set aside ordinary sentences of imprisonment, assume a much more unmanageable aspect in connection with cases where the issue is final and fatal and utterly beyond reparation in the event of a mistake having been made. Thus this one penalty specially tends to promote the escape of murderers.

It is found that their conviction and punishment are more certain in countries such as Holland, Belgium, Portugal, Michigan, Wisconsin, &c., where the death penalty has been discontinued.

Again, your foreign correspondents seem to overlook the real causes of murders in the countries they refer to. They are, mainly, drunkenness in Switzerland (where the sale of alcohol is enormous); infidelity, with its hopelessness and desperation, in France; and popular ignorance and superstition, together with the most mischievous habit of carrying daggers, &c., in Spain and Italy.

The Island of Corsica used to stand pre-eminent over probably every other locality in the world for its murders, owing to the custom of the "vendetta," or private vengeance, and the universal carrying of arms. In the five years ending 1850, there were 431 murders and assassinations in Corsica. Then a law was passed prohibiting the carrying of arms by private persons. What resulted? In the five years ending 1860 there were only 146 murders and assassinations; truly a large total, but a great diminution from the previous state of affairs. This indicates that it is rather prevention that avails than an ineffectual, because generally impracticable, fatal penalty.

The Gospel and the extension of temperance and education are the chief preventives. But executions tend to brutalise the public mind. Does the spirit of the New Testament encourage such? Though it may be admitted that even the New Testament, in its letter, does not expressly forbid capital punishment, even as it does not forbid slavery or polygamy (except as to the latter for "bishops"), but its spirit condemns all unnecessary taking of human life. Evil is to be overcome mainly by good; by wise preventives and those evangelistic principles which convert or control the worst powers of violence.—Yours truly,

Stoke Newington, N. WILLIAM TALLACK.

RESCUE WORK.—A devotional meeting was held on Friday, Feb. 1, at the Homes in Regent-square, convened by the Committee and friends of the Midnight Meeting Movement. Rev. R. H. A. Bradley, Vicar of St. Peter's, Regent-square, delivered a brief but earnest address of encouragement and exhortation. A very encouraging account of the way the Lord is blessing the labours of his servants in the Provinces was given by Mr. J. H. L. Christien, the organising secretary.

Notes and Comments.

At a recent meeting in Canterbury, Canon Wilberforce told the following characteristic incident about General Gordon:—

"Just before General Gordon started, as he believed for the Congo, he sent to a prayer-meeting over which the Canon was presiding, asking for the prayers of those assembled. He said in his letter, 'I would rather have the prayers of that little company gathered in your house to-day than I would have the wealth of the Soudan placed at my disposal. Pray for me that I may have humility and the guidance of God, and that all spirit of murmuring may be rebuked in me.' When he reached London on his return from Brussels, and his destination was changed, the General sent the Canon another message: 'Offer thanks at your next prayer-meeting. When I was upborne on the hearts of those Christians I received from God the spiritual blessing that I wanted, and I am now calmly resting in the current of his will.'"

Such a testimony coming from a source where it is impossible to find a trace of fanaticism, goody-goodiness (as it is called), or anything less than Christian manliness, is in these times of great value. Stalwart piety, robust faith, and bold assertion of Bible principles are none too common. Independence of God, and an affected superiority to faith and prayer, are features but too fairly descriptive of modern times. Happily there are still not a few living examples of simple trust in God, and that in circumstances where an unbelieving world sees no place for its exercise.

Old Surrey Chapel is to be replaced, it appears, by a new one, to be built within forty yards of the original site. This was stated by Rev. B. Senior in the course of a lecture on "Rowland Hill and Surrey Chapel," given in Lower Exeter Hall, last week. The spot is so specially associated with the revival of evangelical truth and evangelistic zeal, awakened by Wesley's and Whitefield's labours, that it is gratifying to know it will still be a sphere of Gospel work such as they laboured to promote.

Temperance continues to receive support and to gain influence in the higher ranks of life, as well as in humble spheres. Canon Wilberforce says he has been told by the Duchess of Sutherland that her wearing the blue ribbon has resulted in the rescue from drunkenness of one she had long desired to save. We observe also that Mrs. Fawcett, the wife of the Postmaster-General, is announced to preside shortly at a ladies' Temperance meeting in Islington. Those in exalted and influential positions are never more honoured than when promoting a good cause.

Rev. William Guest, whose letter asking prayer for General Gordon appeared in our columns last week, has also written to the Nonconformist and Independent, suggesting more public prayer in our churches for our empire and statesmen. He pleads that the practice would promote a healthy public sentiment, lift us out of morbid self-considerateness, quicken the interest of the congregation, and sustain those sympathies which are a precious part of our religious life. He urges the importance of the suggestion on the ground of the vastness and complication of interests attaching to our Empire, comprising, as it does, 307,725,000 human beings. No one can deny the importance of practical attention to such a point; we commend it to our readers, as calling alike for private and public concern.

Canon Fleming spoke at the recent Islington Clerical Conference, on "The Holy Ghost: the True Source of all Ministerial Power." The following extracts from his address are eminently to the point:—

"We live in a remarkable period. Great changes are taking place, and greater are coming New arts, new sciences, new philosophies are in the field. Yesterday's wonder is superseded by to-day's prodigy. But I am here to assert that there is no new Gospel. The world of humanity stands before us arrayed in the garments of modern life, but underneath these splendid robes the heart is the same as it was in the far-off ages. Sorrow is the same in the nineteenth century as when Jacob buried his Rachel; the cares of life as heavy as when David cried, 'O that I had wings like a dove, then would I flee away and be at rest;' the burden of sin the same as when Paul cried, 'O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?'"

In speaking of the power by which alone we can rise to the exigencies of the times, Canon Fleming said:—

"A prophet long ago said, 'I am full of power' (Micah iii. 8). Wonderful language, and presumptuous, were it not for the words he adds, 'by the Spirit of the Lord.' 'I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord.' This sends us at once to the source of all power—'the Spirit of the Lord.' The prophet of old attributed his power—not his inspiration, that is quite a distinct thing—to the divine energy of God the Holy Ghost. This is a truth which cannot be too closely pressed home on our heart. The power of learning, science, intellect, wealth, have their acknowledged place. We dare not undervalue them. An educated ministry we need, by all means (woe to our Church when her ministry shall cease to be an educated one); the more we know, the better for ourselves, and for those we minister to, but all our knowledge must become power 'by the Spirit of the Lord.' Without this it is 'sounding brass, and a tinkling cymbal.' Without this, better 'tarry at Jerusalem, and wait for the promise of the Father.' None of these adjuncts I have named can take the place of the power of the Holy Ghost, in answer to continuous, believing prayer."

These are old truths, but they cannot be too often reiterated. The Holy Ghost must be honoured if the Church of Christ is to be successful. The Canon was equally within the mark when he said that this was true for every believer as well as for ministers. There are other preachers beside those who occupy the pulpit. Every praying, loving, godly life is a sermon. The world's sorest need to-day is more Christ-like men and women.

The Daily Telegraph has had two or three editorials of late severely censuring the efforts made by advocates of Sabbath observance. The action of the Aberdeen Town Council in refusing to allow the sale of refreshments in Duthie Park on Sundays is ridiculed and condemned. The spirit of the articles referred to may be judged of from the following extract:—

"'Unity of Sabbath observance' is the war-cry of the fanatics; and, although they have fortunately no stake at which to burn heretics, they are busy framing nice little persecuting laws by means of which people who do not want to be treated on Sunday as though they were slaves or children may be fined or imprisoned."

There is room for fear that this way of treating efforts to obtain Sunday closing, and to secure the rest and sanctity of the Lord's Day, is becoming increasingly popular. The National Sunday League is more and more bold in its action, and unless zealous and prayerful endeavours are put forth by those who prize "the pearl of days" to preserve it from desecration, we shall yet see its privileges curtailed, its sacredness profaned, and the enemies of righteousness triumphant over truth. This is one of the points which should be made a centre of unity, around which all Christians might gather to make common cause against the foe.

We learn with much pleasure that Dr. Donald Fraser has considerably improved in health by his sojourn in the sunny south. He is expected back in London about the end of March.

The Record contains a letter with the well-known signature of "Credo," which, after calling for prayer with reference to Mr. Bradlaugh's intended attempt to take his seat on the opening of Parliament, thus continues:—

"Scarcely less fervent should be our prayers, that God would Himself overturn all crafty devices for the revival of diplomatic relations, under whatsoever cover, between England and Rome—relations so long ago broken with, after terrible experience had proved them to be fraught with dangers alike political and religious.

"I cannot refrain from entreating that daily intercession should be made, in these days of rebuke and blasphemy, for ever increasing power and blessing to be granted to all those who are preaching and teaching 'the Truth as it is in Jesus,' and especially for those men of God who have again crossed the Atlantic to win the mother-country to a more devoted allegiance to Him."

And yet one more plea for fervent prayer from every Christian heart:—

"At this moment, General Gordon, and his no less gallant comrade Colonel Stewart, are on their way to a fiery furnace of danger. Alone, unarmed, unbacked by any force of arms, with charge of specie (in the service of peace) adding a hundredfold to their danger, with a price on their devoted heads, and with their brave, noble hearts exposed as a prey to the countless human wolves of the desert, 'a sight to make angels weep,' whilst 'all the world wondered.' God of his pitying mercy defend them, and the Son of God Himself walk with them!"

Dr. Moxey, of Edinburgh, told the remarkable story of his conversion, on a recent Sabbath evening, in the Free Church, Falkirk, to a crowded congregation, mostly of men. At an after-meeting many young men, we are informed, professed to receive the Saviour. Preachers generally would find it a wise and fruitful arrangement to substitute this sort of service occasionally for the ordinary "sermon" on some fragmentary portion of Scripture.

Mr. C. F. Dowsett, of 70, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C., sends to us a strenuous protest against the practice of indiscriminate distribution of collecting cards and boxes by religious and philanthropic societies. A strong temptation to dishonesty, which they are not always able to resist, is by this means frequently thrown in the way of young people. Our correspondent cites some facts that fully corroborate this. We would earnestly second Mr. Dowsett's appeal to the conductors of these institutions to make such arrangements, by careful registration or otherwise, as shall obviate the danger to which he justly calls attention.

The report for the past year of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., which has reached us, contains a goodly catalogue of varied agencies for the welfare of the young men in the Irish capital Prominent among them, as it ought to be, is "the Evangelistic Meeting" which is a fruit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission in Dublin nine years ago. This branch of the work is a feeder of all the rest. It is carried on solely by the young men, and in consequence has an attraction for those of the same age and class. Once brought within the pale of the Association the young men are nurtured by the methods of Christian culture and fellowship which it provides.

Our Irish friends labour under some special disadvantages, of which the greatest, perhaps, are the Romish problem and the unsettled state of the country. The executive of the Association find it no easy task to keep up a sufficient supply of the sinews of war; we observe with regret that 1883 closed with an adverse balance. Perhaps some Christian friends on this side of the Channel who have young relatives resident in Dublin, will be moved to help with an annual subscription. At the same time we hope the Protestant Christians throughout Ireland will show that they are fully alive to the great benefits conferred on the youth of the country through this noble Institution. The Secretary of the Dublin Y.M.C.A. is Mr. Robert Cotter, Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street.

A site has been secured at Lutterworth, the scene of Wycliffe's labours, on which to erect a monument to his memory, the present year being the 500th anniversary of his death. No man, in connection with the religious history of our country, better deserves to be held in honourable remembrance for the work he performed on behalf of the freedom of the Word of God and the right of private judgment.

The Duke of Albany said at Liverpool the other day that drink was the only terrible enemy England had to fear. It would be well if all men of influence could be aroused to an equal sense of the danger to be feared from its inroads. The conviction is forcing itself on many minds. We note as a further proof of this, that the Directors of the Great Western Railway Company have taken steps to provide for the erection of a coffee tavern at Westbourne-park, for the benefit of their employés, with a view to promote habits of temperance among them. We are far from thinking, however, that drink is our only enemy. There are countries where drinking is not a popular vice, which nevertheless are decaying from moral corruption.

A correspondent in the Nonconformist and Independent asks, "Why do not those people who labour so hard for the success of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work, and for outside Mission halls, do the same for their own ministers and churches?" The query is a fair one, and demands an answer. The querist signs himself "A Neglected Chapel," and complains that nothing has been done to brighten the building in which he worships, or to stir up the district, for many years. The people around are very poor and neglected; the minister is poorly maintained, although a good man, and a proved poor man's friend. Why do not Christian workers rally round such centres, visit thoroughly, week after week, such districts, precisely as is done around the Stratford Hall and other selected spots? This is the very result which Messrs. Moody and Sankey desire their work to produce.

There are some people who lack principle in working for Christ, and are only active under the impulse of novelty and excitement, but this only slightly answers the question proposed. Very often churches and church officers stand in the way of the work desired; their want of sympathy prevents their places of worship becoming the centres of such efforts. Sectarianism, again, often rears its ugly head, and bars the way to free Gospel labour such as is adapted to reach the hearts of the poor and destitute. Isms and crotchets must be given up if practical Gospel work is to be done. The fact is, chapels are often neglected, not only by earnest Christian workers, but by everybody, just because the churches belonging to them are so little possessed of the Spirit of Christ. Earnest workers find no response to their ardent desires for better things, and so are often driven to seek spheres of usefulness away from home.

In a recent letter to Mr. Grattan Guinness, Dr. Sims, of the Livingstone Inland Mission, speaks in very favourable terms of Mr. Stanley the explorer:—

"His methods are very kind, wise, and patient. He is working excellently in the interests of the expedition. . . . Without Stanley's expedition, the interior would be, humanly speaking, unopened and dark as ever, as it will yet be if he fails. He works under serious disadvantages, and has much trouble. During the time he has been here, our intercourse has been extremely pleasant. He is so kind, and has given us much important help."

Professor Stuart, of Cambridge, writes in the columns of The Pall Mall Gazette of Saturday, impressing on the Government the necessity of a full and unconditional repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts during the present session. The Professor says:—

"The question is not one to be left to the Admiralty and War Office. It is a question of men's conscience, of the conscience of many of the best men of all parties, including a large and growing number in the Church of England, and the mass of women generally. These are perfectly determined, and have expressed the determination, that, whatever we do in this question, we can never tolerate that the State shall come to terms with vice."

However repellent or unsavoury this question may be, it must not be allowed to sleep while these degrading and immoral Acts remain on the British Statute book. In one of our Notes on this subject last week, the Episcopal utterance quoted was, by a curious mistake, attributed to the Bishop of "Canterbury," instead of Salisbury.

The Pall Mall Gazette of Thursday last had an able article on "Women as Preachers," by Mrs. General Booth, which our trenchant sister closes with the question: "In view of the wonderful results of woman's public labours, one may ask, if 'the State commits an injustice in debarring a woman from the rights of a citizen because she chooses to perform the good works of a saint,' what sort of an injustice does a Church commit which debars a woman from the right and privilege of preaching a living Saviour to the myriads who are literally rotting and dying in heathen darkness, for lack of those who will stoop low enough to get at them with the bread of life? God and humanity demand an answer!"

Professor Fairbairn, of Airedale College, is about to try an experiment. He has invited the working men of Bradford to a series of Sunday evening lectures on religion, which he intends to deliver for their special benefit. Starting with the inquiry, What is Religion? he proposes to trace its history through the Old and New Testament epochs, the first fifteen centuries of our era, in modern Europe, and then in connection with our political, social, and industrial position today. He disclaims any intention to take the place of an apologist or a critic, but simply that of an expositor. The ability of Dr. Fairbairn to deal with such a subject will invest the lectures with no little interest and importance; how far they may conduce to drawing men into the kingdom of God remains to be proved.

Suicides continue to be of frequent occurrence at Monte Carlo, the sole surviving European paradise of gamblers. The Roman Pontiff has been requisitioned to use his influence towards the removal of this international plague-spot. It is a standing reproach to European morality, and we trust its deadly days may soon be numbered.

An Oxford graduate thus practically and pointedly describes the preaching needed in these days. His words will commend themselves to preachers and hearers alike, who take a common sense as well as Christian view of the subject:—

"If the clergy will really and prayerfully preach the Word of God, and set forth Jesus Christ, his word, doctrine, and atonement, as they know them and have felt them, our sermons will not be insipid, lifeless essays, but living and edifying preachments. Learned discourses, scientific essays, and specious disputations, couched in pompous preparations of dictionary words, carefully catalogued and strung together for the occasion, are but very poor tools wherewith to cut stones from the human quarry; and intellectual parades for the applause of so-called educated congregations will do very little towards polishing those stones for the adornment of God's temple. Merely ethical essays can never satisfactorily supersede evangelical preaching, as the latter has the authority of God and the Church. We want stirring sermons from faithful men or the Church will not successfully cope with an age in which open antagonism to religion and creeds is in unholy alliance with base infidelity and communism."

The importance of keeping this fact before the minds of ministers and congregations is very great; the former often mistake the the truth as to the desires of the latter. As a rule, people go to the house of God more wishful to hear the truth of God than to feast on the rhetorical powers of the preacher. Hence it is that the largest attendances are to be found at places where the Gospel is faithfully and fully preached. Mr. Spurgeon uttered words in one of his prayer-meeting addresses which speak volumes as to the secret of his successful ministry:—

"I think I can honestly say that when I have had something come to me rather fine—a nice, rare oratorical bit, and I think I could do it—I think if I tried I might say something very fine—I have pulled it out of my mouth and flung it away that I might not take away the attention of any hearer from Christ crucified. 'Here is a sword.' 'But,' says one, 'it has not a handsome scabbard.' No; we pull that off. We throw that to some old rag and bone dealer. We use nothing but the blessed Gospel of Jesus Christ. When that does not save men, men shall be lost. We know nothing equal to it for the keenness of its edge; for the force with which it slays. It is a strange sword. With its edge it kills, and with its back it heals."

As will be observed by a paragraph in another column, Earl Shaftesbury recently presided over an important meeting on behalf of the Y.M.C.A. at Bournemouth. The noble Earl was supported by Earl Cairns and other influential friends. It is very desirable that the Association should be well and adequately represented in this growing town; probably some who have derived physical benefit there may wish to reciprocate it by aiding this important work.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Feb. 10, Ps. xciii. 1—5; Feb. 11, Ps. xciv. 1—14; Feb. 12, xciv. 12—23; Feb. 13, John i. 1—14; Feb. 14, John i. 15—28; Feb. 15, John i. 29—39; Feb. 16, John i. 40—51.

BY THE WAY.—A correspondent writes suggesting that travellers should drop tracts by the wayside, in order that many who would not accept them might pick them up and read them. These should consist of portions of the Word of God.

RICHARD WEAVER AT PORTSMOUTH.

THIS honoured servant of God has lately completed a fortnight's Mission at the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute. It is the first time for many years that he has visited the South of England. Miss Robinson, who remembered him well in former days, sent him an express invitation to come to Portsmouth and speak to the soldiers and poorer inhabitants of the town. For many months past, since the extension of Miss Robinson's work to her poorer neighbours who were not in the habit of attending any place of worship, she has met with a warm and eager response from them. They have flocked in numbers to the frequent meetings, and have listened earnestly to words from the Bible which seemed as a new tale to them. Miss Robinson feeling that they were needing some special effort to bring them to a decision to accept Christ as their Saviour and to live for Him, asked Richard Weaver to come and hold a Mission in her hall.

The meetings began on Sunday, Jan. 13. Although no bills had been circulated to make known his coming, the hall was crowded by some 1200 people, soldiers and civilians together. Miss Robinson trusted to these people, the usual attendants at her meetings, to make known to their friends and neighbours what was going on, and by this means avoid the disappointment of seeing ordinary church and chapelgoers crowding and filling up the seats which were intended for those who did not profess to be Christians.

Night after night the body of the hall was well filled, and many stayed behind to the inquiry-meetings seeking to know the way of salvation. It was evident that in most cases this was no sudden excitement; one after another said that they had been miserable for weeks or months past, feeling the burden of their sins, but unable to trust Jesus fully. To these it was a solemn time of gladness when they were enabled to rejoice in God their Saviour.

Several of those who came forward to be prayed for confessed that they were backsliders. One evening the evangelist said, turning to the listeners in the distant parts of the hall, with an earnest entreaty to come out boldly for Christ, "You backslider in the gallery come down." Immediately a man, who had led an outwardly respectable life, rose up in his place and walked downstairs, saying to some men who knew him, "You should not have told Mr. Weaver about me." They assured him no one had spoken of him, but the man was persuaded that Mr. Weaver had called him to come down, feeling in his own heart that he was a backslider. He went into the inquiry-room and confessed his need of forgiveness and restoration. He has attended all the subsequent meetings and has found again the peace which he had lost. Another man and woman who had been living together, although unmarried, were stirred up to feel their sin, and have now been married. Both of them have come to Christ for salvation, and show by their happy faces that a new life has begun for them.

A poor drunken woman, who came to the meeting with her head tied up in rags, and with hardly a decent garment to cover her—one for whom the Institute workers had long been praying—was so moved by the words she heard that she prayed aloud in the bitterness of her heart that God would deliver her from the power of drink. A brighter look has come into the poor disfigured face, and she seems to be really trusting in Christ to keep her. Some of the rough lads of the town who have been gathered together for weekly classes during the last few months have come out boldly for Christ. They are so earnest in seeking the salvation of their companions that at every meeting they have persuaded some other lads to stay behind in order to try and win them for Jesus. Late one night two of these lads were found in the street, one on each side of another rough fellow who was in great distress, telling him of the Saviour they had found, and entreating him not to rest from seeking Christ until he had found Him.

Every evening a half-hour prayer-meeting was held beforehand. It was attended chiefly by the soldiers, who have nightly increased in numbers. At the close of the Mission a special tea-meeting took place, to which were invited all who had come forward to confess that they had found Christ, and all who were still seeking Him. About 160 came to this meeting, in addition to the staff of workers, and the bright faces of all showed the joy that they had found. It was a solemn evening, and some who came to it in a still anxious condition, then heard the voice of Jesus saying, "Be of good cheer; thy sins are forgiven thee." Richard gave as his last message to them the words, "Watch and pray." Miss Robinson earnestly entreated the soldiers present not to be ashamed before their comrades, but to take the decided step at once of kneeling down at their cot-side in the barrack room.

There has been much talk going on throughout the barracks about Richard Weaver's meetings, and it has been felt that God has very manifestly been working in Portsmouth by him. Miss Robinson and all her helpers can truly say, in the words which hang in both her halls where the Mission has been held, "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad."

During his stay he visited the dockyard twice during the dinner-hour; he was heartily welcomed, eagerly listened to, and invited to come again.

Obituary.

DEPARTED to be with Christ, on Saturday, Jan. 26, Mr. Henry Gould, a diligent worker in the Lord's vineyard for some years past. He laboured in connection with the Evangelistic Mission at the Oxford Music Hall Services, London, and in many towns and villages in Devonshire.

Mrs. Gwillin, who was a diligent worker at the meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey during their former visit to the Metropolis, recently died, after many years of patient and effective service in conjunction with her husband, who is an elder at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Rescue of Little Girls.

SIR,—Allow me to state an easy way to save little girls from the terrible dangers to which many are exposed. I have a Cottage Home holding ten children rescued from vicious homes, where they were on the brink of ruin. Our plan is intended merely to receive them for a few weeks or months, as the case may be. When they are cleaned, clothed, and generally improved, as they soon are when removed from their bad surroundings, we pass them on to the care of Christian ladies willing to take them, and so make room for fresh children picked out of the mire.

In this and other ways many have been passed on; in the two years since the home was opened between thirty and forty have been through it. Lately, however, I have had more difficulty in getting them provided for, and the beds being full, the work of rescuing is at a standstill. Will any lady living in the country undertake to place one of the children with godly people in her neighbourhood, and pay for and watch over her? The cost is not much (5s. or 6s. a week), nor is the trouble great, while the good done is incalculable and the work is as interesting as it is useful.

I have now two or three nice little girls under twelve years old ready to be placed in this way, so as to make it possible to take others now in urgent need of rescue. I shall be very glad to give all the particulars which I cannot ask you to find room for, to any lady who will write to me. Address, Mrs. A. Johnston, Woodford, Essex.—Yours faithfully, C. Johnston.

CORRECTIONS.—In the letter by F. H. W. on "What is the Gospel?" in our last issue, the expressions "The Gospel is very brief" "on the above ground of Christ's meritorious obedience," should read, "The Gospel in very brief," and "on the alone ground," &c.

He said—Then I said.

"He said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified. Then I said, I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain."—Is. xlix. 3, 4.

HOW often what our fears suggest,
Belies the truth!
"Thou art my servant," saith the Lord:
And we, forsooth,
Must sit us down amidst our work
And weeping say,
That we have spent our strength in vain
The livelong day.

He saith, it is for Him we toil;
We say, "for nought:"
As if we owned no Master's hand,
For whom we wrought.
He saith, He will be glorified
In what we do:
Fear saith, "It is impossible."
"Can it be true?"

"In vain have I been labouring,"
She pining saith:
While he declares, 'tis to his praise.
Oh lack of faith!
"He saith"—He saith a thousand things,
How sweet, how blest!
Yet Fear will contradict his words,
Plagued and distrest.

"How can it be," the Tempter cries,
"How can it be?
Thou seest it not, thou hear'st it not:
He mocketh thee."
And Unbelief re-echoes it—
"It cannot be."
For though both are false witnesses,
They thus agree.

"He saith." Oh! let his thunders roll
Above earth's groan,
Lost in the pealing majesty,
From his high throne.
He saith, his servants serving Him,
Toil not in vain:
He saith, He will be glorified—
He will—and reign!

Children's Special Service Mission.

DEAR SIR,—May I call the prayerful attention of your readers once more to the Foreign Branch of our Society? In your issue of Dec. 27 you were kind enough to insert a letter, in which I made a special appeal for £2000. We are deeply grateful to the Lord for the response already sent to our appeal. Up to Feb. 1, £640 has come in, leaving £1360 yet to be given, if we are to accomplish this important and much needed object.

If any of your readers would like to see specimens of our beautiful picture leaflets in a few languages, I will gladly forward them on receipt of address. We have just had an application from the Bombay Tract Society for a series of the leaflets in Marathi and Gujerati: we have also recently been asked to print them in Finnish and Japanese; and how one longs to be able to print millions in Chinese!

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, before leaving for Russia, desired a grant of 10,000 in most of the twenty languages our tracts are printed in, to be sent to the Strangers' Rest at Liverpool, for distribution among the people of many nationalities who call there. A well-known writer of tracts says: "I gladly give you £2 as a donation to your admirable enterprise for the Lord Jesus—the children's leaflets in many languages."—Faithfully yours, Josiah Spiers.

FALLEN THROUGH DRINK.—In a recent address Rev. Jas. Scott, Glasgow, said: "In our evangelistic work among the poor we have helped a merchant, who once rode in his carriage; a baillie, who helped to rule this great city; a councillor, who in his civic capacity dined with royalty; doctors, and others of University training, all brought down through drink."

Mrs. Spurgeon's Book Fund.

THE eighth annual report of the Book Fund so kindly and ably managed by Mrs. Spurgeon has just been issued, and furnishes food for much profitable reflection. It proves how even in the furnace God may be glorified, and how the physically weak and weary among his children may be used of Him, and find consolation and blessing in working for the Master they love. Few know how much real need there is among pastors of rural churches and ministers of various denominations in country districts. Books are not only a luxury, but a necessary stimulus to thought for those who have to preach three and four times a week to the same people; but too often to find bread for the family is a sore difficulty with some, the purchase of books being out of the question. Mrs. Spurgeon's Fund is one which some might think small in importance, in comparison with other objects claiming our benevolence, but having regard to the fact that those benefitted by it not only profit themselves but are better fitted to profit others, there is no limit to the results which flow from her loving and zealous labours.

Take the summary of last year's work. 11,351 volumes were distributed, and between 332 Baptists, 216 Independents, 310 Methodists, 163 Church of England clergymen, 37 Presbyterians, 61 evangelists, and 2 Moravians; in all, 1155 recipients. It will be seen by these figures that the work is unsectarian, and has no regard for party lines, a feature of special beauty and value in this, as in all labours for our "one Lord." The amount expended was £1757, received in sums varying from 2s. 6d. to £50. The conditions of grants are simple and practical, they are these: the minister must be in actual charge, he must be wholly dependent on his ministry, and his total income must not exceed £150, or if unmarried £100. In some cases gifts of stationery accompany the volumes given, while still more substantial aid, in very needy cases, is also furnished; a Pastors' Aid Fund of £340 having been provided during the year. The report just issued is a charming little manual; month by month it records the dealings of God with the recipients of this bounty and with their benefactress, and that in language at once quaint and eloquent. One record tells how a clergyman devotes himself to preaching Mr. Spurgeon's sermons in various parish churches, stating that "they are the only ones which can be really understood either by himself or the congregation," and that "people begin to inquire about their souls after I have given them one of his discourses."

The amount of labour involved in the management of this Fund may be judged of from the fact that in one month (February) Mrs. Spurgeon received 657 letters, demanding no little consideration, inquiry, and arrangement, truly, as she says, "a very grave and pressing business," one which its manager loves with all her heart, even while her hands can sometimes scarcely sustain the burden it brings." Some of the facts furnished as to the needy condition of many dear and devoted servants of Christ are touching in the extreme; not a few of them are receiving from £50 to £60 a year, and have families to maintain out of it. One writes stating that he is wholly dependent on his ministry, and that brings him in 3s. 6d. a week. What wonder if their hearts are often burdened, and their spirits depressed. All honour to the kind and devoted lady who, in true sisterly affection for the Lord's sake, thus devotes time, talent, and toil to relieve, encourage, and stimulate these tried and deserving brethren. Who will not pray that this good work may continue to prosper, and its manager be long spared and strengthened to minister to those for whom her sympathies are so energetically awakened and put forth?

MR. CHARLES COOK left England on Feb. 4, accompanied by Mr. T. Clark, on a tour of visitation among foreign prisons. He wishes us to state that letters may be sent to him, care of Mr. L. Cole, 3, Piazza de Spagna, Rome, for a fortnight, and after that to Messrs. Thomas Cook & Sons' Hotel, Luxor.

Notes from the Pacific Coast.

THE work on this coast, which centres in the Y.M.C.A. at San Francisco, has, under the very able management of Mr. H. J. M'Coy, the general secretary, been much blessed within the last few months. We lately had a visit from Mr. Alexander Balfour, President of the Liverpool Y.M.C.A.; he presided at various meetings of deep interest and good effect.

On New Year's day we had an all-day reception, which was taken advantage of by three thousand young men; many of them were friendless and homeless, and would otherwise have been led into questionable company and amusements. At intervals of an hour refreshments were served and the programme was varied by music, addresses, &c. In the evening a musical entertainment was given, which was largely attended.

Reports of work in Los Angeles, Sacramento, San José, &c., are very encouraging.

Bible Stand, Crystal Palace.

FROM a circular just issued by Mr. Wm. Hawke, we find that more than eighteen millions and a half of Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, Scripture-cards and leaflets have been circulated in twenty-two languages since the opening of the Bible Stand at the London Exhibition in 1862. This work of disseminating the Word of God is still continued at the Bible Stand, Crystal Palace, the Bible Carriage in France, and by posting separate Gospels to Ireland, Spain, and Vienna, through various grants to Russia, Italy, Poland, Egypt, and other places, and by a very large number of unpaid agents at home and abroad.

The cost of 1000 Gospels, including postage, amounts to about £6, and thus, for this small sum, 1000 individuals are supplied with one of these portions of the New Testament. Help towards the circulation of the Word of God in connection with the Bible Stand may be sent to Mr. Wm. Hawke, at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, S.E.

Open-air Mission.

ON January 28 the quarterly meeting of members and friends of the Open-air Mission was held in the Mission-hall, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster; it was presided over by Mr. George A. Spottiswoode. A valuable address on "Labour—not Lost Labour" was delivered by Rev. B. Baring-Gould. In answering the question, "How can ours be a ministry of power?" he proceeded to show that the preacher must first take heed to himself. The true evangelist must be a true Christian. It was possible to seek to kindle the flame in others while our own lamp needed trimming. Again, the preacher must take heed to his ministry. The law must be preached, sin denounced, and repentance insisted upon.

As to the preacher's manner there must be reality and earnestness, and an absence of the fear of man. Rash and timid preaching must equally be avoided, while bold preaching must be practised. He showed that the ground on which the preacher might expect success was the sure word of promise—"ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." The Gospel without dilution or addition was still God's power unto salvation. But the reliance for success must be in the power of the Holy Ghost.

ITALIANS IN LONDON.—The church of St. Thomas, Liberty of the Rolls, Chancery-lane, being condemned, the congregation of Dr. Passalenti, in future, will meet at the church of St. John's, Clerkenwell, kindly granted by the Rev. W. Dawson.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION.—Many tea-meetings have been held in connection with this Mission during the winter, and blessing has followed the preaching of the Word. The object of the Mission is to reach the men engaged at the docks and wharves. Mr. C. Coleman, 32, Chamber-street, London Docks, E, is the superintendent.

A Good Work in North Italy.

IT is now nearly three years since the sad spiritual destitution of Bergamo, with its 40,000 inhabitants, pressed heavily on our hearts, awakening within us an earnest desire to make an effort to introduce the Gospel amongst them. Hitherto every effort to accomplish this had failed. The last was made some years ago by Signor Torino, Waldensian pasteur at Milan, who could have scarcely escaped with his life had it not been for the timely interference of a friend, who covered his retreat from an infuriated mob, lashed into violence by the clerical intolerance that rules in Bergamo, which for centuries has been one of the strongholds of popery in its most bigoted form.

Bergamo contains over fifty Roman Catholic churches, governed by a Bishop, besides fifteen to twenty clerical schools, and eight or ten well-appointed convents, and last though far from least in the influence it exercises over the whole province, a large and important college for the training of priests.

About two years and a half ago Signor Cesare Ginoulhiac came in contact with a poor ouvrier of Milan, who had been converted through the ministrations of some members of the Free Italian Church of Milan, and was residing at Bergamo. We heard that he was in the habit of reading the Bible to any he could induce to listen to him. A little Bible reading was opened at the man's house, where Signor Ginoulhiac regularly attended, speaking and praying with those assembled there. But these meetings were watched and reported, and soon the poor ouvrier received notice to quit. Three several times he was dislodged, and obliged to turn out with his family, and several times he was almost hopeless of obtaining lodgings anywhere in the town.

This circumstance first led Signor Ginoulhiac to try to hire a house, or even apartments, so as still to carry on the Bible readings, but always, after the first preliminaries had been agreed on, all future arrangements were suddenly cut short by some trivial excuse on the landlord's part. Signor Ginoulhiac purchased a house for the sum of £550. To adapt it to meet our purpose a further £230 was laid out. Other sums have been expended for salary of missionary, &c., as well as more than £100 given to poor brethren suffering from persecution and loss of employment.

As Signor Ginoulhiac has now left Bergamo he finds it impossible to carry on the work he has founded there. Therefore he has handed over the work to the Free Italian Church, under the supervision of the Rev. J. R. McDougal, Lungarno Guicciardini, Florence. At the same time, he binds himself to pay half the resident missionary's annual salary of £72, and to cede in gift for the work of evangelisation at Bergamo the house he purchased for this purpose. By these arrangements he has assured the well-being and continuance of the mission at Bergamo, and rests assured that the Word of God shall in the future as in the present, remain undisturbed a witness for God in his native town.

Each Sunday there are two meetings held in the Mission Hall, and a Sunday-school for the children; during the week there are three evenings set apart for the study of God's Word and the singing of hymns. Besides this an evangelical day-school is to be opened. S.

SPAIN.—The work of Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong in connection with the "Association for the diffusion of the Gospel in Spain," by means of Gospel meetings and schools, is full of encouragement. The extracts from the letters of the workers, given in the last report, are most interesting reading. Copies of the report may be had of Mr. J. B. Hunter, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.

THE INDIGENT BLIND SOCIETY record continued progress in all their operations. There are nine blind visitors who visit the homes of the blind, and hold frequent Bible-classes. Educational classes are also held, and the Temperance Society now numbers 464 members. The Secretary is Mr. W. C. Lester, 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

SIR,—Allow me to thank the many readers of The Christian who are interested in the work of the China Inland Mission, and who aid us by their sympathy and prayers, and especially those who give us many substantial proofs of their sympathy by sending us contributions, week by week, through you. Those contributions being anonymous, we can only thank the kind donors, through you, and assure them of our gratitude and of the encouragement their gifts afford us. I often think with great delight of the words, "God loveth a cheerful giver." Those who send their gifts anonymously to us, through you, are surely cheerful givers, and God loves such. We all do the best we can for those we love: how much, then, is ensured to such donors in God's great love?

A WORKER FALLEN IN THE FIELD.

I wish especially to ask the sympathy and prayer of your readers for one of our beloved and valued workers, Mr. G. W. Clarke, in the heavy bereavement he has sustained. He has been residing at Ta-li-Fu, in one of the most remote provinces of China, four months' journey from the coast, with his wife, who will be remembered by many of your readers by her maiden name, Mademoiselle Rossier, of Geneva. She was formerly a worker in connection with Mons. and Mdme. Barbier in London, in circumstances demanding great self-denial and patient continuance in well-doing, and with little apparently to encourage. Now our brother has been bereaved and left quite alone, the only Protestant missionary in the whole of the Province of Yunnan. We were rejoiced on January 2 to receive a letter from him announcing the birth of a son on the 20th of August, the letter itself being dated September 17; but a later letter, dated October 11, gives us the sorrowful tidings of his bereavement.

Our brother, Mr. Steven, who was on his way to join Mr. Clarke, on hearing of his loss, hurried forward without waiting for Mr. and Mrs. Andrew, with whom he was to have journeyed. It would have been a great joy to Mrs. Clarke had she been permitted to see Mrs. Andrew, as for two years before her death she had not seen any European sister. She is, however, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and we cannot mourn for her. Will not many of your kind readers raise their hearts to God as they read these words, that He may comfort and strengthen the hands of his tried servant in his lonely outpost? Some extracts from Mr. Clarke's letter may interest your readers.—Yours gratefully in Christ,

J. Hudson Taylor.

EXTRACTS.

"Two or three days before her death my dear wife knew she was going home. She fell asleep in Jesus on Lord's Day, October 7, just as the sun was setting on the mountain tops. Her testimony for Christ was most joyful and triumphant. On Friday afternoon we had the Lord's Supper together for the last time on earth; it was a painful, but yet peaceful, time, in the light of eternity. She often repeated to me, 'Washed in the blood of the Lamb,' and 'Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.' She said 'Oh! read to me about the New Jerusalem.' When I read 'there shall be no thirst there,' she said, 'I shall soon be at the river of the water of life, and I will drink.'

"On Saturday morning she was very happy to go home, yet sorry to leave me and our dear boy, but she felt at rest about us in the Lord. Our two women attendants and some neighbours were in the room. She asked me to sing and to let them know her peace in Jesus. I could not sing it through. I made the attempt, but could scarcely read it. I read, also, 'Leaning on Thee alone.' She helped me to sing the last verse:—

'I am sweeping through the gates
Of the New Jerusalem,'

'Leaning on Thee no fear alarms,
Although I stand on death's dark brink;
I feel the everlasting arms—
I shall not sink.'

"She then exhorted our nurse and charwoman to put away idolatry and trust in Jesus if they wished to see her again, which would be in heaven.

"A short time before her departure I asked, 'Is Jesus with you?' She bowed her head in response, and soon after fell asleep in Jesus. It was a very painful moment, but I could truly say, 'The Lord gave her to me; the Lord hath taken his own; blessed be the name of the Lord.' This is the deepest water that God has caused me to cross. Blessed be his name for the joy of knowing Jesus in every circumstance of life. Her life has been that of a pioneer in the west of China, rather than of a reaper. She has done what she could, not what she would, because of the continual hindrances.

"On Monday scores of women came to see her corpse. They were much surprised to see her just as if peacefully asleep; they had never seen any one like it before. They heard her testimony from the women who had heard her give it, and it gave me the opportunity of preaching the Gospel to them. I do hope that God will use this event to quicken some souls."

From England to China.

DEAR SIR,—It is a great privilege to be able to report one's self safely in China. To Him who has guided, preserved, and crowned the journey with such blessing, be all the praise. It is just three months since I left for Shanghai, viâ America and Japan. Some weeks were spent in the northern part of Iowa, U.S., where one was glad of an open door to speak the Gospel amid many signs of acceptance and blessing. Here in a lonely little town I had sweet fellowship with some earnest, devoted workers, who are endeavouring to hasten the coming of the Lord by seeking the salvation of those around them.

One painful feature, however, of life in the Far West (say from the confines of Nebraska to California) was the scarcity of Christian ministers, especially among people in Nevada. This is also the case, I was told, in Dakota, Montana, and other more remote places. While the Christians of America are in many ways endeavouring nobly to remedy this lack, the rapid growth of the western portion of their country renders it a most difficult task, and one could not help thinking that out here is a splendid field for many in England, who, from a variety of circumstances, cannot enter into "the regions beyond."

The work in Japan was cheering beyond all anticipation. A conference of native ministers was being held at Tokio, full of warmth and enthusiasm, though conducted amid some signs of opposition on the part of "free-thinking" Japanese; much of this resulted from the deep-seated hatred that the people cherish towards the religion of Roman Catholics.

But China is the centre of interest to me now, and I am eagerly expecting my departure for the interior. Probably when this reaches you I shall be away from Shanghai on the journey. I begin to realise something of the greatness of the work to which the Lord has called me here, and do earnestly ask to be remembered in prayer. Any communications from home will be gladly welcomed, though they come from those unknown in the flesh.

Shanghai, Dec. 12, 1883. W. Upcroft.

ISLINGTON POOR.—Rev. Philip Gast appeals for help towards providing destitute children with boots, food, and clothing, and the very poor people with food and coals. There are many sick and unable to help themselves. Mr. Gast proposes giving free teas to the most destitute; for this he will also be thankful for assistance. His labours in connection with Spencer-place Chapel are warmly commended by Mr. C. H. Spurgeon. Help may be be sent to Mr. Gast at 12, Noel-street, Islington, N.

Colar Mission.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly insert these few lines as many of our friends may be distressed by the perusal of a letter which appeared in The Christian of December 6, signed by a "Subscriber." One friend has already written to my aunt inquiring "if we are following the examples of most societies and getting into debt?" and asks, "if the Lord withholds funds, is it not a sign that you have already undertaken quite as much as He thinks you are able for?"

In February, 1884, it will be seven years since the Lord called me to his work, and ever since, to his praise be it stated, I have repeatedly and steadily refused to leave faith-lines directly or indirectly by appealing to man, though pressure was put on me to apply for the capitation grant offered by Government in 1873, as stated in our second Repor.

Whilst thanking the writer of the letter for his kind sympathy, I am distressed that any passing expression of mine should have misled him to think we were "in straits." This is the Lord's work—the souls born here are his, and He will never cease to provide for his own work.—Yours very truly, Louisa H. Anstey.

Colar, Myso e Province, India, Jan. 8.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie in Airdrie.

ON Sunday, Jan. 27, this able evangelist brought his brief labours here to a close. From beginning to end his Mission has been a marvellous success. Notwithstanding his absence, owing to the death of a child, the interest taken in the meetings by the community deepened as the days went on; not an evening passed without earnest inquirers being saved. At several of the after-meetings more than twenty stood up for prayer.

Most cheering features of the movement have been the thoroughness of the work done, and the beautiful harmony which it has evoked among Christians of all denominations.

Mr. Scroggie had among his hearers the cultured and thoughtful, and we have heard only one opinion of the setting forth of the Truth. All alike could feel and know that the work was for God and eternity, and the power from on high experience can never be forgotten. Many conversions might be quoted, one, that of a sceptic, convicted at a meeting, and converted in his work. The case of an old man may be mentioned as singularly touching. When spoken to he thought there were "poor prospects for him in eternity." But a ray from the throne soon illumined his dark heart. When calling at his humble dwelling yesterday his wife told me that "William was awfully happy noo." Coming home from the meeting with a full heart, he said, "I've got mair than a kingdom the nicht, Marget." And so it was, the dear man had at the eleventh hour become an heir of glory everlasting. Will friends everywhere pray that it may continue more abundantly through a still greater outpouring of the Holy Ghost.

John Paterson, B.D.

Wellwynd Manse, Airdrie.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCY.—Mr. Henry Hill, jun., 38, Bow-lane, E.C., has issued a circular urging the establishment of a labour and employment agency on a large scale, for the purpose of finding employment for respectable men and women. The circular contains other suggestions, and may be had at the above address.

BELMORE INSTITUTE, SOUTH LAMBETH.—Those working in connection with the Bible-class and night-school at this institute for men and lads, are desirous, as the winter comes on, of forming a club for them—that is, to have a room where the young men can spend their evenings, instead of in the streets or public-houses. Those who know the Wandsworth-road and its surroundings can understand the temptations to which these poor lads are exposed. To help and rescue such as these, it is desired to have a warm room where they may spend their evenings in the winter. Any gifts to further this effort will be thankfully received by Miss S. Mannering, 99, Stockwell Park-road, S.W. The help of any who would give an address to young men will be most welcome.

THE PEOPLE'S MISSION CHURCH.

THIS is the title of the reconstructed Mission hall attached to Dr. Barnardo's "Edinboro' Castle" Coffee Palace, Limehouse, which was formally opened on Monday week. Much is changed besides the name; the place is so thoroughly metamorphosed that the visitor had hard work to believe he was on the same ground as that occupied by the former building. When this People's Mission Church has received the finishing touches it will be one of the most convenient places of public assembly in the East of London. Seeing the spacious platform we felt rather curious as to the possible utility of the handsome pulpit that is perched high up at one corner of it. We should hardly think there are any living evangelists so benighted as to prefer the box to the broad stage. We suppose, however, it will be turned to some account, or it would not be there. To show that he is abreast of the times, Dr. Barnardo has introduced the electric light into his new and spacious tabernacle—which, by the way, is said to have a seating capacity of 3500. The large lights outside the building burned brightly on the opening night, but there was some hitch in the transmission of motive power to the incandescent lamps within, so that one could scarcely judge of the effect it will have when in full working order.

The opening meetings were held both afternoon and evening. At the former, Earl CAIRNS, as President of Dr. Barnardo's Institutions, took the chair. After a devotional service, conducted by the Rev. NEVILE SHERBROOKE and the Rev. A. G. BROWN, the Noble PRESIDENT expressed his pleasure in attending and presiding at the re-opening of that great and handsome building: "I go back to thirteen or fourteen years ago, and recollect from descriptions given of it the building which then stood upon this ground. In the front there was a gin-palace, and in the back a music-hall, and the commodities sold in the one, and the amusements provided in the other, constituted a centre of vice and immorality, which could not but be gravely deplored. It was one of the earliest acts of Dr. Barnardo in his great work in the East-end of London, to secure the possession and the purchase of the "Edinboro' Castle" when it came into the market in 1872, and the result has been most gratifying. The gin-palace was suppressed and turned into one of the most successful of the coffee-palaces which have since been raised in the metropolis and in almost all the large towns of England.

"I have always said in regard to coffee-palaces that the real test of the manner in which they were managed was whether they were able to pay their way; for some years the "Edinboro' Castle" has paid its way, and even a small profit has been made for carrying on some of the many good works of Dr. Barnardo. Next the music-hall was secured, and a place of amusements of a highly immoral character suppressed. Hundreds, if not thousands, have there found peace and happiness for their souls. That is the history of the hall in the past, and what is to be its future? I look upon it as a place where the Gospel of Christ will continue to be faithfully preached; and I look upon the crowds that have attended in this hall hitherto, as a manifestation that where the Gospel is proclaimed with earnestness, with simplicity, and with sincerity, with a full and complete persuasion on the part of the speaker of the power and importance of the message which he has to deliver, that there you will find those of the poorest of the community who will gladly come to listen to the welcome tidings.

"Do not suppose that a hall of this kind takes away from the churches. Nothing of the kind: for those who come here do not go to church; they have not the means, they have not the habit of going to a place of worship, and unless they come here, they will go to no place at all. I attach as much importance as anyone to the providing of better dwellings for those who were called the outcast; but let no one be deceived by imagining that this was all that was needed; for the provision of a better dwelling would not change a man's heart, and if a man's heart was changed he himself would be willing to do all in his power to provide for himself a good dwelling. It may be a very humble and poor dwelling, but if a man's heart has been reached by the power of the Gospel of Christ, an improvement would be seen in his dwelling, and if not suitable he will do all in his power to provide himself with a better one. In conclusion, the noble Earl spoke in very warm terms of the work Dr. Barnardo was doing, and eloquently appealed to the meeting to give him that liberal support which would enable him to open this building free from debt."

Dr. BARNARDO described his first efforts in mission work among the adult poor of Stepney and Limehouse so far back as 1868 in a very small room lent by a poor woman. Subsequently several changes were made, and in 1868 all the houses in a court known as Hope-place, World's-end, Stepney, were devoted to his mission agencies. A piece of ground in the Rhodeswell-road was bought in 1871, and upon it a tent capable of seating 3000 people was pitched. The people thronged to hear, and within three months more than 4000 total abstinence pledges were taken, notorious evil-doers reformed, and three public-houses in the neighbourhood were soon afterwards closed.

The "Edinboro' Castle," he said, had always been densely packed, and the necessity to rebuild seemed imperative to those upon whom the chief responsibility rested. An immense number of agencies had been formed and were regularly worked in connection with the "Edinboro' Castle," the largest ragged-school in the kingdom, being within a stone's throw of it, containing on an average 1700 children each Sunday night. Free schools, giving education to 600 children, were also attached thereto. Bands of Hope, sick benefit societies, burial club, building club, Dorcas societies, and a network of other important operations had their centre there, and were sustained and worked by the people themselves. He added that promises or gifts in aid of the £2500 still required to defray the total cost are urgently needed. He paid a high tribute to the kindness of Mr. S. G. Sheppard, and could not speak too highly of the self-denial of the poor people by whom he was surrounded in order to bear their part in helping forward the building of the new Mission-hall.

Rev. H. Webb Peploe, Rev. Charles Spurgeon, jun., Rev. Evan Hopkins, and Mr. Henry Varley also spoke, all expressing their heartiest good wishes for the work carried on by Dr. Barnardo.

In the evening Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD presided over a numerous assemblage of friends, all of whom seemed to take a deep and enthusiastic interest in the occasion. The speakers had many complimentary things to say about the remarkable earnestness and ability with which Dr. Barnardo has developed the work committed to his stewardship in the East End and elsewhere. We have sometimes condoled with the Doctor because of the hardness of hearing with which he is afflicted; on this occasion we felt as though that affliction might stand him in good stead, and prevent him from being unduly elated by the praise of his friends.

Mr. BLACKWOOD, taking for his text the rescue of the Edinboro' Castle in past times from evil uses, its present reconstruction, and its reconsecration to God's service, preached an admirably impressive sermon, suited alike to saint and sinner. JOSHUA POOLE, whose name is closely linked with the early history of the place as a Gospel centre, was present by special invitation, and delighted the audience with his reminiscences of bygone days, his rousing exhortations on the benefits of total abstinence, and on the necessity of being enrolled in the "Born Again Society." He said that when the fiddler and his wife came, the landlord of the "Edinboro' Castle" made a great noise, but they fiddled him out and Dr. Barnardo in. The allusion to Mary Poole, whose name and memory are dear to thousands, elicited the expression of tender affection towards her. Joshua spoke with such wonderful fire and vigour that we could not help wishing him a full restoration to health, that he might once more tell out the story of a Saviour's love and grace.

Every listener must have been interested and thrilled by Mr. ARCHIBALD BROWN'S narrative of his conversion through the instrumentality of Mr. Blackwood, the chairman of the evening. Mr. Brown was very warm also in his commendation of the work of his friend and fellow-labourer, Dr. Barnardo. He did not think that even the People's Mission Church would succeed in attracting the lowest stratum of the East-enders; these could only be evangelised by hand-to-hand work—in house-to-house visitation. In the course of his telling address he strongly emphasised the need of presenting an unadulterated Gospel to the people, and of more enthusiasm in the Lord's service. Equally hearty were the remarks that followed from Rev. G. S. Reaney, Mr. H. M. Matheson, and Dr. Heywood Smith. We must not forget to mention that a lady charmed, and we trust profited, the audience by a very fine and impressive rendering of "Over the Line," one of the hymns in Mr. Sankey's collection.

As up to Saturday evening £6100 were received or promised, the main hall, seating 3500, was announced to be opened the following day, but the several new approaches were still closed and will be till the money required is in hand.

The new and spacious building was crowded out on Sunday last, when Mr. Henry Varley preached morning, afternoon, and evening. Hundreds could not obtain admission at night. The meetings were felt to be seasons of power and blessing. Mr. Varley preached in the evening from John iii. 14. The sweetness, simplicity, and integrity of the old, old story were clearly stated, illustrated, and emphasised. About fifty believers received the right hand of fellowship from Dr. Barnardo, who welcomed these new fruits of the ministry of Christ in this important centre of Christian effort.

Richard Weaver begins a month's Mission next Sunday, when he will preach at 11, 3, and 7.

We are desired to correct a slight inaccuracy in the brief notice of the opening services which we gave last week. The £2000 mentioned is not as stated, the cost of "alterations and improvements," but of heating, seating, and the introduction of the electric light.

CITY WAREHOUSES.—A conference was held at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on the 28th inst., for the purpose of making some arrangement for extending the work of Gospel Temperance among those employed in City warehouses, already begun by Mr. J. Orchard and Mr. S. Ireland. It is desired to hear from any gentleman who is willing to have a monthly meeting for his employés. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Sec., City Gospel Temperance Mission, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

STRANGERS' REST, MADEIRA.—We have received the annual report of Mr. W. G. Smart's work at this port. 724 vessels entered the port from Jan. 1 to Dec. 11; nearly all were visited personally or had a parcel of religious literature sent on board. About 50,000 tracts were given away in addition to magazines, illustrated newspapers, and Scripture portions. Sixty-nine shipwrecked seamen were landed here during the year; all of these boarded at the Rest, and the opportunity was not lost of pressing home on them the necessity for a change of life, and of giving thanks to God for their preservation.

YOUNG WOMEN IN LONDON.—A Drawing-room meeting was held at 4, Inverness-terrace, Kensington-gardens, W., on the 30th ult., the Rev. I. F. Sulivan in the chair. Miss Raymond gave a very interesting account of the work in the Walworth-road district, and urged the great need of more help to extend this important work in the south-east of London. Earnest addresses were also given by Mr. A. G. Watson and Rev. J. A. Jacobs, followed by a few words by the secretary, Mr. Geo. Hughes. Any who may feel the intense importance of the subject can obtain information on application to the Secretary, Y.W.C.A., 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

I'll Sing upon the Way.

FAR distant from my Father's house
I would no longer stay;
But gird my soul and hasten on,
And sing upon the way!

The skies are dark, the thunders roll,
And lightnings round me play;
Let me but feel my Saviour near,
I'll sing upon the way!

The night is long and drear; I cry,
Oh, when will come the day!
I see the morning star arise,
And sing upon the way!

When care and sickness bow my frame,
And all my powers decay,
I'll ask Him for his promised grace,
And sing upon the way!

He'll not forsake me when I'm old,
And weak, and blind, and gray;
I'll lean upon his faithfulness,
And sing upon the way!

When angels bear me home to heaven,
Disrobed of mortal clay,
I'll enter in the pearly gates,
And sing upon the way!

Evangelists for the Continent.

A PRAYER MEETING was held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Monday, January 28, to commend to God Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, with his wife and daughter, who left England on the 29th for Berlin and St. Petersburg, Dr. Ziemann, who was about to leave for Bonn, and Mr. William Soltau, who joins Mr. McAll in Paris.

Mr. RADCLIFFE said that in going out to the Continent he felt it very important the members of Christian churches should be stirred up to prayer on behalf of the outcast of London as well as the Continent. His strong opinion was that until the poor saints in the garrets and attics of the great metropolis were sought out and cared for by Christians, much blessing from the Lord could not be expected. He urged that Christians should try and establish prayer-meetings in the slums for the benefit of those who cannot come to the churches. This could be done without expense and with little labour.

Dr. ZIEMANN gave an account of the great progress of the work in Germany, and said he was now leaving for Bonn in order to preach to the students "the unsearchable riches of Christ."

Mr. WILLIAM SOLTAU said he hoped soon to be able to preach the Gospel to the French. A Russian gentleman urged the claims of the Continent, and exhorted that the oneness of the disciples spoken of in John xvii. should be more sought after by the Lord's people.

We are glad to know that Mrs. Ziemann is recovering from her severe illness, thus enabling her husband, with her express wish, to go to Bonn on his present Mission.

Pampered Vice.

A GREAT public meeting was held on Thursday week, in Lincoln, at which the State regulation of vice was condemned by an audience of about two thousand persons. The principal speakers were Rev. Mr. Chancellor and Canon Leeke, of Lincoln; Mr. H. J. Wilson, J.P., of Sheffield; Mr. Alfred S. Dyer and Mrs. Ormiston Chant, of London, and the Countess Schack, of Berlin.

The Derbyshire Advertiser reports at length a very influential meeting, held last week at Derby, over which the Mayor presided, and which was addressed by Mrs. Butler, Mrs. Chant, Countess Schack, Professor Stuart, Mr. J. Wilson, Mr. Joseph Arch, and other gentlemen. It will be remembered that Sir Wm. Harcourt is M.P. for Derby. One object of this meeting was to bring a not unwelcome pressure to bear upon him in his capacity of Home Secretary.

The National Association is arranging for a "great meeting of the people," in favour of the repeal of the C. D. Acts, to be held in St. James's Hall, London, on February 28.

Foreign and Continental Notes.

BASLE.

THE Society of Bâle Missions has just inaugurated a new building destined to receive the daughters of missionaries.

CAWNPORE.

Mr. Arthur Foy writes of much encouragement in the Lord's work at Cawnpore. Recently he had the privilege of preaching the Gospel to fifty men and thirty women in the employ of a Christian landlord.

ASKOR, INDIA.

At Askor, a village in India, fifty-four converts have joined the Church as the result of a prayer-meeting held there by some Christian students of Serampore College, who, on their way home for the holidays, held such a meeting in every village at which they stopped.

ROUMANIA.

Roumanian papers announce that a considerable number of the inhabitants have made known their decision to come out from the Eastern Greek Church in order to join the Protestant. They are led to this by the crying abuses practised in every direction in the National Church.

HONDURAS.

Mr. Robert, of the Wesleyan Mission in British Honduras, has lately paid a visit to the neighbouring province of Spanish Honduras. The Government there have expelled the Jesuits, and the people are eager for the Gospel. We are glad to hear that a Wesleyan Mission has been promptly started in Spanish Honduras.

FRANCE.

The Chambre Haute is the name of the new French monthly organ of prayer-meetings, revivals, and of the Evangelical Alliance. It contains short articles, varieties, some religious items, with frequent mention of the Salvation Army, of which it seeks to take the most favourable view.

The Société Evangélique de France reports some encouragement in its efforts to cheer and instruct the lonely Protestants of some of the departments.

GIBRALTAR MISSION.

The Mission which commenced here on Tuesday, Jan. 8, was brought to a close on Thursday last, the 24th ult. The meetings throughout have been very encouraging, and at the close nearly a hundred memorial cards were applied for from those who had received blessing. Major Graves was much encouraged to find that many of those who professed conversion during his former visit here, in connection with Rev. W. E. Clewerth, were remaining steadfast, especially among the military. Major and Mrs. Graves left us on the 25th for Genoa.

G. H.

BELGIUM.

Le Chrétien Belge is much struck in reading the reports of the missionary agents at work in Belgium, at the large number of Romanists who take part in the meetings. Near Charleroi a meeting was opened about six months ago, where the Word of God is read and explained every Thursday evening; about 100 persons are present, of whom eighty or ninety are Romanists. Women are in the majority, which is rarely the case at the commencement of any Gospel work among Roman Catholic populations. Many Bibles and New Testaments are sold after each meeting. Similar encouraging reports are given of Antwerp, Brussels, Ostend, &c.

FRENCH PROTESTANTISM.

The Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christenaom says that "The adversary is insinuating among Christians distrust for the Bible; faith is undermined; the truth of God recedes to the background; real grasping of the facts of Scripture with intellect and faith is rare. Truth is given piecemeal, and remains vague and intangible; and the mind of the hearer or reader remains unimpressed, and his soul unsaved. We believe this to be the reason of the failure of French Protestantism as a thing of might; its roots are not striking down deep into the living stream. Complaints are general; much apparent sowing, and very little reaping; great opportunities, but few results; old societies tottering on their foundations for want of funds, but much more for want of men."

BERLIN.

Mr. Julius Rohrbach, formerly one of Mr. Grattan Guinness's students, has issued a report of his work in Berlin. The Mission premises are situated in a district containing 42,000 inhabitants, amongst whom are many workmen, and which has only one church, seating about 500. Mr. Rohrbach and his wife have brought into active operation a coffee-house, Gospel meetings, Bible and prayer-meetings, men and youths' Christian associations, women and young women's unions, children's meetings, mothers' meetings, &c.

Their object is to lead men "from darkness to light," and God has greatly blessed the work. Believers have been added to the Mission, and these in their turn are trained to witness for Christ by lip as well as life; the evangelistic work is therefore spreading beyond their bounds, and they now feel the necessity of building a larger hall. The sum required for this purpose is about £500, of which they have in hand about £100. Friends in England desirous of forwarding so good a work may receive further information from Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W.

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH.

M. Casalis in his book "Mes Souvenirs," relates a touching instance of missionary devotion, which he met at one of the stations in Cape Colony. After having been hospitably entertained by the missionary's wife, he was expecting to see Mr. Melvill. When the hostess saw that M. Casalis was sufficiently refreshed, she led him to the church, and there to his great astonishment he saw a man lying on a bed under the pulpit. It was the missionary, who cordially and affectionately welcomed him.

"My young colleague," he said, "some years ago I was a missionary at Philippolis, when I heard of a population living at the source of the Orange River, and I made an excursion to the borders of the country where God is leading you. I envy your position. To have new peoples to conquer for Jesus Christ—what a privilege! As for me, I can no longer even walk the short distance from my house to this temple. Not being able to go up to the pulpit without being carried like a child and suffering much, I make a pulpit of my bed. I have now nothing to do but to speak of my Saviour to all those who are seeking Him; and when the Sunday comes I hold my two services without fatigue. I am here waiting the call of my God." And in fact he died shortly afterwards.

Prayer for the Friendless and Fallen.

THE workers in connection with the Homes of the London Preventive and Reformatory Institution having so greatly increased during recent years, it became necessary to secure a larger and more central place in which to hold the New Year's devotional meeting. The Council Chamber at Exeter Hall was therefore selected as the place of meeting. There a goodly number of Christian friends attended last week. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. Mr. Thomas submitted a brief statement of the work, from which it appeared that there are at least 1450 religious services held annually in the Homes, besides 800 classes, conducted chiefly by ladies. During 1883 about one thousand young women and girls were admitted. Mr. Thomas attends every morning at the Open-all-Night Refuge, in order to encourage those who are temporarily admitted with a view to their permanent reclamation.

The chairman read a portion of the Word of God, which was followed by prayer. Mr. Haig Miller addressed the workers, showing the great importance of utilising every moment of time in promoting the glory of God. It was announced that many friends in distant parts of the country had promised to unite in prayer at the same hour for a still greater blessing on the work of the ensuing year.

MR. GEORGE MULLER, with his wife, were expected to reach Calcutta on Jan. 11, and to address various gatherings of Christians during his stay in the city.

SIDCUP.—A branch of the Y.W.C.A. has been commenced in Sidcup, Kent, and is progressing satisfactorily. The need for a library is greatly felt. If any of our readers are disposed to send books to start this, they should address to Mrs. Billett, Secretary, Westwood, Sidcup, Kent.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

THE quarterly conference of the friends and workers of this Mission was held at the Institution, St. George-street, E., on January 29. Colonel Handyside presided. Brief statements were made by about twenty of the workers, showing that the attendance at the schools had increased, the reading-rooms had been well frequented, numbers of seamen had become total abstainers, and many had given their hearts to God. Addresses were given by Mr. M. H. Hodder, Mr. G. Wade, and Captain Dalrymple. The latter said, that from over forty-five years' knowledge of the mercantile marine, he was sure that there was a very great improvement in our sailors; never were there so many sober and Christian seamen as at present. A Gospel Temperance address was given in the same place on Tuesday evening by Mr. Wm. Rains, of the National Temperance League; the chapel was well filled, and at the close of the meeting ten sailors and others signed the pledge.

An East-end Birthday Party.

ON February 1, 1883, the St. Benet's Regiment of the "Church Army" came into existence. Friday last, being the first anniversary of its natal day, was signalised by a special meeting, at which some friends and fellow-workers at other places were present. Though Rev. Thomas Richardson is nominally Commander of the regiment, the real work has been carried on by his wife and three daughters, some of whom are in attendance at the Mission-hall every evening all the year round.

During the interesting proceedings of Friday evening, Mr. Richardson, who presided, gave a summary of the year's work. Though it was now called by a modern name, he said, it was only a development of what he had been endeavouring to do for many years. Constant parish visitation is carried on by the "soldiers." Speaking of the Temperance department, he said that about 1570 pledges had been taken during the year; his experience was, that in nine cases out of ten pledge-signing was a distinct step towards a complete surrender to the Lord Jesus Christ. Nearly 300 names had been taken at the after-meetings in the course of the twelve months; an analysis of this catalogue, by Mr. Richardson, showed that a goodly proportion of these have, in one way or another, joined the ranks of the one great Army of the living God. This work is carried on in no sectarian spirit. So long as the people get enlisted for Christ it matters little under what banner they march. A most interesting and well-conducted monthly broadsheet, called The Helmet, is published by the friends at St. Benet's, the articles being mainly by the soldiers themselves.

The programme of Friday's meeting was a varied one, and if space did not fail us much could be said that would be sure to excite the interest of the reader. There was plenty of lively singing, earnest praying, some admirable testimonies from the young recruits, and solemn Gospel appeals to the unsaved by two fellow-soldiers from Richmond. We were deeply impressed with the reality of the work that is going on at St. Benet's, and we commend it to the prayerful remembrance of all who are interested in the evangelisation of the people.

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION.—A six nights' Blue Ribbon Mission has recently been conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Wilson at King's-cross. The meetings were well attended, and fifty signed the pledge. A second Mission by Mr. and Mrs. Wilson closed on Feb. 4 with further encouragement.

CORRECTION.—The Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland has 193 colporteurs, who spend all their time in the sale of books; it also has 13 book agents. In addition to 30,000 Bibles, 17,000 Testaments were sold last year. The 300,000 books and periodicals mentioned in our last, represent only a small proportion of the actual number of all sorts of religious books and periodicals. The numbers quoted in our note were only those of specially selected books.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

BOLTON.—Three weeks' Mission services, conducted by the pastor, Rev. B. J. Harker, have been held in connection with Duke's Alley Congregational Church, Bolton, resulting it is believed in not a few conversions.

MORNINGTON HALL (Hampstead-road), a branch of the Evangelistic Mission, has been the scene of much blessing in the conversion of souls, during a recent three weeks' nightly Mission in preaching and singing the Gospel, conducted by Mr. Thomas Wales, assisted by his son and daughter.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker have held special services at this place. About 1500 different persons have heard the Gospel, and the power of the Lord was present to heal. A hundred and fifty inquirers were pointed to the Saviour, many of whom are now rejoicing in Christ.

DORKING.—A work has been commenced in the lower store of a granary, on High Tree Farm, Newdigate, near Dorking, under the auspices of the Dorking Christian Workers' Union. It was opened by a week's Mission, which proved such a blessing, that the effort was continued another week. The meetings were well sustained by Mr. Brace, Mr. Bass, and others.

MR. STANLEY P. SMITH has concluded a most successful nine days' Mission at St. Peter's Mission Church, Heeley, Sheffield. The message of God's grace was delivered with immense power by the young evangelist, who attracted overflowing congregations. The after-meetings gave evidence of large results. Scores of young persons, it is believed, were won to Christ. C. C.

LINTON, CAMBS.—Miss Harriet Green, of Saffron Walden (minister in the Society of Friends), has recently conducted a week's special services in the Congregational Chapel in this place, by invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. W. Green. The power of God was present to wound and to heal, to kill and make alive, and many professed to have found peace by believing in Him who was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.

DEVONSHIRE.—Great blessing attended a series of special services held last month in the neighbourhood of Barnstaple. Several most interesting cases of conversion occurred. One young man—a ringleader in mischief—is now rejoicing in Jesus; a man and wife found the Saviour together at one meeting, and went home full of joy; another poor broken-hearted man came two miles to the service, and returned happy in Jesus to his wife, who said, "We had no sleep till four o'clock in the morning—we were so happy praising the Lord."
G. PARKER.

SHETLAND, N.B.—We have had a ten days' Mission in the place of worship where I am honoured with preaching two or three times weekly. The preacher on this occasion was a stranger. Never did I hear the Gospel preached with more freshness, quiet earnestness, and obvious interest. We are all thankful to the Wesleyan churches here for this visit of Mr. Byles, their district missionary.

I am thankful to friends in the South who communicated to me, in answer to my request in THE CHRISTIAN. Their interest shows that many think of these Isles. The success of the last two or three fishing seasons has in every way increased their importance, and our responsibilities in proportion. WILLIAM FALCONER.
Scalloway, Jan. 23.

A WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG WOMEN will be held from Feb. 10 to 17, at the various Institutes for Young Women in London. Particulars of the meetings may be had of Miss Ely, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W. The meetings are at 3.30 on Sundays and 8.30 p.m. on week nights. Short addresses will be given by various servants of Christ.

THE WHITE FIELDS OF EAST LONDON.—Sir,—We have commenced erecting a suitable Gospel Hall, with cottage attached, in Dace-road, Wick-lane, E.; we are only waiting their completion to extend our plans, and enlarge our agencies to reach the poor around. With the completion of this building, now requiring only £500, we shall have five such halls, besides three schoolrooms, where in various ways we are reaching both the young and old, in needy localities north and east of London. W. CHORLEY.
79, Norfolk-road, Islington, N.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

AT the usual monthly gathering of workers at the Strangers' Rest on Friday last, Dr. Ziemann gave a most interesting account of his recent evangelistic work in Germany. He asked continued prayer on his behalf, as he returns to his own country on Monday.

Mr. FRANK H. WHITE gave a most helpful address to the workers on "Heavenly service in earthly spheres," basing his remarks on Rev. vii. It is not great gifts or talents God uses, but likeness to Himself; the one who walks nearest to God in his daily life will be the one filled with power.

Mr. KELLAWAY, who presided, said they were in great need of sailors' bags; will the kind friends who are so interested in this work do what they can to supply this lack? A sample bag, report, or any information, may be had by applying to the Hon. Sec., 163, St. George-street, Ratcliffe Highway, E.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond and the Children

THE recent labours of Mr. Hammond at Camden, New Jersey, have been greatly blessed. Large audiences crowded the Trinity Baptist Church and Centenary Church three times a-day for three days to hear Gospel sermons and thrilling stories of conversion.

At one of the afternoon meetings, in spite of the snow, a great crowd attended. Many of the children came with their slates and books right from school. Mr. Hammond gave to each child a little story he had written for them. He first repeated and explained it. In the inquiry-meeting a young girl sat deeply moved, her head bowed, and tears trickling down her cheeks; at last the light seemed to dawn for her. Mr. Hammond asked her if her father and mother were Christians. "Oh yes," she said, "and they'll be so glad to know that I have given my heart to Christ." Soon her father stood beside her, and as the meeting was just breaking up, he said, so that all could hear him: "My daughter has truly found the Saviour; she has made a fortune. I would rather hear this than to hear that she had received a million of dollars."

Hundreds of children have professed conversion, and there is great joy in many households as the result of the meetings held.

GENERAL GORDON.—On Friday last a special meeting for prayer and supplication on behalf of General Gordon—now on his perilous mission in Egypt—was held in the council-room of the Evangelical Alliance in the Adelphi. There was a good attendance, and much earnest prayer offered.

BOURNEMOUTH Y.M.C.A.—The Earl of Shaftesbury and Earl Cairns recently delivered addresses at a crowded meeting held in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association at Bournemouth. Lord Shaftesbury, who presided, urged upon the meeting to take warning from the sad state of some parts of London. Having known London for the last fifty years, and gone into almost every hole and corner of it, he believed that, bad as it is, it would have been even worse but for the counteracting influence of institutions such as they were met to advocate. We were now paying for the unwarrantable and unprincipled neglect of our forefathers, who in their greed had allowed houses to be so constructed that crime and immorality must of necessity prevail in those localities. He further urged the importance of institutions like this in the present day, with its whirling progress of irreligious thought. He characterised it as worse than insanity for Churchmen to separate themselves from Nonconformists in any of the religious movements of the day. Earl Cairns also spoke of the great temptations to infidelity, scepticism, and immorality with which young men are surrounded in our cities and in towns. Someone told him the other day that where forty years ago there was one source of dangerous amusement open to young men in London, there were now twenty of a dangerous and worse than dangerous character.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For much blessing in the conversion of souls through the work of the Evangelistic Mission in its several branches in London and the provinces.——For much blessing on three weeks' special meetings at Mornington Hall, Hampstead-road ——For great blessing on Messrs. Mateer and Parker's Mission at Stratford-on-Avon.——For special blessing at the Metropolitan Music Hall this year, and for a dancing hall obtained for the Lord's work.——For much blessing at Sedgefield, Hailsham, and Godstone.

PRAYER.—That Joshua Poole may be restored from the nervous debility from which he suffers so much, and raised up to preach the Gospel as of old. ——That great blessing may attend a prayer-meeting conducted by Rev. Marcus Rainsford.—— For a Mission shortly to be held at Old Hutton and Garnet Bridge, Westmoreland.——For a Mission at Hartley, Wintney, Hants, Feb. 2 to 13, by Rev. R. D. Monro.——For a week of special services at Strand-street Institute, Dublin, commencing on Sunday, Feb. 10.——For success on Mr. Cook's visit to foreign prisons.——For one who writes: "I do fear I have quenched the Spirit. Pray nightly to God for me."——For an abundant outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the parish of Feltwell during a Gospel Mission.

Mission Appeals.

DISTRESS IN BELLEVILLE.—MISS DE BROEN is about to open a soup kitchen daily for a short time, in the hope of doing something towards meeting the crying need around her, consequent upon 1 0.000 men being out of work. The expense entailed will necessarily be very heavy, and the smallest contributions will be gratefully received by Miss DE BROEN, 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

GIFFARD HALL MISSION—Mr. BENJAMIN CLARKE, Superintendent of this Mission, situated in Giffard-street, Caledonian-road, appeals for help for the various operations of an undenominational Mission Church, with upwards of 150 members, and twenty other agencies among the young and old, for their spiritual and moral good. The work has been established for twenty years.

PRESTON, LANCASHIRE.—Rev. W. F. NEWTON, St. Mark's Vicarage, appeals for £600 towards £1500 required for building an infants' schoolroom sadly needed. Mr. Newton labours in a very poor parish; the people themselves have raised £670. The sphere is large, and the work urgent. Help will be thankfully received by Mr. Newton.

ORPHANS AT LAHORE.—Three girls in the Christian Girls' School at Lahore have just been left fatherless, friendless, and unprovided for. The girls are aged from seventeen to fourteen, so they will soon help themselves. Friends of the Mission are asked to raise £40 towards their support and education. Miss Wallinger, who knows the schools, and has lately returned to this country from India, will give £18. Who will help? Mrs. GILMORE, of the Indian Female Normal School, would gladly receive contributions at 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

Notices.

MR. W. R. LANE has removed to 20, Nightingale-road, Harlesden, N.W.

MR. F. C. SPURR has removed to 50, Claremont-road, Forest-gate, London, E.

THE address of Mr. William Soltau in Paris will be 70 Rue la Fontaine, Auteuil.

Mission Work among the Masses.

£6,100 having been received towards the rebuilding of

THE EDINBURGH CASTLE,

The Main Hall will be opened (D.V.) for Services nightly, beginning on SUNDAY, 10th FEBRUARY, 1884.

£1,900 is, however, still needed to complete, and friends of Gospel work among the poor are invited to contribute towards this amount.

"MRS. J———," who has already given £100, offers £100 more if nine other donors will each promise to give a like amount by 1st May.

"A MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL" promises £25 if nineteen others will each promise a similar donation.

"A YOUNG GIRL" (G. M. S. B.) undertakes to collect £10 by the end of May, if nine others will follow her example.

All gifts should be plainly stated to be for "The Edinburgh Castle Fund," and may be addressed to the Treasurer—

WM. FOWLER, ESQ., M.P.; or to DR. T. J. BARNARDO,

18 to 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

PRESSED FOR FUNDS!

DEAR FRIENDS,—On behalf of the Committee of the Latymer Road Mission, I have much pleasure in inviting you to pay a visit to the Institution any evening during the week, so that you may judge for yourself of our work amongst the young people of this dark neighbourhood. At the present moment we are sadly in need of money to carry on the work. Amongst many other agencies I may mention the Infant Nursery, the Ragged Boys' Shelter, the Girls' Shelter, the Mothers' Meetings, the Sunday Schools, the Children's Services, the Soup Kitchen, the Invalid Children's Dinner Table. Messrs. Morgan and Scott will gladly take charge of any donations, which may also be sent to me.

AULAY MACAULAY, Hon Sec.,
Latymer Road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting-hill, W.

The total attendances during the last 7 days were about 2,000.

By D. L. MOODY.

CONTENTS.

"LOVE THAT PASSETH KNOWLEDGE."	WORDS OF COUNSEL.
CHRIST ALL AND IN ALL.	A DIVINE SAVIOUR.
THE GATEWAY INTO THE KINGDOM.	REPENTANCE AND RESTITUTION.
THE TWO CLASSES.	ASSURANCE OF SALVATION.
	BACKSLIDING.

"The strongly-marked characteristics of its author are displayed in "The Way to God," by D. L. MOODY, closing with a very earnest appeal to backsliders....The American Evangelist is specially effective in his remark on backsliding parents. He declares that he has never known a man and his wife backslide without its proving utter ruin to their children."—Christian Leader, Jan. 17, 1884.

"The Addresses are intensely biblical, and direct in appeal."

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a YOUNG LADY in DEEP CONSUMPTION—Reported by Rev. T. P. BULLEN, of ROSALIE, BRINNINGTON-RISE, STOCKPORT.

"MY DEAR SIR,—For some years I have been an advocate of your Balsam for Bronchitis, Consumption, &c. I have distributed copies of your book, and given your medicine to patients, with the very best possible effects.

"This case especially has come under my personal notice:—A young lady who had been treated by two doctors for a long time, and got no better, but worse, at last was given up by them as incurable, in the last stage of consumption. Her own minister, just going away for a few weeks, called on her, and bade her a long good-bye, never expecting to see her again on 'this side of the river.' As a last resource your treatment was adopted, with this result: that she thoroughly recovered, and has enjoyed fairly good health ever since.

"Yours very truly, T. P. BULLEN."

In a letter dated January 3, 1884, Mr. Bullen writes: "Thanks for the medicine and books. I have received already a good testimony to the efficacy of the same from one whom I advised a fortnight ago. A consumptive patient, with a troublesome cough, declares she is not like the same person. This is good," &c. &c.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

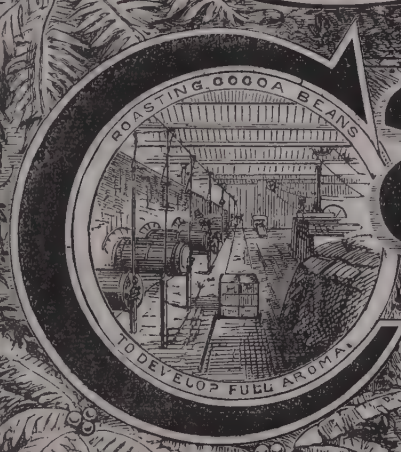
Cadbury's



ABSOLUTELY PURE.

"GENUINE." The Lancet "ECONOMICAL." Medical Times. "NUTRITIOUS." British Med. Journal.

The Lancet (July 27, 1867) says:—"We have examined the samples brought under our notice, and find that they are genuine, and that the Essence of Cocoa is just what it is declared to be by Messrs. CADBURY BROTHERS.

A large breakfast cup of delicious Cocoa may be secured for the cost of one halfpenny, by using CADBURY'S Cocoa Essence, which goes three times as far as the best of the so-called "prepared Cocoas." A sixpenny packet makes 14 breakfast cups of strong Cocoa.

Theobromine and Gluten are the stimulating and flesh-forming constituents of genuine Cocoa. Dr. MUTER has made the following table of comparative values:—

	Cocoa Nibs. Genuine.	Cocoa Essence. Genuine.	Mixture No. 1. Starch and Sugar.	Mixture No. 2. Starch and Sugar.
Theobromine	0·20	1·20	0·43	0·50
Gluten	12·21	18·30	6·45	7·35

And adds:—"Thus we clearly see the nonsense talked by those who, for reasons best known to themselves, are found to palliate, and even support in writing, the 'preparation of Cocoa,' by mixing it with starch and sugar"—Analyst, April, 1·79.

CAUTION.—Imitations of Cadbury's Cocoa Essence are often pushed by Shopkeepers for the sake of extra profit. Be sure that you obtain the Original Article, which may be relied upon for excellence of quality, purity, and strength.

GARFIELD HOUSE....361, Brixton-road, S.W.
ALEXANDRA HOUSE..88, St. John-street, E.C.
KENNETT HOUSE.....13, The Paragon, New Kent-rd., S E.

Treasurer—The Hon. A. F. KINNAIRD, 50, South Audley-street, W.
Honorary Director—JOHN SHRIMPTON, Esq., 38, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.
Bankers—Messrs. RANSOM, BOUVERIE & CO., 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

EXTENSION OF MORLEY HOUSE.

In none of the Homes has the appreciation of a "really happy home" been more apparent than at MORLEY HOUSE, 14, Fitzroy-street, W., and the number of applicants for admission far exceeds the number (40) which the house can possibly accommodate.

At the rear of the House there are some buildings, hitherto used as stables, and these buildings, having now been secured by the Trustees, are being adapted for household purposes, and provision is thus being made for twenty-eight additional beds.

The alterations and furnishing will necessitate an expenditure of Eight Hundred Pounds, but it is earnestly asked that this sum may be forthcoming, so that this much-needed extension may not have to be left unfinished for want of funds.

Samuel Morley, Esq., M.P., has very kindly offered to give £200 towards this much-needed extension, provided that the remaining Six Hundred Pounds be contributed in any sums, by February 29, 1884.

WILL YOU KINDLY HELP BY SENDING A DONATION—ANY SUM, TO ASSIST IN RAISING THE £600?

All DONATIONS to be addressed to the Honorary Director, John Shrimpton, Esq., 38, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.
Cheques, and Postal or Post Office Orders, to be crossed Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie & Co.

By J. R. ANDREWS,

Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell to the Death of Charles I."

In cloth (with Portrait), 1s.

Superior Edition in large type, for Presentation, cloth, bevelled boards (with Portrait), price 2s.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."—Methodist Recorder.

The Committee feel that the time has arrived when they should inform the friends of Israel what, by God's help, they have been enabled to accomplish since they issued their first appeal a few months ago.

The result of that appeal has been that upwards of £2000 was in a short time subscribed by the Christian public, and the Committee take this opportunity of thanking all the donors for their ready help in this good work, and especially do they desire to express their gratitude to God for disposing the hearts of his people to respond to their call for support.

A Property has been bought.

This has enabled the Committee to enter into a contract for purchasing a property called "Artouf," about half way between Jerusalem and Jaffa, and three miles off the main road connecting these places. It is supposed to be the Mahaneh-Dan which is said in Judges xiii. 25, to be between Zorah and Eshtaol, where the Spirit of the Lord first moved Samson to perform his mighty deeds. Towards the east of Artouf are the ruins of an old place, which is believed to be the house of Joseph of Arimathea. The neighbourhood is rich in ancient and hallowed associations. The land is principally in two valleys, and up the slopes of the hills on either side; and from the house and the farm buildings which are attached the whole property can be seen. There are 1250 English acres, water can be had in the valleys, and the innumerable cisterns on the hill will preserve an abundant supply.

The cost of the property is £1800, of which £800 have been paid, and the balance is to be paid at the end of a year.

The Refugees have been placed upon it.

The property was taken possession of by our friends in Jerusalem, on October 24, when the Revs. A. H. Kelk and H. Friedländer, with their families, and many of the Refugees went down to Artouf, and with prayer and praise solemnly dedicated it to God's service, and earnestly sought His guidance and blessing for the future.

A number of Refugees, selected as most suitable for the work, with their families, about 200 in all, have by this time been settled on the property.

The whole arrangements for the working of the settlement and the guidance of the settlers have been placed in the hands of a Christian man who is fully acquainted with the country, has also intimate knowledge of the Jews, and is responsible to the Jerusalem Committee.

Difficulties realised.

The Committee are not ignorant of the difficulties which are before them in the attempt they are making to find a home in Palestine for these Refugees.

They know that until the land can yield a return, care must be taken to make suitable provision for the settlers, if they would avoid the calamities which have befallen recent attempts to form Jewish colonies in Palestine.

They feel, however, that this is no plan of their own, nor are they attempting to do the work which belongs to God, but that they are only following the leadings of his providence in thus trying to find a home for some of his outcast people; and as it is undertaken simply for his glory, and with the hope of winning some to Jesus, they trust that they may look with confidence for his blessing.

In all Temporal Matters

the Committee will have the experienced counsel of the members of the Jerusalem Committee, all of whom have long and intimate knowledge of the people and the land. In addition to this, Captain Conder, R.E., whose name is so well known in connection with the Palestine Exploration Society, has kindly offered his valued advice to the London Committee.

The property being but a ride from Jerusalem, the settlers will be within reach of that inestimable boon—medical advice.

It will thus be seen that so far as human agency is concerned, the Committee have been greatly favoured in obtaining the services of those who are so admirably qualified for the work, and while they humbly acknowledge that God alone can give them that wisdom which they so much need, whether it be required for temporal or spiritual matters, they yet feel assured that the names recorded will inspire confidence in their friends and supporters, and ensure that sympathy and aid which are so essential to the success of the undertaking.

The Spiritual Prospects.

The London Society for promoting Christianity amongst the Jews has readily permitted its Missionaries to render spiritual help and supervision to the settlers; already a lay Missionary from that Society regularly visits the settlement, and holds meetings with Jews and inquirers, until a permanent Missionary Schoolmaster can be appointed.

Whilst none will be compelled to attend Christian worship or instruction, every opportunity will be taken to bring the Refugees and their children under Christian influence.

All have agreed that their children from six years of age and upwards, shall attend the School which will be opened on the property.

One-third of them are now genuine inquirers into the truth of Christianity, and look forward to the time when they hope to join the Church.

The Committee confidently believe that if this effort be supported and extended, it will be the means of inducing many who are now hesitating, openly to confess what is now their secret belief in Jesus as their Saviour.

Work yet to be done.

The Committee feel that their work has only just begun, and that they have undertaken a great responsibility, but they believe the Lord's people to whom they appeal will not withhold their support. Other "cries" reach many ears; the cry from the Jew enters chiefly into the ears of the Lord's people; to them, then, we are looking for help.

Had not circumstances, over which they have had no control, forced them into immediate action, the Committee would have waited till the whole of the £7520 wanted had been subscribed. It has been impossible to do this without a danger of bringing the Refugees to a state of starvation, or driving them to the unbelieving Jews.

The Committee are, therefore, in immediate need of £5520, to be spent thus:—

To build 48 houses at £60 each	£2880
To purchase necessary stock and implements	1200
To find seed, and provide one year's maintenance for the families.....	1440
	£5520

The Appeal.

Shall the Committee appeal in vain to the Lord's people for this small sum to protect, to house, to feed, and to clothe these Jews in the land of their forefathers, and to give them an opportunity, protected from the terrors of persecution, to seek, and they trust to find, Jesus as their Saviour? Is there anything in this effort to which any believer can take exception? Is it not rather a distinct call to him to come over and help them? Does it not afford an opportunity for fulfilling in an especial manner the words of our Lord: "When saw we thee naked," &c. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 38, 40)?

This is all the Committee are aiming at. Whether their efforts, with God's blessing, are to be the beginning of greater things they know not, nor are they careful to ask. But what believer would not rejoice to be used in any way in a work which is the earnest of the fulfilment of all the great promises to Israel?

What an honour to lay the first foundation stone of such a work.

* Members of the Committee of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews.

† All communications to be addressed "To the Secretary, Jewish Refugees' Aid Society;" and all remittances made to the Hon. Treasurer. Cheques should be crossed "Barnett & Co."

The Christian.

"TAKING" SUBJECTS.

THE French correspondent of Evangelical Christendom begins his report this month by saying, "Among the many subjects that do not take among French Protestants are the Restoration of Israel, the Lord's Second Coming, and the amelioration of the lot of working men! Yet the harbingers are ever becoming more distinct."

We cannot say that these great events, the harbingers of which are ever becoming more distinct, do not take among English any more than among French Protestants; for during the last thirty years no truths have made such unmistakable advance among English Protestants as the Restoration of Israel and the Lord's Second Coming; while the necessity for the amelioration of the lot of working men has recently been pressed upon the country by the Christian Church with profound and permanent effect.

But the two former subjects certainly do not take among the majority of English Protestants. For example, a prominent Nonconformist minister, the Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, in his candid and appreciatory paper on "Mr. Moody's Work in London," observes that "there is in him a touch of fanaticism," which Mr. Rogers thinks is evidenced by his address on the Second Coming of our Lord. "It was curious," says Mr. Rogers, "to find this visionary conception having such strong hold of a man who has so much of the characteristic shrewdness of his nation; but it helps to account for that remarkable indifference to the world outside, which would be impossible to anyone who felt that it was only by taking his proper part in the work and struggle of the present life that he could really hasten the coming of Christ's kingdom." But was not that very indifference to the world outside one of the most striking characteristics of all the Apostles, and of the martyrs and witnesses of the Apostolic age? And are there any men who seek to take their "proper part in the work and struggle of the present life" more than those who, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present age, looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ?

Mr. Guinness Rogers speaks of those who have not this belief as including certainly a large majority of those who have as firm a faith in the Gospel as Mr. Moody himself, and in whose view "the association of this dream of the second coming with the preaching of a kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, mars the spiritual character of the religion, and interferes with the success of the Gospel?" We will not attempt to decide as to the majority claimed by Mr. Guinness Rogers, or as to the firmness of their faith in the Gospel, but we venture to affirm that of those who at the present day are spreading the Gospel at home and abroad, and who have arrived at their conclusion by independent and careful study of the subject, and not by receiving the traditions of the schools, the large majority strenuously believe that the promises of God to Israel, and the promised return and reign of the Lord Jesus Christ, will be literally fulfilled. They believe that "this visionary conception" came from Him who "spake in vision to his holy One, and said, 'I have laid help on One that is mighty. . . . With my holy oil have I anointed Him. . . . I will make Him my Firstborn, higher than the kings of the earth.'" They believe "this dream of the second coming" is as sure to be fulfilled as Joseph's dreams of rule, and that although the kingdom of God within is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, it wil certainly come with power, and its King shall reign until He has subdued all enemies under his feet.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL?

By GEO. F. TRENCH.

THIS question is not to be understood as some of your correspondents seem, I think, to take it, viz., as equivalent to "What is Christian revelation?" The reply to the latter question must, to be satisfactory, include everything comprised in the New Testament, and a good part of the Old. But taken in the limited sense in which I understood it, i.e., "What is the message God has sent to the world, and which evangelists ought now to preach for the salvation of souls?" the reply will be less voluminous. It has however suggested, even in this form, the thought that the Gospel is not exactly identical in its presentation in any two books of the Bible. Each writer emphasises a different part of it. In each Epistle, each Evangelist no doubt presents Gospel truth. But they do it differently. It is a very valuable and interesting study to seek the special features of the Gospel, as presented in each book, and to express them briefly.

I venture to offer the following as illustrations, imperfect ones I am most conscious, of this method. What is the Gospel?—

(1) In Romans? The "glad tidings" that sinful, law-breaking man, Jew and Gentile alike, without plea and condemned, shall, by faith in Jesus Christ alone, stand righteously acquitted, or justified, through the vindication of God's righteousness in the death of his Son; and that thus in peace with God, by the Holy Ghost indwelling them, the Saints may walk as men dead and risen with Christ, not under law, but yet superior to sin's power, until in resurrection bodies they share his glory as sons and heirs of God.

(2) In Hebrews? The proclamation by no less a Prophet than the Son of God, whom angels worship, that the Shadow-Gospel of Hebrew sacrifices has been "taken away," that the true atonement might be established in Himself, to whom it pointed, and that by the blood of Christ (the true Paschal-Lamb of sin-offering) sin is "put away," and the conscience of all believers finally relieved of its burden of guilt, so that they may boldly enter through the rent veil, within the holiest of all in heaven, where He is gone before, our Great High Priest after the order of Melchisedek, charged with the representation and help of his people, whom faith sustains and conducts through victory over sin, suffering, shame, and death, to the better inheritance, that is, the heavenly.

(3) In Ephesians? The revelation that Jew and Gentile alike, dead in sins, victims of Satan, and far from God, are now by faith forgiven all their trespasses, made nigh by the blood of Christ, quickened in Him, and builded together in Him for a habitation of God by the Spirit! so that as the Body of Christ, the fulness of Him that filleth al lin all, and blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, they may be linked in his love one to another, walk and war here in newness of life, and exhibit to principalities and powers in heaven the manifold wisdom and grace of God.

PERNICIOUS LITERATURE.

A LECTURE was lately delivered by Rev. Chas. Bullock before a united meeting of Lay and Clerical Associations in London, on General Literature and the Use of the Press. He affirmed his belief that the harm wrought by pernicious reading more than counterbalances all the good that our schools are doing. He also asserts that it is producing as much evil in the community as the hydra-headed monster, intemperance. His suggestions as to what ministers and other Christian workers can do to remedy the evil, are worth reflection. His first point is pithy and practical. He says:—

"Preach on the subject of the printing press. Try to get up an Ephesian fire in every parish. There is plenty of material, if we can only touch the consciences of those who read and conceal it."

Mr. Bullock further urges the importance of finding out what books and papers are read in the home. Many parents would be astonished if they knew what kind of literature finds its way into the family circle. In a large number of cases, both in town and country, the Sunday paper, the cheap novelette or journal of fiction, often as filthy in moral tone as trashy in literary merit, accounts for neglect of public worship, and for growing ungodliness of life. The establishment of book shops in villages where there are none (and such villages abound), to be conducted on the principle of supplying nothing but pure literature, would be a step in the right direction, tending to create a different taste.

The lecture referred to above closes by enforcing the importance of utilising and recommending the Christian newspaper or magazine. With manifest truth the lecturer says:—

"If a clergyman were asked to preach to a congregation of ten thousand worshippers—assuming the possibility of his voice reaching them—he would appreciate the opportunity; or if, as an author, he could hope to secure a circulation of even a thousand copies of a volume of his sermons, he would know how to esteem his unusual experience; but the duty of rendering active and energetic support to Christian newspapers, which every week place a large amount of religious truth before ten thousand times ten thousand readers, is only realised by the few."

Those who labour to maintain a wholesome Christian journalistic influence are often discouraged by the small amount of support they receive from the Christian ministry. Such work surely deserves well of all who are concerned for the progress of truth.

A CHRISTIAN—WHAT HE IS.

By Dr. HORATIUS BONAR.

Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood.—1 PETER ii. 5.

WE bear the name of Christians; and it is well to ask what the name means, and how far we carry out its meaning in our life.

All are not Christians here on earth, for the world lieth in wickedness. All are Christians above; the angels are all Christians, worshippers of Him whom we call Lord and Master; the great company which no man can number, are all Christians. It is a great and honourable thing in heaven to be a Christian, and it is a poor thing on earth not to be such.

What, then, is a Christian? What are the main features in his character? These verses of the Apostle tell us. Let us briefly examine them.

(1) He is one who has tasted that the Lord is gracious.—Or, as the Apostle John expresses it, "we have known and believed the love that God hath to us; God is love." This is the divine graciousness that shines forth in the person of the Lord Jesus. His words, his ways, his doings, his looks, when here, were all grace: for grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. It is of this grace that the Gospel brings us good news. It is of this grace that the Cross speaks to us so fully. It is on this grace that we stand. We taste and see that the Lord is good. The bread which He gives us to eat, even his flesh, which is meat indeed, is the bread of grace. The cup which He presses to our lips, even his blood, which is drink indeed, is the cup of grace. Love sparkles in every drop. We taste and are gladdened; we drink—drink abundantly—and are satisfied. The Lord is gracious! This we taste; and in tasting we are Christians. And if anyone asks the question of you, What makes you think yourself a Christian? you answer, "I have tasted that the Lord is gracious. What more can I say for myself?"

(2) He is one who has come to the Living Stone.—There is but one such stone in heaven or in earth: that stone is the Lord Jesus. He is the great temple stone, with which all the others are connected. He is the stone of attraction, drawing to Himself he hard dead stones of humanity. He is the stone of strength, capable of bearing the weight of all. He is the stone of life; not only possessing life in Himself, but communicating it to others: the living and life-giving stone. To Him we come, or are drawn; for both things are true: the drawing on his part, the coming on ours. Blessed drawing; blessed coming; securing our eternity! The Living Stone to which we come conveys to us the everlasting life which it contains; for in "Him is life, and the life is the light of men."

(3) He is one who has himself become a living stone.—The Living Stone has communicated its life to him; turning death into life: so that he who was before dead in trespasses and sins, a fragment of dead humanity, has become instinct with life. A stone, yet filled with life! A stone, yet imparting life to all who touch it! Such is the Son of God; and such in some measure de we become when connected with Him. All the strength and compactness of the stone is ours, yet life is diffused through all. The transformation is wonderful. The earthly becomes heavenly, the human becomes divine, the worthless stone becomes more precious than the gold of Ophir. Are we such living stones? Can we give this account of ourselves when we are asked, "What right have you to call yourself a Christian?" Can we answer to them who make this inquiry, "We are living stones"?

(4) He is one who has discovered the preciousness of the Living Stone.—Man has disallowed this; the builders have rejected it as worthless. But the Christian has discerned that to which the world is utterly blind. The rejected of men is the chosen of God; the worthless in man's estimate is the precious thing in God's. When thus we begin to see what we never saw in this stone; when we come to be of one mind with God concerning it, then are we Christians indeed. Our appreciation of the stone in all its matchless excellency is that which marks us out so specially as Christians. We begin our Christianity by learning the value of this stone—by learning the value which God attaches to it, and seeing how it is the object of his delighted choice. It is on our estimate of this Living Stone that our whole Christianity turns. What think ye of this stone? What think ye of Christ? These are the questions, by the right answers to which our religion is to be determined. He who has not learned to appreciate this Living Stone, must come to the conclusion that he is no Christian. He who has come to appreciate it may safely decide, however feeble that appreciation may be, that he is. And if asked on what ground he presumes to think himself a Christian, a forgiven sinner, he can answer calmly yet boldly, "I have learned the value of the Living Stone. 'It is chosen of God and precious:' to this I add my Amen and Amen. God, in his Gospel, asks me to recognise its preciousness. I do so; and in doing so I become a living stone myself, and am henceforth treated by God as one with the great and precious stone, which God has chosen and honoured."

(5) He is part of a spiritual house.—As a living stone he is built up into the house which is composed of living stones. That house is one not made with hands. It is a house not composed of marble and granite, or gold, or silver, or gems; but of Spiritual men. The Architect is the Father; the Model is the Son; the builder is the Holy Ghost; and the stones of which the building is constructed are men made alive from the dead. There is nothing carnal, or material, or worldly about this house. It is in all respects heavenly and divine. It is the house of Him who is a Spirit, in which they who worship Him will worship in spirit and in truth. It is a temple which eye hath not seen nor ear heard—a temple in which the Holy Spirit makes his dwelling; a habitation for Spiritual men and for Spiritual service; into which nothing that defileth can enter: as yet in some respects imperfect and incomplete, but rapidly rising into perfection, and ere long to be completed in every part. In it everything pertaining to the eternal service of the living God is to be found; and from it is to issue forth, throughout the ages to come, the melody of praise, the praise of ransomed men—the voice of the everlasting song, the new song to Him who loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood. This great living temple, this Spiritual house, will be the excellency of heaven and earth, the glory of the universe. It will be the contradiction of materialism in every form, scientific or savage; the everlasting protest against idolatry and all the varied phases of sensuous worship by which man has, age after age, degraded that which is divine, and mocked the great Father Spirit, the God of the spirits of all flesh, by representing Him in images of gold and silver, or wood and stone, or figures framed by human art and man's device. If we belong to this Spiritual house, what manner of persons ought we to be in all our conversation and godliness?

(6) He is the member of a holy Priesthood.—Honour and dignity of no common kind belong to all who have tasted that the Lord is gracious. They become priests unto God; not Israelites merely, nor Levites, but priests; men peculiarly set apart for the service of God; service of a higher kind than belongs to angels. For they are not priests, but ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation. God's purpose is to have a priesthood, through whom shall be carried on his worship in heaven and earth; the medium of communication between himself and creaturehood. This priesthood is composed of redeemed men, sinners of the race of Adam, at the head of whom is the Great High Priest, the Word made flesh. Ere sin entered it was only Kingship that was entrusted to man: "have dominion" is the divine commission to man (Gen. i. 28). But sin introduced the necessity of Priesthood, by means of which God could communicate with man righteously and honourably, and man held intercourse with God with safety and liber'y. It was sin that made Priesthood necessary, just as it was sin that made sacrifice necessary.

But this Priesthood is to extend far beyond that which introduced it. It is not merely to be the channel of forgiveness and reconciliation between the sinner and the Holy One, but it is to be the foundation of a new medium of communication between the Creator and creature throughout the universe: it is to be the perfect link between the Divine and the human, the heavenly and the earthly for ever—never to be broken, never to be abolished. Through means of it the Creator can more perfectly hold intercourse with his own handiwork; and the creature can be more closely knit to the Creator, approaching nearer, and enjoying fellowship more fully, than could have been done in unfallen perfection.

This Priesthood is specially a holy one, peculiarly set apart for Jehovah's service—of whatever kind the service may be—whether the service of song, or the service of prayer, or the service of work, or the service of administering the divine government throughout creation. All priesthood is in a measure holy, but this is pre-eminently holy; made so by the purpose of God, made so by the blood of the covenant, made so by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, made so by association and oneness with Him Who is the Holy One, the Son of the Holiest. Hence we sing, "Thou hast made us Priest unto God!" We are the true Aarons and the true Melchizedechs; members of a Priesthood to which God has assigned the highest honour of creaturehood—a priesthood to which pre-eminently be-belongs, not only holiness, but royalty. For we are a royal as well as a holy Priesthood; and as the Priest's lips should ever keep and teach knowledge, so should his life ever show forth the holiness which is the special characteristic of his heavenly office.

(7) The offer of spiritual sacrifices.—"We have an altar," says the Apostle; and at this altar we stand continually ministering. But it is not at the brazen altar of burnt offering, nor even at the golden altar of incense that we stand, but at an altar more excellent than these; and the sacrifices we offer are more excellent than the choicest sacrifices of old. They are spiritual. They are not flesh and blood; they are not meat and drink; they are the sacrifices of the spiritual being. We confess sin and plead for pardon; that is sacrifice. We pray and intercede; that is sacrifice. We send up our praises and thanksgivings; that is sacrifice. We consecrate ourselves, body, soul, and spirit, to God, laying ourselves on the altar; that is sacrifice. Our life is to be a life of sacrifice in all things, great or small. Our hands and feet, our lips and our tongues, our eyes and ears—all pertaining to us, we lay upon the altar as living and spiritual sacrifices. Not barren words, nor hollow praises, nor lifeless prayers, nor a cold service of the outer man; but living worship, the overflowings of a loving heart, the presentation of our whole being to God, as that which, having been forfeited by us, has been redeemed by his Son, and therefore no longer ours but his: for we are bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ. God asks for sacrifice from us—the sacrifice of those who have already found, in the sacrifice of another, redemption and reconciliation; the sacrifice of those whom the love of Christ constrains, of those who feel that in giving up their whole selves they are giving up nothing in comparison with what He gave up who, though He was rich, for them became poor. Let us know what a true sacrificial life is; not the sacrificial life of those who are trying to purchase redemption and favour and life, but of those who, having already obtained all these at the cross of Christ, are surrendering their ransomed souls and bodies to Him who died for them and who rose again.

Every part of our daily life is to be a sacrifice. Whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we are to remember our priestly vocation and our sacrificial life. Consecration, sacrificial consecration—the consecration of the temple and the altar—is to mark everything we do. In our public and our private life, in our business, our common duties, in our givings and in our labours, we are to remember the sacrificial character which belongs to us as men who have taken on us the name of Christ, and have dedicated ourselves to Him in body, soul, and spirit.

As under the symbolical dispensation of old everything on which the sacrificial blood was sprinkled became "holy," and as contact with the cleansing blood consecrated it at once, so is it with the Christian. The "blood of sprinkling," which not only speaketh better things than that of Abel, but better things than that of bulls and goats, consecrates every man who receives God's testimony to it. It is not our act of faith that consecrates; it is the blood of the great sacrifice, the whole virtue and value of which become ours in believing, that effects the consecration. "Ye are washed, ye are sanctified, ye are justified," says the Apostle, announcing to us what the blood has done to the believing man. Thus we are "consecrated," not only as worshippers, but as Kings and Priests unto God.

Then comes in the glorious proclamation, NOT YOUR OWN! Your connection with the blood has broken connection with self, has handed you over to another, even to Him who bought us, and who by Himself purged our sins.

Not your own! It is this that gives colour and complexion to the whole of a Christian's life. Under the consciousness of this he acts and speaks, and thinks and feels, and gives and suffers. Under consciousness of this he fights the good fight of faith, he runs the race, he lives, he dies. "Whether we live, we live unto the Lord; whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's."—The Christian Church.

For the Young.

A CHILD'S FAITH.

ON New Year's Day a little boy and girl, aged six and four, were spending the day with a number of orphan children gathered into one of those Homes, where so many neglected one are being rescued and trained for Jesus. It was such a pleasant sight to see some hundreds of boys and girls sitting down to their New Year's dinner, full of joy and happiness, then to follow them upstairs, where two large Christmas trees were bending under the load of a great variety of fruits suitable to children of all ages. It was quite a task to dismantle the trees and get all supplied with some little gift; then came the tea, with singing and recitations afterwards, and when it was time to go home the two little children were thoroughly tired out.

Arriving at their own home, they got out of the cab, and as there was some difficulty in getting the door of the house opened, their mother laid down her umbrella by the side of one of the porch pillars, and in the hurry of getting into the house forgot to take it with her. The little ones got off to bed, and the next day, when they were going out, the umbrella was not to be found; then their mother remembered that she had laid it down at the porch, and of course it must have been carried off by some passer-by.

At tea that evening some mention was made of the lost umbrella, when the following conversation took place between the little girl and her mother: "Mother, are you sorry you have lost your umbrella?" "Yes, dearie." "But father could get you a new one?" Yes, I know that, but mother would rather have her own one." "Well, mother, JESUS could easily bring back your own one, if He wants you to have it."

Nothing farther was said till bed-time; when the little girl was kneeling in prayer, her mother heard her ask, "Please, Jesus, put it into the man's heart to bring back mother's umbrella, and don't let him keep it." The little boy hearing his sister pray, asked Jesus in somewhat similar words to bring it back, and then they both went happily off to bed.

The next day, when going out, the little girl said, "Mother, father must not get you a new umbrella, but you can take mine till your own comes back." That same evening about nine o'clock the bell rang, and when the servant opened the door the lost umbrella, all dripping wet, fell into the lobby. Someone had laid it against the door and gone off, and on looking out no one could be seen. The little ones were very happy in the morning, when they heard of the answer to their prayer, and said, "Yes, we knew He would send it." Boys and girls! bring everything to Jesus; He is the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever—the hearer and answerer of prayer.

THE LONDON POOR.—"Twenty-five Years among the London Poor" was the subject of a paper by the Rev. A. Styleman Herring, read before the members of the Balloon Society, Capt. Douglas Galton, C.B., R.E., in the chair. After reciting some of his past experience, Mr. Herring said that London last week supported 93,257 paupers, three-fifths being in-door. Those in Holborn Union cost 9s. 11½d. per week for in-door, as against 1s. 6d. for out-door relief. He lamented that there was not a hearty good feeling existing between employers and employés. Few laws were framed for the benefit and protection of the poor. A complete change with regard to the punishment for seduction was necessary. Mr. Herring spoke of the necessity of cheap rooms solely for widows and their families. He believed greatly in emigration as a remedy, and urged that it should be State-aided.

"God-speed" to General Gordon.

HE goes, as David went to meet the giant in his might;
The stone was small—but cast in faith—it conquered in the fight.
We pray, O God, that thou wilt keep this soldier brave and true;
And be to him a sun and shield in dangers ever new.

Alone he has gone forth, to save a desolated land—
Oh set a wall of fire around, uphold him with thy hand!
To guide him through the ravelled maze, with understanding clear,
That mountains may from off his path remove and disappear.

May hordes of all conflicting tribes respect this single life,
A guard invisible surround the healer of the strife!
Invested with imperial power to speed the Queen's behest,
To set his captive brethren free and give a kingdom rest.

To fail—may light the torch of war in many nations round:
The swords reluctant drawn would flash, and suffering abound.
This soldier of the Cross, intent to do his Master's will,
On "Peace and Righteousness" awaits,—a continent to still.

WILHELMINA E. DAZLEY-SMITH.

Among Discharged Prisoners.

DEAR SIR,—Having been lately at Wandsworth I had the privilege of visiting the "Prisoners' Rest," close to H.M. Prison there, I wish to give my testimony to the good work being carried on every week-day morning there by Mr. Wheatley and the St. Giles' Christian Mission. There are often twenty or thirty prisoners received in the little building, and while they are enjoying a good cup of coffee and some bread and butter prepared for them by the manager, a few loving words of Christian counsel are addressed to them on the desirability of their commencing a new life and accepting salvation. As one step in this reformation, total abstinence, is strongly recommended to them, I am happy to say the majority "sign the pledge" and "don the blue." I hope your readers will do all they can to support this most excellent work.

I would add that I think every endeavour should be made to get the laws amended with respect to sending young lads to prison. It has grieved me much to see so many there. If their friends do not come to meet them, they are so likely to make acquaintance, on coming out, with old offenders and be led into worse crimes. I feel convinced from what I saw that the prisoners themselves are truly grateful for these efforts, and I trust God's richest blessings may continue to rest upon the work done at the prison gates. But if it is to be followed up to ensure a good result, our Christian friends must give more liberally to the St. Giles' Mission.

ABORIGINES OF NEW SOUTH WALES.—The last report, by Mr. Daniel Matthews, of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission gives encouraging accounts of the work of the year. Not only is the Gospel preached to the blacks, but families are taken in and cared for, and schools are provided for the children. Rich spiritual blessing has been continued. Mr. and Mrs. Matthews go on in their labours among the despised and neglected aborigines of Australia. The address of Mr. Matthews is Maloga Mission Station, near Echuca, New South Wales.

ELEMENTS OF TRUE PRAYER—3.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

WE have already considered six of the elements that go to make up true and prevailing prayer—Adoration, Confession, Restitution, Thanksgiving, Unity, and Forgiveness. Another element is FAITH.

It is just as important for us to know how to pray as it is to know how to work. We are not told that Jesus ever taught his disciples how to preach, but He taught them how to pray. He wanted them to have power with God; then He knew they would have power with man. In James i. 5, we read, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . . and it shall be given him; but let him ask in faith, nothing wavering." So faith is the golden key that unlocks the treasures of heaven. It was the shield that David took when he met Goliath on the field; he believed that God was going to deliver the Philistine into his hands. Some one has said that faith could lead Christ about anywhere; wherever He found it He honoured it. Unbelief sees something in God's hand, and says, "I cannot get it;" Faith sees it, and says, "I will have it."

The new life begins with faith; then we have only to go on building on that foundation. "I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them" (Mark xi. 24). But bear in mind, we must be in earnest when we go to God. Take the case of the Syrophœnician woman recorded in Matt. xv. When she called to the Master, it seemed for a time as if He were deaf to her request. The disciples wanted her to be sent away. Although they were with Christ for three years, and sat at his feet, yet they did not know how full of grace his heart was. Just think of Christ sending away a poor sinner that had come to Him for mercy! Can you conceive of such a thing? Never once did it occur. This poor woman put herself in the place of her child. "Lord help me!" she said. I think when we get so far as that in the earnest desire to have our friends blessed—when we put ourselves in their place, God will soon hear our prayer.

I remember, a number of years ago, at a meeting I asked all those who wished to be prayed for to come forward and kneel or take seats in front. Among those who came was a woman. I thought by her looks that she must be a Christian, but she knelt down with the others. I said: "You are a Christian, are you not?" She said she had been one for so many years. "Did you understand the invitation? I asked those only who wanted to become Christians." I shall never forget the look on her face as she replied, "I have got a son who has gone far away; I thought I would take his place to-day, and see if God would not bless him." Thank God for such a mother as that!

The Syrophœnician woman did the same thing—"Lord, help me!" It was a short prayer, but it went right to the heart of the Son of God. He tried her faith, however. He said: "It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs." She replied: "Truth, Lord; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table." "O, woman, great is thy faith!" What a eulogy he paid to her! Her story will never be forgotten as long as the Church is on the earth. He honoured her faith, and gave her all she asked for. Everyone here can say, "Lord, help me!" We all need help. As Christians, we need more grace, more love, more purity of life, more righteousness. Are we not hungering and thirsting after righteousness? Then let us make this prayer to-day. I want God to help me to preach better and to live better, to be more like the Son of God. The golden chains of faith link us right to the throne of God, and the grace of heaven flows down into our souls.

I do not know but that woman was a great sinner; still the Lord heard her cry. It may be that up to this hour some of you have been living in sin; but if you will cry, "Lord help me," He will answer your prayer, if it is an honest one. Very often when we cry to God we do not really mean anything. You mothers understand that. Your children have two voices. When they ask you for anything you can soon tell if the cry is a make-believe one or not. If it is, you do not give any heed to it; but if it is a real cry for help, how quickly you respond. The cry of distress always brings relief. Your child is playing around, and it says, "Mamma, I want some bread;" but it goes on playing. You know that it is not very hungry, so you let it alone. But, by and by, the child drops the toys, and comes tugging at your dress. "Mamma, I am so hungry!" Then you know that the cry is a real one; you soon go to the pantry, and get some bread. When we are in earnest for the bread of heaven we will get it. This woman was terribly in earnest, therefore her petition was answered.

I remember hearing of a boy brought up in one of your almshouses. He had never learned to read or write, except that he could read the letters of the alphabet. One day a man of God came there and told the children that if they prayed to God in their trouble He would send them help. After a time this boy was apprenticed to a farmer. One day he was sent out into the fields to look after some sheep. He was having rather a hard time, so he remembered what the preacher had said, and he thought he would pray to God about it. Someone going by the field heard a voice behind the hedge. They looked to see whose it was, and saw the little fellow on his knees, saying, "A, B, C, D," and so on. The man said, "My boy, what are you doing?" He looked up, and said he was praying. "Why, that is not praying; it is only saying the alphabet." He said he did not know just how to pray, but a man once came to the poor-house, who told them that if they called upon God He would help them. So he thought that if he named over the letters of the alphabet God would take them and put them together into a prayer, and give him what he wanted. The little fellow was really praying. Sometimes, when your child talks, your friends cannot understand what he says, but the mother understands very well. So if our prayer comes right from the heart, God understands our language. It is a delusion of the devil to think we cannot pray; we can if we really want anything. It is not the most beautiful or the most eloquent language that brings down the answer: it is the cry that goes up from a burdened heart. When this poor Gentile woman cried out, "Lord, help me!" the cry flashed over the divine wires and the blessing came. So you can pray if you will; it is the desire, the wish of the heart, that God delights to hear and to answer.

Then we must expect to receive a blessing. When the Centurion wanted Christ to heal his servant, he thought he was not worthy to go and ask the Lord himself, so he sent his friends to make the petition. He sent out messengers to meet the Master, and say, "Do not trouble yourself to come; all You have to do is to speak the word, and the disease will go." Jesus said to the Jews, "I have not found so great faith; no, not in Israel." He marvelled at the faith of this centurion; it pleased Him, so that He healed the servant then and there. Faith brought the answer.

In John iv. we read of a nobleman whose child was sick. The father fell on his knees before the Master and said, "Come down, ere my child die." Here you have both earnestness and faith; and the Lord answered the prayer at once. The nobleman's son began to amend that very hour. Christ honoured the man's faith.

Evangelistic Work in Western France.

SIR,—A few months since you were kind enough to accord to me space for an appeal for a journal devoted to evangelistic work in the Charente—the Témoin de la Vérité. The happy result has been that its accumulated deficits have been balanced, but its future is by no means assured. The proprietor, a local pastor (honorary), takes a very proper view of it in a letter just to hand, in which he says that if his resolution to make the journal more than ever a medium of evangelistic effort is in accordance with the Lord's will, and if He has need of such an instrument, the needful supplies for its support will be forthcoming. This induces me to lay the matter before the Lord's people, and to ask for further aid to scatter it, brimful of Gospel truth, among the nominal Catholic, but really pagan, population of the beautiful Charentes. The seven years of tearful seed-sowing, which this faithful servant of the Lord has carried on single-handed by means of this instrumentality, has doubtless paved the way for the great awakening which has taken place in this part of Western France, and which still continues.

Pastor Bertrand, of the Mission Intérieure, gathered nightly large numbers of Catholic hearers who listened with astonishment to the good news, so forcibly and lovingly presented by the hardy, faithful evangelist. I refrain from giving more under this head just now, as I may ask your permission to return to it when matte s have further advanced. Suffice it to say that the revival has revealed hitherto unknown believers, and roused the few but idle professors to a sense of their opportunity.

In closing reference to the journal, I may say that assistance has been sent from Scotland, and even Canada and the United States, in addition to the noble gift which opened the list; the publisher of an illustrated journal has given blocks, which will render the paper still more attractive and useful; and the Religious Tract Society has given a grant, which, however, will not be renewed.

I am requested to convey Pastor Marsault's sincere thanks to those who have hitherto rendered him help, expressing the hope that in the hard struggle which he has to endure against Popery, and its consequent ignorance, the prayers and help of those who love the same Lord, of whose honour he is jealous, and souls that are perishing for lack of knowledge, will not be wanting in the year now current. I shall still be most happy to be the medium for the transmission of any sums to extend the gratuitous circulation of the journal in France.

JOURNALISTIC ENTERPRISE.—We notice that the proprietors of the Christian Commonwealth are offering 300 guineas for prize essays on important subjects. Those interested can find full particulars in the issue of that journal for February 7.

MEDICAL WOMEN IN INDIA.—We learn that Miss Pechey has been gazetted Honorary Physician to the Pestovjee Hermajee Kama Hospital for women and children in Bombay. Miss Pechey, besides being a Christian lady, has had large experience in medical practice in this country; her services, therefore, among the poor, as well as the rich, by whom she has been well received, will doubtless open fresh doors for the Gospel in India.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

Mr. Guinness Rogers on the Mission.

(Concluded from our last.)

In hearing Mr. Moody every one must have felt he was listening to a man who forgot himself in his work, and whose first thought was not about the elegance of the form in which his message was to be delivered, but of the effect it was to produce. I do not say that his address would have satisfied all the canons of a fastidious taste, but it certainly did what was of far higher importance, it met the spiritual need of the thousands he was addressing.* It was spoken not to the philosophical thinker, but to the humble workers who were waiting to hear words that would move their souls. It was the kind of sermon which, with me at all events, disarms criticism, except so far as criticism relates to the end he had in view. It was the warm outpouring of a soul possessed with the passionate desire for saving men, and subordinating all other considerations to that. I was not impressed by its logic or its eloquence, but I was struck with its singular adaptation to its work. It bristled with points which laid hold upon the thought and feeling of the people; it was telling in the very abruptness and brusquerie of some of its expressions; and if a sermon is great in which there is true spiritual force, then was it entitled to be described as a great sermon. I left the hall satisfied that the preacher is a real power, for whom all Christian men may well be devoutly thankful.

That impression has been greatly strengthened by personal intercourse with the man. In him the power of the new life is seen in a rare meekness and gentleness of spirit. His extraordinary success leaves him, so far as I could see, as simple in heart and as unpretentious in bearing as he was at the beginning of his career. It was impossible for me in conversing with him to resist the conviction that here was one who feels that on him a Divine necessity was laid, and who has devoted himself to the special work in which he has attained so extraordinary a position, not from the promptings of ambition, but because circumstances, which seemed to be the leadings of Providence, forced it on him. Of course he may have misinterpreted these signs, but that is a point solely for himself to determine, and so long as he sees such extraordinary effects, it is not probable that he will arrive at this conclusion. It does not follow that all others will take the same view, and yet it would require no little hardihood for any one, because of some preconceived opinion of his own, to forbid the work. . . . .

It is continually assumed that the movement is doing good, and that therefore it must not only be right, but that all Christians are bound to co-operate in it. These three propositions do not stand or fall together, and each of them deserves careful examination separately. Of the results, as of some other features of the work, I propose to speak at a future time. Suffice it to say here, that some of the ardent believers in the work have spoken hastily and, so far, unadvisedly with their lips. At a prayer-meeting held a few weeks after the commencement of the Mission, I heard a gentleman thanking God for the hundreds who have been converted. I do not say it is not so, but I do say any positive statement on the subject must be premature. One of the most important issues that can be raised on the whole matter is the actual value of the success achieved. Everything has been made to rest upon it. The answer to every objection has been that God was owning the work in a very remarkable manner. The assertion, therefore, is one that must be sifted, and it is a pity that its consideration should be prejudiced by hasty statements which, from the very shortness of the time, cannot have been verified. Whatever the success, too, it will have to be looked at in its general relation to the work of the churches before it can be regarded as decisive. There are certainly drawbacks, as any one who has closely followed the course of the movement must confess. All these have to be taken into account before a final judgment is passed upon the practical result of the work.

But even if that were of the most favourable character, it would be extremely rash to infer that others should imitate Mr. Moody's methods. They are his own, and are suited for a special purpose; but that does not prove that they would be equally successful with other men in the ordinary work of their ministry. When, therefore, we hear of Christian ministers frequenting the halls from day to day, and sitting "admiringly and teachably" at the feet of Mr. Moody, we feel saddened. There is a touch of pathos in the humiliating confession of impotence on the part of men who have been consecrated to the work of the ministry for years, which is here implied, that to me is very melancholy. And yet if the true lesson were learned there would be some compensation. That lesson is not the wisdom of trying to be exactly like Mr. Moody. He is, as we judge him, a man of great singleness of purpose, who has spared no effort to make the best of the gift which God has bestowed upon him. If every minister and worker who hears him will catch that spirit, and strive to lay out his talents to the best usury in the same way, he will profit best by the example of this true-hearted evangelist. In his plainness of language and directness of appeal there is much by which every one who knows how to learn may be instructed. Only he must learn, not as the parrot which simply copies and repeats, but as the thoughtful student, who knows how to discriminate between the spirit and the form.

About one point there should be no mistake. Mr. Moody's success is an emphatic warning against a style of preaching which is only too common, the preaching which never attempts to come into direct contact with the consciences of men, and which fails in this because at bottom the preacher has but little faith in conversion as a great reality. One great secret of Mr. Moody's power is that he believes in the necessity of conversion, and preaches accordingly; and the gathering of such multitudes is a sign that in their hearts men feel that this is true. The zeal which many Christian professors display on his behalf is another indication of the like character. Very often that zeal is not according to knowledge, and some of the forms it takes are exceedingly offensive. When mere youths, who have neither years, experience, nor personal service to justify their assumption, who are, perhaps, not even professors of religion, and have done literally nothing for the kingdom of Christ, declaim against churches and ministers, who are half heart-broken by their want of success, for their supposed indifference to the salvation of sinners, one hardly knows whether to be more indignant or sad. So, too, when some from whom better things might be expected, commit themselves to uncharitable condemnation of all who because of conscientious difficulties hold back from participation in the work, the effect can only be injurious. Such attempts to carry men by storm are not pleasant, and are sure to provoke resistance. They involve a cruel injustice to ministers who are doing their utmost, and they certainly do not contribute to the success of the movement. But it is wise, if possible, to ignore them, or get below them, and understand that what they really mean is a protest against the exclusion of the emotional from religion, and a demand for more force, point, and fervour in the appeals of the pulpit. In this they are sustained by numbers of earnest but retiring Christians, who do not run to any extremes, and would be the first to condemn them, but who do long for more signs of life, who desire that the ministry of the Gospel should aim at the conversion of sinners as well as at the edification of saints; who are somewhat impatient of dreams about an indwelling Christ in every man, while such multitudes are clearly rushing down to perdition; who feel that the weakness of the Church for aggression is its reproach, and welcome any one who would help to remove it. These are points which all ministers should seriously ponder, whatever their views of Mr. Moody.

* A remarkable illustration of this was supplied to me by a worker in the inquiry-room. He was called upon to converse with a young lady whose presence there was to him a simple mystery. She was by her own confession a mere votary of pleasure. She seemed to have no religious belief at all, and she had been drawn into the room solely by the overpowering influence of Mr. Moody's earnestness.

THE STRATFORD MISSION.

Before these lines meet the public eye the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Stratford will be past and gone; they will have moved on to another part of the city. But their persons and the messages they have delivered will be long remembered in this eastern extremity of London. Many are now saying, and will continue to say, we believe, throughout a happy eternity, "God bless the day that Messrs. Moody and Sankey came to Stratford." The meetings will not cease at once with the departure of the two evangelists. Every evening this week Mr. Henry Thorne conducts Gospel services in the Wesleyan Chapel. From Tuesday to Friday, in the same place, Mrs. Grattan Guinness gives afternoon addresses to women. The choir that has most faithfully and efficiently helped in the singing at West Ham-lane Hall will be present at these meetings. It is hoped that during the week a good deal will be done in "bringing in the sheaves."

The Men's Meetings.

These were started early in the Mission at the Brickfields Congregational Chapel, by Mr. Henry Thorne, and were continued there for a time with a fair amount of success. At the beginning of last week they were transferred to the Wesleyan Chapel in The Grove, a more central and convenient place of meeting. Major Whittle came over from Clapham and took charge of the meetings, which began at nine o'clock, after the preaching was over in the large hall, and in the "overflow" at the Congregational Church near by. On Wednesday evening when our reporter was present, there was a good attendance of men in the chapel. The newly-formed Stratford Male Choir mustered in force, and sang with clearness and expression some of the pieces in Mr. McGranahan's "Gospel Male Chorus Book." Mr. Sankey had come in from the "overflow," and at Major Whittle's request he sang a hymn from "The Gospel Choir," of which a few early copies had just been that day struck off. This new collection, said Mr. Sankey, was not intended to supersede the Songs and Solos; it would be used chiefly by the choirs, so that the audiences might have the Gospel sung to them with an added freshness. He then gave Miss Frances Havergal's stirring song, "Tell it out among the nations that the Lord is King."

Major Whittle called for brief testimonies from those who were on the Lord's side. Before throwing the meeting open he told how a friend of his had conversed with a young fellow in the inquiry-room a few evenings before. While the anxious one was reading over and over John iii. 16, the light broke in upon his soul and he began there and then to rejoice in the assurance of salvation. In talking further with the worker, he said he would never have thought of coming to the meetings if it had not been that a chum of his in the workshop had been converted and confessed Christ before his fellow-workmen. That woke him up; up to that time he had been inclined to lead rather a "fast" life, but the Spirit of God met with him that night and spoke to him through the Word. "Now," added the Major, addressing the men, "perhaps some of your chums are here to-night, and your public confession of Christ may wake them up."

Then the floodgate of testimony was opened and the stream flowed on apace, the president interjecting a sentence now and then by way of direction or encouragement. "Christ has been my Saviour for the last twenty-four years, and I can testify to his saving and keeping power." "Four years ago I was a drunkard, a blasphemer, a sabbath breaker—in fact, everything that was bad. But through it all I felt an aching void. I came to Christ and found in Him all I wanted. Now I love the prayer-meeting as much as I used to like the beer shop. Thank God, I have enjoyed my life since I got Christ in my heart." "I had a wife who prayed for my conversion for seventeen years, and as often as seven times a day. About fourteen years ago I was saved while under the influence of delirium tremens. The Lord, I am sure, can save anybody, since He has saved me." "Thank God for such a Saviour!" exclaimed Major Whittle. After another man had borne witness that he was converted three years ago, and that his wife had long prayed for him, the Major said, "Thank God for a praying wife."

"I found Christ in the London Hospital, as I lay there with my leg off." "Four weeks ago God saved me." "Only a week ago my eyes were opened to see that I could be saved through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ." "For six years my dear wife has prayed for me; I received Christ into my heart only a week ago to-morrow." "Thank God I found Christ a fortnight ago next Sunday. It has been a blessed time with me ever since. If there is a greater joy than that of being saved oneself, it is the joy of leading another soul to Christ." "That is true," quoth the Major; "I hope everyone here who is saved will seek to lead some soul to Christ before the week is out." "I thank God I ever went to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings. I was saved the other evening, and I have felt happy ever since. I have been in America and in other parts of the world, and have been leading a rough life; but to-night I feel a different man from what I have been." "God bless you, my brother," said the president; "go right on and be out and out for the Saviour." "I thank the Lord I found Him about twelve months ago; He not only saved me but six of my family."

Major Whittle wanted to hear from some others who had never yet confessed Christ. One rose and said he found the Lord in the great Tabernacle a week ago. Another said he was converted nine weeks ago, but up to the present time he had not publicly confessed his Lord. He felt impelled to rise and do so now. A third said that some one had asked him if he was prepared to meet God; the question went straight to his heart, and he had no rest till the Lord pardoned his sins. He had been a slave to drink, but since his conversion, bless the Lord, he had not tasted or handled the unclean thing. A bright-looking boy rose and said he was converted some years ago, "and now, one after another, our family are getting saved." "I am seventy-six years old, but I am able to call myself a young convert. I professed to be a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ for years, but it was only profession. Last week, through attending the meetings at the hall, my eyes were opened to see myself as a sinner; I thank God I ever attended these services."

It was nearly time to close, and the Major, after some further exhortation, asked any who had not found peace and were willing to make a complete surrender to God, to rise. Quite a number did so, and they were commended to God ere the happy gathering broke up.

Next evening the attendance was even larger; some very good testimonies were given, and not a few professed to start out on the pilgrim way. One man who testified said that when he got home on a previous evening, he found a friend had come to visit his wife, and to sympathise with her because "Charlie had gone out of his mind." She replied that if he had gone out of his mind a few years sooner it would have been better for her and for the children; she only hoped that if he was mad he would go round and bite all the working men in London, so that they might be driven mad in the same way! This man is evidently a bit of a humorist. He added that some other friend had accused him of "having a tile off!" Yes, thank God, a tile had come off, and the light had shone in!

It is earnestly hoped that as the outcome of this Mission something may be done in Stratford to provide a safe place of resort and of social intercourse for the working men. We are informed that in all this district the public-house is the only place where a man without a home of his own can spend the leisure hours of the evening. One of the men whose testimonies we have quoted remarked on this point. He said if he were in New York he could go to the Cooper Institute, but where could he go when these meetings were over? Seeing that Stratford is a great centre for railway men and other labourers, the question propounded by this man becomes a very pressing one. If any wealthy East-ender has received a blessing at these meetings and wishes to know how he can give expression to his gratitude, we present him with the suggestion. Mr. Henry Thorne and others are making strenuous efforts to establish a branch of the Y.M.C.A., and we trust they may be abundantly successful. But even this would not meet the case of such men as we have alluded to.

The Work among Drunkards.

A second meeting for the slaves of the cup was held on Saturday evening. The inquiry-room was crammed almost to suffocation, and many, we do not doubt, went away for want of accommodation. Why this room should have been transformed for the time into a "Black hole of Calcutta," while the spacious hall stood empty, is a mystery we have not yet been able to fathom! Everybody, however, seemed to endure the needless discomfort as good-humouredly as possible.

Mr. Scroggie conducted the meeting in a very skilful and hearty way, never allowing the proceedings to drag. Some striking and convincing testimonies were given by reformed men of some years' standing, and also by those who had been converted during this Mission. No small interest attached to the testimony of the young man, the story of whose conversion from atheism on the preceding Saturday Mrs. Guinness told in these columns last week. With a bright and happy-looking countenance he stepped forward and said that the prayers offered up to God on his behalf had been answered. Instead of being an atheist he was now a Christian. The week of happiness he had spent in the fear of the Lord he would not exchange for ten years of life without Him. All his life up to a week ago had been spent in serving the devil; now he was seeking to work for Jesus and he had been able to do more for his new Master during that one week than he had accomplished for the devil altogether.

This solitary case, it seems to us, is worth far more than all the time and trouble expended on these Saturday night meetings; but there is much more to follow. Mr. Robert Simpson announced that up to that time 270 had joined the Stratford Mizpah Band. There must have been a good many recruits enrolled last Saturday night, so that the Band has now got a fair start. Among those who gave their testimony last Saturday was a man who said that one day, after he had donned the blue ribbon, he met a publican of his acquaintance, who asked him what was up, and tried, by an offered bribe of five shillings, to induce him to break the pledge. "Not if you were to put five golden sovereigns in my hand," replied this sturdy teetotaler, and his words were cheered to the echo. Another man said he thanked God that Messrs. Moody and Sankey ever came to Stratford. The first night he went to the hall it was out of mere curiosity. He remarked to his mates that the meetings would not make him any different any way. "Oh," said they, "worse than you have been converted." Mr. Moody's sermon so upset him that he went into the inquiry-room that night, but he would not take the decided step; however, he came back the next night, "and," said he, "I have been every night since, and twice on Sundays. I turned teetotaler when I gave my heart to Christ. I know what the drink is. It has brought me near to the gallows. I have taken knives to kill my wife, and I have bought poison for myself within a short distance of this hall. Thank God that is all past now." This man, with many others, signed the pledge at the close of the meeting. Before that, however, Mr. Scroggie and Mr. Simpson had each told a wonderful story of the reclamation of a drunken man, and what is far harder to reclaim, a drunken woman. So with speech-making and singing and prayer, a very blessed hour speedily passed by. When the gathering was formally dismissed, the workers had a busy time in receiving pledges, enrolling recruits for the Mizpah Band, and explaining the way of life to anxious inquirers.

Among the interesting testimonies given at the first of these Saturday meetings, for which we had not space last week, were the following:—

A man rose and said he had been a drunkard for several years, and a confirmed atheist; but he, by the grace of God, stood before them a converted atheist. Finding the time hanging heavy on his hands a few nights ago, he thought he would come and hear Mr. Sankey sing and Mr. Moody preach (he had no higher object before his mind), but when sitting in the crowd the Spirit of God convinced him that he was a lost, guilty sinner, and led him to behold Jesus as the Lamb of God bearing all his sins away. Having a taste for poetry, he had been employing himself in writing a satirical piece or song against Messrs. Moody and Sankey; but now, thank God, the Lord had given him more blessed and profitable work.

A middle-aged man rose, and looking round the audience, said: "Friends, you all know me; you know that I was one of the most worthless and wicked drunkards in all Stratford, but two years ago God in his great mercy saved my soul and made me a new creature in Christ Jesus, and has completely taken from me all appetite for the drink. Let me say before sitting down that I had four boon-drinking comrades, fellow-workmen, and the following is their history in a word or two. The first when infuriated with drink struck his wife a severe blow, felled her to the ground, and she died. He was tried, found guilty, and was hanged for it. The second when in drink quarrelled with a companion, who struck him such a blow that he fell down and never rose. The third committed suicide. The fourth in a fit of drink was wandering on the railway, when a train came up and cut him in pieces.

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

The third and closing Sunday of the Stratford Mission will be long remembered by those who were privileged to be present. The early meeting of workers was by far the largest in attendance of the three. Mr. Moody's rousing plea for a thorough and continuous study of the Bible was greatly enjoyed; so also were Mr. Sankey's solos, "Tell it out," and the Second Advent song, "Christ returneth." To an immense congregation at 11 o'clock Mr. Moody once again answered the vital question, "What must I do to be saved?"

The last two meetings of the day were marked by marvellous interest, and it would be utterly impossible to give them adequate representation, even were the fullest space at command. At the close of Mr. Moody's address to the women in the afternoon, so many rose for prayer that any attempt to reckon up numbers was futile. Not only was the inquiry-room full, but many anxious ones were dealt with by the workers in the large hall. The evening gathering, confined exclusively to men and youths, was one of overwhelming import and impressiveness. The words of the preacher, who took up and applied seriatim the various commands of the "moral law," struck home as arrows from the unerring hand of God. Judging from the numbers who rose to testify their anxiety for salvation, the slain of the Lord were many. There have been few sights throughout this whole campaign at once more awe-inspiring and joyful than that seen in the inquiry-room, when men started to their feet literally in shoals, as signifying their resolve to break with sin, and surrender to the claims of God and his law. At the evening meeting Mr. Sankey delivered a new and solemn song-message, "The Three Calls;" it is to be found in "The Gospel Choir."

The "overflows" in the Congregational Church have been conducted during the week by Mr. J. M. Scroggie, assisted by Mr. Sankey. Though overshadowed, of course, by the great gatherings in the hall, they have been times of deep soul-searching, and also, we believe, of soul decision.

BY A LOCAL CORRESPONDENT.

The actual work of the Stratford Mission was prefaced by a house-to-house distribution of Gospel tracts, with which was associated in great measure a personal dealing with souls. This paved the way for the work of the inquiry-room, and brought to light in many cases the existence of an intense longing for "the bread of God, which cometh down from heaven and giveth light unto the world." When the tickets of admission were circulated, there was displayed by almost all a willingness—often an eagerness—to receive them. Non-churchgoers of every kind—infidels, the frequenters of public-houses, the careless and indifferent—all alike seemed anxious to attend the services.

The interest has increased with the progress of the Mission. During the closing week the hall has been invariably crowded fully an hour before the time announced. As to the work itself, it has been both real and extensive. The afternoon Bible-readings have gathered interest daily. Many worldly, joyless, doubtful Christians, helped by these expositions of the Word of Life, have entered into a liberty of soul and an assurance of salvation wholly unknown before; a large number of anxious inquirers have professed a new-found peace. The evening services have been seasons of indescribable solemnity. The vast congregations have been bowed as one man by the tremendous force of "the word of the truth of the Gospel." There have been "multitudes and multitudes in the valley of decision." On one memorable Sunday night more than 300 men stood up to evince their anxiety of soul and their desire for salvation.

The inquiry-room has been nightly crowded with seekers after peace. The presence of the Spirit of God, convincing men of sin, has been manifestly felt, and we have been brought face to face with the realities of the world to come. "Surely the Lord is in this place" was the involuntary conviction of many awe-struck souls.

The general results of the Mission may be summarised as follows: (1) Ministers of the Gospel have had their faith confirmed and their zeal quickened. "Why do you ministers wrap up these truths in your sermons, and not speak them out plainly? Why do you not speak personally to us about our souls?" asked a young man awakened at one of these services. This reproach must, and by God's grace will, be wiped away. It is firmly believed the Mission will be followed by a bolder and more faithful declaration from all the pulpits of Stratford of "the truth as it is in Jesus."

(2) Believers whose testimony has hitherto been indistinct and intermittent, have been urged forward to a more decided witness to the faith of Christ. An element of reality has been introduced into Stratford Christianity which, it is hoped, will never be eliminated. Many, whose mouths were sealed up to this time, have been observed earnestly pointing the unconverted to "the Lamb of God."

(3) Members of Christian congregations having the "form of godliness," but "denying the power thereof," have become possessed of a living religion in the place of a dead religiousness. A striking example of this class is found in the case of a young man who, bound by the fetters of a system of formalism, was, against his own inclination, led by an unseen Power into the Mission Hall; he was there released from his legal bondage, and made "free indeed," with "the glorious liberty of the children of God." He is now openly confessing his great Deliverer.

(4) Atheists and infidels have attended these services in great numbers, and have sat spell-bound by the resistless force of truth. In Mr. Moody's preaching they have been confronted with a real earnestness, and a living power, which were unknown to them before. They have seen for themselves the visible operations of the Holy Ghost in the conviction and conversion of precious souls. Not a few have renounced "black Atheism," with its gloomy negations, for the positive blessings of the Gospel of Christ.

(5) Drunkards have been set free from the chains of a cruel bondage. Degraded and debased, they have heard and received the cheering message of liberty to the captive. A new power—the power of Christ's Omnipotence—has been vouchsafed to them. They are now the Lord's freemen. A band of reclaimed drunkards is being organised with a view to reaching other victims of strong drink.

(6) Last, but by no means least, the indifferent have been awakened to a lively interest in eternal things. True repentance has been evidenced by the forsaking of sin. A man and a woman, living in an unholy union, were convicted of sin, and mutually agreed to separate until, after a time of probation, they could be lawfully joined together in wedlock. "The words of God's dear servant, Mr. Moody," writes one aroused from his indifference to seek the Saviour, "have opened the eyes of my heart, which were ever before blind, to see the true and only way of salvation, which is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and accept him as my only redemption from sin. I am not ashamed to own my Saviour now, and never will be."

Examples could be multiplied, but enough has been said to show that God's arm has been made bare in Stratford, and to inspire all believing hearts with gratitude and praise. "What hath God wrought?" "Praise ye the Lord!"

[We have received some very interesting notes and gleanings from our friend Miss Anne Macpherson, which we are compelled to defer to our next issue.]

Preparing at St. Pancras.

On Monday week a most influential meeting of the clergy, ministers, and leading Christian laymen of the west central and north western districts of London was held in the King's Cross Theatre, Liverpool-street, King's-cross, to concert measures for carrying out the proposed Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in these divisions. By the kindness of the Midland Railway Company the hall will be erected on a vacant piece of ground adjoining the Midland Terminus, with entrances in Ossulston-street, Euston-road. It has, therefore, been decided to call the building "The Midland Terminus Hall."

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS having been called to the chair, the meeting was opened with prayer by Dr. Oswald Dykes. The Chairman stated that it was a great privilege to meet so many Christian brethren of various denominations gathered together to discuss the best methods of interesting the people in the approaching Mission.

Mr. ROBERT PATON, Secretary of the Central Committee, gave some useful hints as to how the work of organisation should be conducted, and related several interesting facts as to good having been done in other districts. Those present having been formed into a general committee with power to add to their number, Sir Henry Pitman was appointed chairman, and Messrs. Joseph Weatherley and Henry Workman, hon. secretaries.

Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Vicar of Christ Church, Somers Town, offered the use of his church for overflow-meetings, and his schoolroom for choir practices. Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, Minister of Somers Town Presbyterian Church, and Rev. J. Allen, Minister of Tonbridge Congregational Chapel, also offered the use of their buildings for any services that might be required. Mr. H. L. Fulkerson, Precentor of Regent-square Presbyterian Church, was appointed choir leader. The Chairman, in closing, requested those present to make the coming services a matter of public and private prayer.

A French "Robin Dinner."

WE are often asked: Do you see any results of all your labours among the French population in London? A good answer would have been given to any friends present with us on Wednesday night, when, with the kind help of the Rev. Charles Bullock, we were enabled to give our children a Robin Dinner in our large and comfortable schoolroom, Bedford-passage, Fitzroy-square. One hundred and thirty foreign "robins," great and small, sat down to the good fare provided by our English friends.

After tea Pasteur Du Pontet-de-la-Harpe gave a short address to the children on two characteristics of the robin—cheerfulness and gentleness; he earnestly asked the children to look to Jesus the Saviour to enable them to show in all their lives these two traits of Christian character.

The invitations to the dinner had been exclusively limited to children attending regularly the day and Sunday-schools and to some old scholars now fast becoming young men and having to work and fight for themselves in this great metropolis. It was interesting to see a number of nice-looking and honest young men sitting near the present scholars. They all had passed through our Sunday and day school, and now a committee of gentlemen have opened for hem some rooms near Regent-circus, where they can meet every evening to read, and attend different classes. Evangelising in South Africa.

THE Journal des Missions Evangéliques states that Lessouto and the Free State have sufferred much from drought, many thousand sheep having died for want of water, while the larger animals have been decimated.

Meetings were held to take leave of M. Coillard, and Levi, a catechist, who accompanies him to the Zambesi. There was great sorrow at parting with M. Coillard, but willingness to let him go where the Lord seemed to need his servant. Levi, a native, gave an account of his conversion, stating that he did not arrive at a clear comprehension of his own salvation until he was obliged to speak to others about it. The native Christians gave freely out of their poverty to provide Levi, his wife, and children, with the necessary equipment—some giving a wagon, others oxen, and some money.

An English artizan, Mr. Middleton, is one of the expedition. He addressed to the church at Leribé words that touched all hearts, showing that M. Coillard had enlisted not only a good workman, but a faithful confessor of Jesus Christ. Makotoko, an old warrior of Moshesh and Councillor of Molapo, one of the most remarkable of the Christian Bassutos, referred to the trials the Church had passed through and to its present critical position. He and the Christians of Leribé had hoped that M. Coillard might have seen in these difficulties an invitation from the Lord not to quit that post, but they all desired to entertain no feelings contrary to the will of their Lord.

M. Coillard, speaking from "God hath spoken once," sending him to Lessouto, and "twice have I heard Him," now guiding him to Zambesi, showed how he had been led step by step, and affectionately commended his children in the faith to the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls.

"The Gospel Choir."

THOSE who are interested in the presentation of the Gospel Message to the people, through the medium of sweet and striking melody, will, we think, be glad to have their special attention drawn to a new collection of Sacred Songs, entitled "THE GOSPEL CHOIR," just issued from the Office of this paper. It contains about eighty pieces; nearly all of these are published in this country for the first time, and some are absolutely new, having been written specially for this collection.

CHRIST RECEIVETH SINFUL MEN.

"THEY THAT BE WHOLE NEED NOT A PHYSICIAN, BUT THEY THAT ARE SICK."—Matt. ix. 12.

Arr. from NEUMASTER, 1671. JAMES MCGRANAHAN.

Make the mes - sage plain:

Half of the pieces in the book are composed by Mr. MCGRANAHAN; we give one of his on this page as a specimen. About twenty are by Mr. SANKEY, including that fast favourite, "When the mists have rolled away." Among the remainder are songs by such well-known composers as GEORGE C. STEBBINS, G. F. ROOT, and R. LOWRY. One only is from the pen of the late P. P. BLISS, "Abundantly able to save;" but it is one of the most effective in the collection, and has lately been sung by Mr. SANKEY, with much acceptance and blessing.

Notes and Comments.

MAY we ask the kind attention of those who entrust us with donations for various objects, to the following directions:—

1. Be particular to specify the exact designation of the institution or purpose to which the amount is to be applied.
2. In addition to the title of the institution or object, give the name of the person (lady or gentleman), if any, who is known as the superintendent or secretary.
3. If the amount is given in response to a notice in the columns of "The Christian," state the date and page of the number in which the notice appeared.

If donors will be so good as to observe these instructions, confusion and delay may be prevented. With the multiplication of religious and charitable institutions, and the frequent similarity in their titles, increased care is needed in order to avoid mistakes and misunderstandings.

In a letter dated January 9, Lord Shaftesbury gives the following directions as to the most useful plan of Bible-reading for men of the working class. They are equally adapted to guide the Bible-reading of all classes. His lordship says:—

"First, begin always with prayer to God for guidance and light in the study of his Word. Secondly, compare scripture with scripture by paying much attention to the marginal references. Thirdly, regard the Bible as a whole; one part throws light on another. The Bible is oftentimes its own best interpreter. Regard it not as a collection of writings of historical persons, but as the work of many, under the inspiration and guidance of one mind, the mind of the Almighty Himself."

The last sentence in the noble Earl's directions is of great importance. The notion widely prevails that the Scriptures are a disjointed set of writings, so that no one of them is to be regarded as infallible, and the teaching of one age to be rejected as of no force for another. The unity of Divine thought through them all is ignored, and so the Book is reduced to a time-worn and exhausted level. No more destructive and dangerous form of criticism than this can well be imagined. Every part of sacred truth retains its value and authority as an inspiration from God. Mutilation here is sacrilege.

The advantages which result from the freedom of the Press in this country are many and great, and we have reason to congratulate ourselves on the average tone of our leading journals. But greater care should be exercised, and more brevity studied in reference to reports of many cases which come before our courts of law. The perusal by young people of details of villany, violence and passion is pernicious in the extreme. The secular Press has a serious responsibility in relation to forming and maintaining the morals of the people.

With feelings akin to anything but satisfaction, we recently read in The Record a description of the vestments made and presented to Bishop Smythies, the recently appointed prelate in connection with the Universities Mission to Central Africa. Mitre, cope, and chasuble are said to be of true popish type, so much so that the Bishop, when robed, will have all the appearance of a Roman Catholic celebrating High Mass. This certainly is not the Gospel needed for Central Africa, or, indeed, for any part of the world. Appeals to the eye may be effective so far as outward attraction goes, but they can never reach the heart; they obscure the truth, and detract from the glory of Christ.

Some singular facts are brought to light by a review of the last census returns for England and Wales. Out of a population of 26,061,736, only 11,187,564 are returned as having a definite occupation. Agricultural labourers numbered 870,778, more than 90,000 less than there were in the previous returns. It appears that the article of dress alone employs 1,048,534 persons, there being one milliner to every thirty-seven women, and one tailor to every seventy-nine men. The Times has said the attention of the female sex should be directed to this fact, the proportion not being very creditable to them, indicating as it does undue extravagance. There is room for improvement in this respect among all classes; extravagance in dress lies at the root of many evils.

The subject of children's amusements has been on the tapis of late in several public journals. Dr. Cullimore, in The Standard, first called attention to children's parties, as often conducted, and their prejudicial effect on juvenile health. This is no unimportant aspect of the question; but many anxious parents feel that a still more important one is involved. The moral and spiritual influence of recreations provided by those who cater for the young calls for serious consideration. Fancy balls, late hours, and grand parties have a sadly deteriorating effect upon the youthful mind and character. Parents are not wise who fail to see this and to guard against it. Our children must have recreation; by all means let them romp and play at proper seasons to their hearts' content. Be it ours to make their life as joyous as we can; but let it not be forgotten that they have a future, and that the impressions made and tastes formed in childhood have very much to do with the after life.

Thirty years ago a book was written, stigmatising domestic servants as "the greatest plague in life," and the comic papers have done not a little in the interval to perpetuate the charge against them. But influences, deteriorating or otherwise, descend from the higher to the lower strata of society, and the modern undomesticated young lady, devoted to frivolous amusement, or at the best to frivolous employment, is incapable, when she becomes a mistress, of training or counselling her servant; and no wonder she is plagued by her, and the more plagued the more she keeps. On the other hand, much is said, and truly, of the advantages which a domestic servant enjoys as compared with those employed in workrooms and factories. Amongst other things she is far better prepared to be a wife and to ensure comfort to her husband in his home.

But it may be questioned whether the domestic servant is not often in greater moral peril in the house than her sister in the factory—in peril from her master, from his sons, from the young men who call for orders, and from others. We speak from painful knowledge of characters thus broken. Mistresses have responsibilities towards their servants which, if kindly and faithfully fulfilled, might make these important and influential members of their household the greatest comfort instead of the greatest plague in life.

Miss Emily Leakey, author of "Miracles of Mercy," writes to us that she has received a donation of 10s. for the Exeter Home from a domestic servant, as a thank-offering to God for having kept her pure.

A specimen of Russian literature, taken from the late Ivan Tourgueneff's "Poems in Prose," will not be uninteresting to some readers. The extracts point a moral lesson which needs enforcement. Gratitude is by no means a too common virtue.

"It once occurred to the Supreme Being to give a banquet in his azure halls. All the virtues were invited to it—none but the virtues. . . . So there were no men—only women.

"Many of these were assembled there, great and small. The smaller virtues were more agreeable and amiable than the great; but all seemed in good spirits and conversed very politely with one another, as beseemed such near relations and acquaintances.

"Then the Supreme Being noticed two beautiful ladies who did not seem to know each other.

"The host took one lady by the hand and led her up to the other.

"'Benevolence,' said he, pointing to the first.

"'Gratitude,' added he, introducing the second to her.

"Both virtues were much surprised to make each other's acquaintance. For the first time since the creation of the world, and that was a long time ago, they now met, face to face."

No name is better known among modern scholars and able critics of the sacred text than that of Canon Westcott. We note that he has just been elected to the post of Vice-President of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In accepting the office, the Canon says: "Every day's work confirms the conviction that the surest hope of meeting the difficulties of our own time lies in the faithful and reverent study of Holy Scripture, in the living record of the Divine teaching interpreted to us by the Holy Spirit." Dr. Westcott has also just been appointed to the vacant Canonry of Westminster, a fact which, while it is a loss to Peterborough, is a gain of no slight account to the Metropolis.

In his new work on "The Modern Languages of Africa," Mr. R. N. Cust, Hon. Sec. of the Asiatic Society, thus speaks of the Bible:—

"To no other book of any kind at any period of the world's history has it fallen to be translated into so many languages, and to be disseminated in such amazing numbers. As Luther's Bible became the standard of High German, and our own English Bible became the standard of later English, so all over Africa, from the language of the Kábail in North Africa to that of the Hottentot in the South, from the Swahíli on the East to the Dualla on the West, the translation of the Book of Life is becoming the first, often the only, and always the typical representative of languages, which previously were wholly unwritten, uncultivated, and sometimes imagined to be destitute of phraseology for the expression of feelings and affections. In the great Vernaculars of Africa, such as the Swahíli, the Zulu, the Chuána, the Hausa, the Ashánti, the Amharic, the Yariba, the Bible has greatly helped to fix the standard of purity and good taste. In other languages the Bible has been the first expression of the power of conveying ideas to paper."

The effect of etiquette over religion forms the subject of a letter received from a correspondent. Doubtless it is often the case that the rules of "society" override the dictates of conscience and the claims of Christ. It ought not to be, and moral courage should be exercised by Christians where the temptation in any form presents itself. The writer of the letter before us was asked by a lady, "Do young men like to be spoken to on religious points by ladies?" The querist was reproaching herself that on the ground of etiquette she had let many golden opportunities slip of speaking for Jesus to gentlemen of her own circle. Surely nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of our testimony for the Lord we love.

Mr. Ruskin has been discoursing on "The Storm Cloud of the Nineteenth Century." It differs altogether, he says, from the cloud with which we have been familiar, and which is only an "incontrovertible evidence of the Father which is in heaven giving his children rain, and filling their hearts with food and gladness." The storm cloud from which all nature suffers now, "is not rain-cloud, but a dry black veil, which no ray of sunshine can pierce." The description of it as a plague-wind, a wind of darkness, malignant, pestilential, and polluting, prepares the way for Mr. Ruskin to declare his conviction that it is a judgment, a Divine retribution for our national sins and shortcomings. The words in which this is expressed are worth reproduction, though they are marred by some palpable exaggerations of language:—

"If you ask me what is the meaning of all this blanched sun, and blighted grass, and blinded man, I can tell you none, according to your modern beliefs, but I can tell you what meaning it would have borne to the men of old time. Remember, for the last twenty years, England, and all foreign nations, either tempting her or following her, have blasphemed the name of God deliberately and openly, and have done iniquity by proclamation, every man doing as much injustice to his brother as it is in his power to do. Of states in such moral gloom every seer of old predicted the physical gloom, saying, 'the light shall be darkened in the heavens thereof, and the stars shall withdraw their shining.' All Greek, all Christian, all Jewish prophecy insist on the same truth through a thousand myths.

"I leave you to compare them with the physical result of your own wars and prophecies, as declared by your own elect journal not fourteen days ago, that the Empire of England, on which formerly the sun never set, has become one on which it never rises. What is best to be done, do you ask me? The answer is plain: whether you can affect the signs of the sky or not, you can the signs of the times. Whether you can bring the sun back or not, you can assuredly bring back your own cheerfulness and your own honesty. You may not be able to say to the winds, Peace, be still; but you can cease from the insolence of your own lips, and the troubling of your own passions. And all that it would be extremely well to do, even though the day were coming when the sun should be as darkness, and the moon as blood. But, the paths of rectitude and piety once regained, who shall say that the promise of old times would not be found to hold for us also: 'Bring ye all the tithes into my storehouse, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord God, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it?'"

"Modern thought on religious matters does not appear to be rated very highly in New South Wales, judging from the reports concerning Mr. Moncure Conway's visit to Sydney. His advertisements flared on the walls and in the columns of the newspapers, proclaiming him the friend and advocate of the leaders of modern thought; but to no purpose. His efforts have been a failure every way, and his sceptical campaign resulted in defeat. It is a credit to the colonists that they could only provide their would-be teacher, or rather perverter, with empty benches instead of disciples. Would that such leaders met with a similar fate in the Mother-country.

Referring to Sydney, we see that the newly-appointed Bishop of that diocese has met with a great misfortune. It appears that his library, consisting of some thousands of volumes, together with note-books and manuscripts containing the accumulations of many years of laborious study, were all lost in the recent foundering of the ill-fated Simla. A movement is on foot, headed by the Dean of Westminster, for helping to repair as far possible this loss, before Dr. Barry sails for his new sphere.

The Anti-slavery cause has lost an eminent champion, and Temperance a devoted advocate, by the death of Mr. Wendell Phillips. He was foremost in promoting the abolition movement in America, and acquired great renown as a social reformer and eloquent orator.

Switzerland has lately been busy with its Zwingli Commemoration, and the Canton of Zurich full of enthusiasm in his honour. Ulrich Zwingli was born on January 1, 1484. His work as a reformer, however imperfect, when judged in the light of our own times, was sufficiently bold and valuable in its protest against papal errors to entitle him to the grateful remembrance of posterity. He grasped the sword in the cause of truth, and perished by the sword, dying on the field of battle in October, 1531. His life was one prolonged struggle against Romish pretensions, and he undoubtedly laid the foundation of that Swiss Protestantism which has figured so nobly in the history of the world.

In a lecture on Zwingli recently delivered at Philadelphia, Dr. Bishop said we owe five things especially to him as a teacher:—

"A juster conception of God—a juster conception of the Scripture as the imperative dictate of God—a juster conception of the Holy Sacraments—a juster conception of the Christian Church—and finally the evangelistic spirit of Protestanism."

A short examination of Mr. Herbert Spencer's article, entitled, "Religion: a Retrospect and Prospect," written by A Wykehamist, has just reached us. It ably exposes the fallacies and assumptions of the would-be philosopher, whose article in The Nineteenth Century has caused so much stir in some quarters. The writer expresses a feeling of pity for the man who is so clearly ignorant of the doctrines he criticises, and this should perhaps be the spirit in which one contemplates the sad spectacle of a weak mortal sitting in judgment on the Deity and on things divine. The pamphlet is published by Marshall Brothers; price 6d.

The Pall Mall Gazette has started a series of articles on the Gambling Hells of London. From the first of these, which describes the doings at a baccarat club, we gather that we have in our own metropolis traps and snares as seductive in their influence and as rash and wild in their character as those for which some parts of the Continent are notorious. It is anything but creditable to English jurisdiction that while gambling is supposed to be illegal, and in some spheres is sternly dealt with, in others it flourishes unchecked, spreads its ruinous glare, and exerts its fatal spell upon young and old, without let or hindrance.

The Rev. F. E. and Mrs. Wigram have presented the Church Missionary Society with £10,000 as the nucleus of a fund for providing means to remove their Missionaries' Children's Home from Highbury to the country. This is done, to use Mr. Wigram's own words, "to give a practical token, in which we trust others will join us, of deep sympathy with the dear brothers and sisters who are engaged in the Lord's work abroad, and who have to entrust the bringing up of their children to the Committee." Such regard for the servants of Christ, who have given up home and loved ones for his sake, is worthy of imitation by us all in our own measure, and in whatever way presents itself to us.

The Countess of Tankerville has issued a little brochure, entitled, "A Bright Spot in Outcast London," which calls attention to the work of the Mildmay Deaconesses in various parts of the city. The Bethnal-green Mission is specially described, and the work accomplished by it fully set forth. Her ladyship pleads for enlarged support of the Mildmay Institutions, and amply proves the claim they have on Christian beneficence by showing the practical character of their aims and results. The little book is published by Hatchards, price twopence; and should be widely read.

The Speaker of the House of Commons has written a letter to the The Daily Telegraph in which he urges the claims of young servants upon public benevolence and concern. Lady Brand is the Hon. Treasurer of the Metropolitan Association for befriending young persons of this class, and Sir Henry adds the weight of his testimony to the good work which is being done by its means. No class more needs kind and careful oversight. Servant girls are exposed to no end of temptations, and we are often almost helpless in resisting them. Christian philanthropy has a wide field in this direction for useful and important effort.

There is a vast difference between religiousness and Christianity, although the two are often confounded. The one may co-exist with spiritual death and utter ignorance of vital truth, the other is essentially life, and is sustained by close and loving fellowship with Christ. To belong to a church is not to belong to Christ; to make a profession is not to be a Christian. These are distinctions which, in a formal and ostentatious age like our own, need to be plainly pointed out. Everywhere there is a call for earnest assertion of the solemn declaration, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

In a letter to The Spectator, "Another Woman" asks whether, in the papers which have appeared there on the happiness of women—one omission has not been made—that happiness is not an external thing, but an internal. Like the "Kingdom of Heaven," it is within us. To this the Editor appends a note, saying, "True, in the highest sense; but try a day of toothache." The covert and cynical sneer of these words represents the very prevalent idea that religion is very well for sunny seasons, but inadequate to lift above the influence of dark days. The mistake is great; even pain, though it should be severe and excruciating, cannot rob the soul of peace and joy, such as the Kingdom of Heaven in the heart produces. Inward happiness and calm repose are, in the case of the believer, quite compatible with outward suffering and turbulent surroundings.

GLASGOW NOON MEETING.—At the meeting on Monday week it was reported that at Inverness an evangelistic service carried on at the public exchange by some members of the Y.M.C A. has been stopped by the superintendent of police, because some persons living near complained. It has been ascertained in connection with the evangelistic meetings carried on at Johnstone that there are a large number of Highlanders in that town. A Gaelic service is therefore being held every Sunday, and the average attendance is upwards of eighty. It was mentioned that the public-houses in Coatbridge open at 6.30 in the morning, and often crowds are waiting to be supplied. A minister asked if they were to hold a prayer-meeting at that hour in the morning, what audience would they get?—Christian Leader.

Reminiscences by Mr. Hammond.

AS we intimated in our last issue, Rev. E. P. Hammond has been conducting an evangelistic Mission with much success at Camden, N.J. On one occasion he related some of his experiences during a Mission tour to the distant region of Alaska, in the extreme north-west of the North American Continent. The following details of the trip, as given by the Camden local journal, will be read with interest:—

Mr. Hammond, in accordance with a promise made in a previous meeting, gave an account of his missionary tour to Alaska. He said that when he was first converted he had a great desire to be a missionary. He felt that he was called of God to preach the everlasting Gospel to the poor heathen. He fully expected to bid good-bye to friends and home, and even went so far as to locate the field in which he would labour. It was Bulgaria. But while he was yet a student in the theological seminary he attended a meeting, where a minister present told of how merchants who sent boxes of merchandise to Alaska put in each package a leaf from the New Testament printed in their own language, and many who read them had been led to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, even before a missionary had ever stepped foot on their soil. He concluded that this was the place for him to go; to a land where the natives were ready and eager to grasp any fact told them about a Supreme Power and an Intercessor between the two.

Sometime after this he and his wife, together with some friends, set out for Alaska, going by the way of Sacramento, Cal., and Portland, Oregon. A very singular incident that occurred on their way was that while travelling in northern California Mr. Hammond absolutely refused to travel on Sunday. His friends urged him to go on, for, they said, there was no way of overcoming the difficulty, unless it was to lie down on the cold earth and sleep there. They warned him that if they did not keep moving all day Sunday they would miss their passage, and in all probability be ravaged by mountain bandits. All of their efforts availed nothing; the youthful missionary was determined to rest on the one day out of seven set apart for that purpose by God, and if he did die, he said that it would be in a good cause. He stood up in his stirrups and scanned intently the hills which environed the lone travellers. Far to the north, crowning a little knoll, his eye caught sight of what appeared to be a building of some kind. "There! There," he exclaimed, "is a house," pointing in the direction of the knoll, and he was determined to go over and ask the family for shelter.

His companions endeavoured to convince him that it would only be folly to apply at such an out of the way and strange place for shelter; but he went nevertheless, and the rest of the party, unwilling to go on and leave him, followed him to the door. He knocked and the door was opened by a woman, who when she saw Mr. H., threw up her arms with a scream of delight, and rushed toward him. "Why, brother Hammond," she cried, "how in the world did you ever come to this desolate region;" and then without waiting for a reply she added, "why, I was converted in your meetings at Rochester, N.Y. Come in and stay as long as you wish." "Are there not other families living in this locality," asked Mr. H. "Oh yes," said the lady, "there are plenty of them within a mile of here, but they are very much scattered. I'll have plenty of company here to-morrow, the house will be full." That night and the next day the party spent under this hospitable family's roof, and then proceeded on their journey north.

The party, after a long and tedious journey, reached Portland, Oregon, where Mr. Hammond held meetings for six weeks, commencing on the Fourth of July, the day when the Americans celebrate their independence. When the people came to consider the subject, they could not conceive a plan by which to have their fireworks at a reasonable hour, and attend the meetings also. It was settled in this way. They first had a meeting at which there was a sermon and singing: then the fireworks, and afterwards the inquiry-meeting, at which every one who had been to the previous meeting was in attendance. Mr. H. held these meetings in a large rink for six weeks, and then gathering together forty of the best workers, including five ministers and their wives, and a whole band of music, he embarked for Vancouver's Island, where he mingled with the hideous Flat Head Indians for some time.

He then went on to Alaska, where he gathered together two tribes, in an old Russian-Greek Church. He said that he never saw such an audience in all his life. None of them knew what the seats were for; they made use of them to set their baggage on and then perched up on the backs of the seats. After a while Mr. H. managed to put on a straight face, and then prayed earnestly for the descent of the Holy Ghost. "Sitka Jack" interrupted the meeting several times. He said, "We know as much as Boston man; we know God made mountains, and made salmon in river; Boston man teach me nothing." Mr. H. prayed with several, and they all said, "Why didn't you Boston man come here before, and tell us of God; we would never drown our poor old mothers."

It should be stated here that when the Indian women get old and weak in Alaska they are drowned by their sons, and many of the girl babies are drowned by their mothers, who are such slaves to the men that they will not, if they can help it, have their children grow up to be treated as they are. Mr. H. was the first missionary that set foot in Alaska, and he was the instrument, in God's hands, of leading the first native soul to Christ.

After his narrative, says the Camden reporter, he preached a sermon from Rom. x. 10, "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." His central object was to abolish the idea, that some have, that they can be consistent Christians, and sit with their arms folded, doing nothing for the Master; he succeeded very well, for some of the members of the church were busy in the inquiry-meeting, who had never done anything before to lead souls to Christ.

Sunday Schools in South London.

THE annual meeting of the Sunday-school attached to Christ Church, Westminster-bridge-road, was held recently, Rev. Newman Hall in the chair. The reports presented showed the number of schools to be 13; scholars, 5065; teachers, 376. One school is two miles distant, at Dock Head. Four others are in the most populous, poor, and needy districts in South London, viz., Kent-street, the Mint, Jurston-street, and Bond-street. In addition to simple, unsectarian, evangelical Bible teaching, on Sunday, various philanthropic agencies are carried on during the week—such as sewing classes, boot and shoe, clothing, and music clubs, mothers' meetings, Band of Hope meetings, instructive lectures and entertainments, &c. From one school thirty-seven sickly children had been sent into the country for a fortnight's change of air. Upwards of 13,000 religious periodicals had been purchased by the children, in addition to a large number of tracts and portions of Scripture supplied gratuitously. About fifty children had become members of churches, and 100 were members of the Christian Band. Some of the teachers devote nearly every evening in the week to these labours. All these rooms are utilised on Sunday evenings for ragged schools and evangelistic services.

Thus for nearly a hundred years in some of these schools, with quiet perseverance, godly men and women have been at work to mitigate the evils lately brought before the attention of the world by the "Bitter Cry." The annual cost is about £500. The New Year offerings amounted to about £150.

A THEATRICAL TEA-MEETING was held on Friday last in Exeter Lower Hall. Gospel addresses were given by Mr. Newett, of Manchester, Mr. Churchill, Mr. Burson, and Mr. W. Forbes.

Mr. T. E. Murphy's Missions.

THE many friends of this most earnest and successful Temperance advocate will be glad to hear again somewhat of him and his work. Until a few weeks ago he had been labouring with the most blessed results in Ireland, under the auspices of the Irish Temperance League. Before leaving that country he was entertained at a social gathering by the members of the League, when he was presented with a large, handsome album, and an address which stated that 100,000 persons have signed the pledge at the 181 meetings he addressed.

From Ireland Mr. Murphy went to Stirling, in Scotland, and there we were privileged to be an eye-witness of the work. The large arcade hall of that town was crowded night after night with most enthusiastic audiences, and though his honoured father had held a Mission there, which was followed by a second, the ranks of Gospel Temperance were swelled by the addition of 900 persons who signed the pledge during his six days' Mission.

From Stirling Mr. Murphy returned to Ireland to pay a few farewell visits, and then crossed over again to Lancashire for a short Mission in the town of Haslingden. It was here he began his work in this country nearly three years ago, and the fact that since then he has again and again visited Haslingden, at the request of the Temperance friends there, shows that he continues to receive their esteem and gratitude. And much reason has Haslingden for gratitude, for through his advocacy many sons of toil in that busy town have been led to change their manner of life, both to their own advantage and that of their relatives and friends. Some of the grand old trophies of Gospel Temperance are to be found in Haslingden; and there its work through the Blue Ribbon Club and the British Women's Temperance Union goes forward in a progressive manner.

On Monday evening, 4th inst., we visited Mr. Murphy at this place. There was a magnificent meeting. The platform on one side was crowded with reformed men—members of the club. The chair was occupied by Mr. Riley, solicitor, St. Helens, and Mr. Murphy gave one of the most thrilling speeches we ever listened to; most beneficial results have followed this and the other meetings held.

From Haslingden Mr. Murphy has come to Sale, a suburb of Manchester, where two meetings have already been held. Some of us here were afraid that such a movement would not touch to any great extent our villa population; but we have been agreeably disappointed. The meetings held in our largest hall have been magnificent gatherings, and we may safely say that Mr. Murphy has already got the ear of our community. Friends of all sections of the Church are to the front. The chair on Thursday night was occupied by Col. Shaw, Consul of the United States of America in Manchester, who spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Francis Murphy, the father, as well as of the son. Last night the chair was occupied by Mr. Armistead, a Churchman, and a gentleman of great and good influence in our neighbourhood. Clergy and ministers of various denominations are co-operating, and the singing is led by a large united choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Lewis, leader of psalmody at the Presbyterian Church. Already over 400 persons have taken the ribbon at the meetings.

Mr. Murphy closes his Mission here on Thursday, 13th inst., after which he goes to fulfil engagements at Stirling, Edinburgh, Warrington, Ormskirk, &c.

SANATORIUM, WEST KILBRIDE.—A correspondent writes that he has received much benefit physically and spiritually by a visit to this place, near Ardrossan, Ayrshire. He says the spiritual tone and admirable domestic arrangements are excellent. Rev. Dr. Kirk is the director, and the manager is Mr. J. Newbigging.

PUBLIC MORALITY.

LARGE MEETINGS IN EXETER HALL.

THE day of prayer held at Exeter Hall on the occasion of the opening of Parliament, to supplicate the Divine blessing on the efforts made to abolish the State regulation of vice, was felt to be a time of blessing by all those who were privileged to be present. The meeting commenced at ten a.m., and continued without intermission till six p.m.

Mr. ERNEST NOEL, M.P., who presided during the first hour, remarked on the grand effects which would be produced by that day's meeting if it could result in opening the eyes of those Christians who were still blind to the iniquity of this legislation, and who cherished the idea, as he had done himself for a long time, that there must be some good in this evil system; when he came to inquire into it he found it utterly bad.

Each succeeding president took up some leading thought, either as a subject for prayer or a cause for thanksgiving. Mr. WILLIAM FOWLER, M.P., contrasted the present comparatively awakened condition of Christian feeling on this subject with the dense ignorance which generally prevailed, at the time that he introduced the first Repeal Bill into the House of Commons fifteen years ago. Mr. Fowler was followed by Rev. V. G. Barradaille, Rev. A. C. Murphy, Mrs. Hind Smith, and Mr. George Gillet.

When at four o'clock the chair was taken by Mrs. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER, the attendance, which had fluctuated considerably during the day, attained to a goodly company, comprising well-known friends of the movement from every part of London and many from the provinces. Mrs. Butler read a sympathetic telegram from Pastor Appia, of Paris, who was at that hour presiding over a similar meeting in Paris. She stated that meetings were also being held at New York, at The Hague, Holland, and in Switzerland, besides in many towns throughout the United Kingdom.

One incident which characterised this hour was a visit from a member of Parliament who has been one of the most persistent advocates of State regulated vice in the House of Commons, as well as on the late Select Committee of Inquiry. His object in visiting Exeter Hall did not transpire, but some who were there could not think it mere accident that should bring him in while a fervent brother, all unconscious of his presence, was praying that "the Lord might influence the hearts of our opponents, even as He influenced the heart of the mighty king of old, when 'his thoughts upon his bed and the visions of his head troubled him.'"

The concluding hour was taken by Mr. BENJAMIN SCOTT, Chamberlain of the City of London, who, in reviewing the progress of the movement on behalf of social purity throughout the world during the past twelve months, said that the present stage of progress towards abolishing the State regulation of vice in England, reminded him of nothing so much as when the ark of God was brought into the house of Dagon, and Dagon fell down before it. The Dagon against which they were contending had fallen, and although his priests might attempt to set him up again, they would find he would be too much broken to stand. He felt that their concluding note should be that of thanksgiving and praise to Him who alone giveth the victory.

PUBLIC MEETING.

On the evening of the following day a large assembly gathered in the great Hall to testify their sympathy with this movement. The Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., presided, and was supported on the platform by a goodly company, including eight M.P.'s, and many influential clergy and laymen from all parts of the country, besides many ladies, who take a deep and active interest in this cause. The Bishop of Bedford opened the meeting with prayer. Professor Stuart read letters of sympathy and apologies for absence from a number of people of influence, including clergymen living in districts subjected to the system of regulated vice.

The Chairman said he had always opposed this system because of its object. Whatever the personal motives of its advocates might be, its object was simply to make vice safe for men, an object which Governments and Legislatures had no right to take into account. He also objected to it because of its methods, which were abhorrent to justice, to freedom, to moral health and decency, and to that manhood of which an invariable part is respect for womanhood and individual right. He had demonstrated in the House of Commons the hygienic fraud and imposture of these laws, and would do so again, if needful; but he thanked God that less of that repulsive work would be necessary now, because since April 20 last we had risen above the mere hygienic aspects of the question and got on to the platform of principle. He could get no direct and certain intimation of the intentions of the Government to carry this principle into law; he heard rumours that they intended to rest with the mere suspension of the Acts, but it was not for repealers to acquiesce in that state of things. They would have to show the Government that there were not a few people in this country that deemed this a question transcending all party politics and concerning the duty and honour of a Christian nation.

Dr. CAMERON, M.P., said he had always considered the moral aspect of their case the strongest; as had often been well remarked, "what was morally wrong could never be politically right." He would, however, speak on the hygienic failure of the Acts. In a graphic and telling speech, he then proceeded to show, from figures supplied by the supporters of these laws, that the net results of life and health saved, from a money point of view alone, were ridiculously inadequate to the cost.

Rev. Sir J. E. PHILLIPS, Bart., spoke of the immoral tendency of these laws, and their hardening effect on the poor women who come under their operation, and expressed his belief that the success of that meeting would not so much depend on the speeches made as on the prayers of the day before.

After some earnest words from Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Miss TOD, of Belfast, said those who stood in the forefront of this battle desired nothing more than that the whole truth should be brought to the light. She considered it the duty of everyone engaged in any sort of work for their fellow-creatures to acquaint themselves with the facts and principles on which their efforts rested.

The BISHOP of BEDFORD, in the course of a manly and ringing speech, which was responded to with great enthusiasm, said: I cannot myself reconcile the making of sin safe with any theory of morals higher than that which is based on the barest expediency; certainly I fail to reconcile it with any conception I am able to form of Christian morality. I find it no less difficult to reconcile the Christian sanction—at any rate the distinctive recognition—of sins against the seventh commandment with my idea of the duty of a professedly Christian State. I know we are told that these simple arguments can be met by those who have greater personal and practical experience of the state of our great seaport or garrison towns. I am not prepared to submit great Christian principles to any such test as that. I may not be possessed of sufficient information to be able to forecast either the immediate or ultimate results, physical and material, of the Acts we are talking about, or of their suspension, but I may have intelligence enough to know what God commands, and to know what is in harmony with the religion of Jesus Christ. If I read aright in this matter, I find enjoined on one section as much as another, a high and pure morality. I do not find sins of impurity condemned in women and condoned in men. I find breach of purity in thought and act and deed to be inconsistent with the Christian man's profession, as much as deeds of shame not even to be spoken of by the Christian man. . . . . God forgive those who teach that sin is necessary for the health of a man. I say it is false. Why, when I was at Oxford, I knew brave men—athletic young fellows—pulling in the college eight, playing in the college eleven, who yet led a life of perfect chastity. We want to rise to a nobler and higher level; we want something of the old chivalry that was once in vogue; we want that our men should feel that they, as the stronger, are bound to protect the weaker, not to seek to injure them. We profess to follow the example of the pure and stainless One; we hope some day to be like Him, and "every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure."

Mrs. BOOTH also strongly repudiated the hideous doctrine of the necessity of vice, and said it was some time before her mind could grasp the idea that in this nineteenth century of ours any set of men could be found to advance such a monstrous proposition. She warned her hearers that the same men who would rob woman of her liberty would be ready to curtail the liberty of man also, and especially his religious liberty, when it would serve their purposes to do so.

Mrs. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER said her confidence was in a higher power than that of the House of Commons. She had a joyous confidence in God, who is working with us to the confusion of our opponents and the victory of our cause. It will not be victory without a struggle, but it is a blessed and happy thing to be co-workers with God in this great work of justice.

Dr. Spence Watson, of Newcastle, Professor Stuart, of Cambridge, and Mrs. Eva McLaren also addressed the meeting.

Young Women and their Friends.

A NUMBER of young women and their friends gathered at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, last Saturday evening, at the invitation of the Committee of the Central Institute of the Y.W.C.A., Old Cavendish-street. Nearly seven hundred mustered for tea at 6.30 p.m. The demeanour of the majority present sufficiently indicated their appreciation of the efforts made on their behalf by the workers at the various Y.W.C.A. Institutes. The sore temptations which beset the path of the gentler sex in this great city are greatly counterbalanced by the advantages attaching to these institutions. The last report shows that hundreds of young women have been blessed in a spiritual as well as temporal sense. Many of them are now witnessing in their various houses of business to the change which has been wrought in them.

After prayer by Mr. Cameron Churchill, the Chairman, Lord KINNAIRD, spoke a few words of sympathy with the efforts put forth for the spiritual and moral benefit of those present. He said he was pleased to know that the work was appreciated by them. He warmly commended it to the continued support of all who are interested in the welfare of this important section of the community.

Dr. GILBART-SMITH said that from an experience of nearly twelve years he was able to speak of the benefits of this Institution. On behalf of Miss Ely he stated that at the end of last year there were 700 names on the books; during the last two months 70 more had joined. These 770 represented, at least, 180 houses of business. The object was not only to care for the souls of young women, but to foster the improvement of mind and body. There were social evenings, a benefit society, a savings bank, and total abstinence society; all of these he warmly commended to them as means by which they might improve health, mind, and circumstances.

Rev. E. A. STUART gave seven mottoes, the adoption of which, he said, would be conducive to happiness, both temporal and eternal. They were "Looking unto Jesus," "Loving Jesus," "Leaning upon Jesus," "Led by Jesus," "Learning of Jesus," "Longing for Jesus," and "Living with Jesus."

Mr. SPENCER WALTON emphasized the importance of knowing the truth of the passage, "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." One great need was the pardon of sin; this he illustrated by several incidents in his own experience.

Mr. Aitken at Forest Gate.

ON Sunday last a ten days' Gospel Mission, to be conducted by Rev. W. H. Aitken and Rev. J. Stephens, was commenced at St. James' Church, Forest Gate. The four meetings of the day were of great interest and blessing.

In the afternoon, to a large company of men, Mr. Aitken delivered a sermon of indescribable power from the words of the Psalmist, "Who will show us any good? Lord, lift Thou on us the light of Thy countenance." The preacher's description of the two views of human life, as seen from the standpoints of the materialist and the Christian, couched as it was in words of marvellously convincing force and the most intense and yearning earnestness, will not soon fade from the memory of those who listened. A solemn, deathlike stillness brooded over the audience as they hung on the words of the speaker; though no after-meeting was held, the results of this one discourse must have been great. By a curious coincidence, while Mr. Aitken was setting forth the gloom and despair that are the inevitable and natural outcome of sceptical teaching, the church suddenly grew dark, as if night were prematurely settling down on the earth; as he drew to a close, and expatiated in glowing and triumphant tones on the joyous words of the Psalmist, "Lord, lift Thou on us the light of Thy countenance," the clouds as quickly passed away, and a bright light once more filled the building. This natural phenomenon seemed to lend an added impressiveness to the Gospel message.

Orphans at Walthamstow.

DEAR SIR,—May I supplement by a few words the kind reference to our Orphan Home which I noticed in THE CHRISTIAN of Jan. 24? Thanks be to God, the love shown in a practical way by this friend and others has broken, and healed, many of these young hearts, and his grace is changing the colour of their lives. The saved ones are now in their turn praying and watching for the salvation of the rest. What a joy it is to rescue even a few out of the perishing thousands. Nothing less than the gospel of Jesus Christ will ever hush "the bitter cry," whose echoes reach us here in the histories of destitute little ones. And if it is too late in the day to save the parents, let us have the children. Let us sow the seed of the Word of God in their hearts, train them up for lives of usefulness, and we shall reap a double harvest—the blessing in their own lives, and in the generation following.

I know of no more hopeful sphere of work in this day than of that among the children. So urgent is the need on all hands, that instead of twenty-eight, our present number, we only want means, and it would quickly be fifty or more. It is true, as my friend remarked, that we are greatly straitened for money to pay our way, and just now we very much want to replenish bedding, warm clothing, &c. Are not these children the sparrows, "not one of whom is forgotten before God"? Will He not stir up his people's hearts to remember them? We look to you, dear friends who read THE CHRISTIAN, to help us again as you have often done before.

Listen to some of the "echoes." (1) A case now in the Home—a little girl of five, cruelly deserted by the father, whose treatment of her mother had become so bitter that the poor thing took refuge in self-destruction. (2) Little girl nine or ten years old, one of a family of eight children, oldest son, twenty-two, daughter, seventeen; these, with father and mother, all living in one room! What must be the outcome of such surroundings? These are only samples from the mass. Let us work while the day lasts, for the night is quickly coming.

Foreign and Continental Notes.

A NOONDAY PRAYER MEETING

has been established at Spezia, Italy, by Mr. J. S. Anderson. Among those who attend are several Roman Catholics, who receive a hearty welcome.

DENMARK.

There is such a lack of theological candidates in Denmark that the ecclesiastical authorities do not know how to find pastors for the vacant churches. It was suggested that the Bishops should be willing to ordain any suitable men who have not gone through an academical course, but this proposal was rejected.—Evan. Kirk, Anzeiger.

CELTS IN CHICAGO.

At a meeting recently held at the Y.M.C.A. Chicago Building to further the preaching of the Gospel in the Gaelic language, it was announced that there were 2000 Highlanders in the city who understood that language better than any other, and that Dr. Campbell, of Collingwood, Canada, would soon arrive in Chicago to take charge of the work.

TAHITI.

A report from Tahiti says that the Tahitiens are still much attached to the Book of God, which they read every day, and that they make great sacrifices to be able to procure it. The number of communicants in the churches of Tahiti and Morea is 2337, in a population of about 8000. The Sunday-schools count 1159. In the last twelve months 258 members have been added to the church; it is right to add that in the same period 100 have been excluded, nearly all through drunkenness. The natives manifest a decided repulsion to the doctrines of the Romish Church.

SWITZERLAND.

The State Church in the Canton de Vaud, according to Evangelical Christendom, is suffering from want of pastors; a circular has been read from all the pulpits declaring that lay help will be accepted, and authorised laymen will be delegated to take the services until the pastoral staff is complete. Great anxiety is expressed at the small attendance on public worship, and which is still diminishing; in most places more than half the adult inhabitants are stated by the official circular to absent themselves habitually, and only to appear in church at baptisms, marriages, and other like occasions.

SARDINIA.

SIR,—With the beginning of the year we have commenced in Sassari a circulating library of evangelistic books. Accompanied by a Sard girl, one of our Sunday scholars, I also visit various houses to which I have access, and offer the loan of books. In most cases they are gladly received, some expressing a hope that another will soon be brought. The expenses of our library for the current year will be £30. The collecting of this money, as well as carrying on the work of the library, falls on myself, as my husband's time, this year, will be wholly given to circulating the Scriptures, under the British and Foreign Bible Society. May I beg our dear friends in England to help? MARGARETTA THOMAS.

NEW ZEALAND.

A correspondent writes to a friend in this country:—"The Invercargill Y.M.C.A. have been holding meetings in Slowans Theatre on Sunday evenings during the winter months, and the Lord blessed our labours. When the Salvation Army came we gave them the field, and the Lord is using them greatly. Some of the very lowest characters have been converted through them. Two friends and myself began a series of Sunday evening meetings in the west plains. We had five meetings there nine months ago, when a number confessed the Lord. I was glad to find that all I had the privilege of speaking with who professed on the previous occasion are holding on their way rejoicing. The Y.M.C.A. is doing good work all round here."

CORRECTION.—The note headed "Islington Poor," on page 16 of our last, should have been "Poor of St. Luke's, Clerkenwell." Rev. P. Gast is labouring among the poor of this district, where he finds much distress and abundant need for sympathy. His address is 12, Noel-street, Islington, N.

Without Carefulness.

"Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."—1 PETER v. 7.

CASTING all, yes, all your care—
Not a little here and there;
Not to bear them while you can,
As if that were God's own plan;
Then, when sinking, look to Him,
With the eye of faith so dim!

But, as trials, troubles come,
Rolling back on Him the sum,
Who hath promised to sustain
Every burden, every pain.
Ev'n the smallest He will bear;
Trust Him, then, with every care.

Well He knows a little thing
Has the power to pierce and sting,
And how little worries wear,
For "He numbers every hair."
And "He careth:" oh how sweet!
Leave thy burden at his feet.

None can stay his mighty hand;
All things yield to his command.
All must work his gracious will:
Then, faint heart, rest, and be still;
Do not start with sudden fear,
With thy mighty Helper near.

As if He could e'er forget,
And thy needs should not be met!
Trust his love to meet thy lack,
Never, never looking back!
He who made thee knows thee well,
Peaceful, in his presence dwell.

And one day thine eyes shall see
How all things have wrought for thee,
Sweet from bitter, good from ill,
Working out thy Father's will:
Cast on Him, then, all thy care,
Who hath promised all to bear!

The Temperance Reform.

BRISTOL Y.M.C.A.—The second annual meeting of the Abstainers' Union, in connection with this Association, was held recently. It was reported that the work of the Union was prospering; many new members had joined during the year, and some of these had been brought to a decision for Christ.

A GOOD OMEN.—A correspondent states, "on reliable authority," that a well-known firm of brewers have been obliged to reduce the number of their horses by eighty, owing to a decrease in "the trade," caused by the spread of total abstinence principles. We should like to hear of other incidents of this kind.

PROHIBITION IN AMERICA.—The ladies of the "Women's Christian Temperance Union" of America intend before the close of the year to present to Congress a petition that shall be a mile in length, with more than a million of signatures. It will pray Congress to give the people of the United States the opportunity of amending the Constitution of their Government, so as to for ever prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage!

A BRITISH TEMPERANCE FEDERATION.—At a meeting of delegates from the national and provincial Temperance organisations, held on the 7th inst. in Exeter Hall, it was resolved to form a National Temperance Federation. The federated societies will work together in view of legislative and other action, and bring their influence to bear on Parliament and on Her Majesty's Government against any proposals of a retrograde nature. Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., was elected president, and a Parliamentary Committee was also appointed to watch Temperance legislation in the House of Commons.

HOXTON HALL has just seen its sixth anniversary. For six consecutive years—about 2200 nights—without a break, meetings have been held at this place, or in connection therewith. Anniversary meetings were held on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, when the hall was filled to its full extent. Professor Andrée's Alpine Choir took part in these meetings.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Sheffield.—A series of special meetings have recently been held at this place in connection with the Methodist body. The results have been large and encouraging.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan closed a series of interesting Gospel services in Halifax, Yorkshire, on Sunday week. During the services several persons have professed to get good.

Mr. Charles Inglis has during the past month been addressing large meetings every night in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-End-road. In the after meetings many it is believed have been blessed, and are now rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour. Mr. Inglis is now holding Gospel meetings in Glasgow.

Collingwood-street Mission.—The friends of this Mission provided a free tea for 140 men out of work, on Wednesday, the 6th; the guests of the evening seemed truly thankful. After tea, Mr. R. Burn and others gave addresses. At the close several signed the pledge, and professed their faith in Christ. John Hancorn.

Rosehearty, N.B.—A very interesting religious movement is in progress in this town in the north of Scotland. Rev. G. Campbell, of Glasgow, a well-known Free Church evangelist, has been labouring there for two weeks, and the result is this most hopeful work. Many are anxious, and not a few, so far as man can say, have come to rest on Christ for salvation.

Timberscombe, Somerset.—During the past fortnight Mr. George Back, of the Evangelization Society, has been conducting a series of special services at this place. God has so blessed his labours in the conversion of souls that it is arranged to continue the Mission for another week. The attendances have been very good.

S. A.

Kirby-Stephen.—Mr. Hall, of Annan, is having special meetings here, attended with great blessing to both Christians and unsaved. From the first night anxious ones have gone into the inquiry-room, and numbers have professed to find peace. Prayer is requested that the work may be real and deep, and that God may specially help the workers to deal wisely in winning souls.

J. W. B.

Leith.—A Conference of ministers, missionaries, and other gentlemen interested in Mission effort in Leith, has been arranged by the Junction-street United Presbyterian Church Missionary Society. The object of the Conference was to endeavour to secure "more united action and co-operation" in Mission work in the town. This is a plan worthy of imitation.

Mr. James W. Moodie, evangelist, has conducted a series of meetings in the Free Church, Kirkpatrick-Fleming, including the village of Eaglesfield. Mr. Moodie, a vigorous young man about twenty-five years of age, is a very diligent student of his Bible, and much given to prayer; he speaks with much power and impressiveness. Our meetings were well attended, and a good many stayed to the after-meetings. Some seem to have made a clear decision for Christ; others are in a very hopeful state, while the Lord's people are cheered and refreshed. G. Mills.

Liverpool Town Mission.—The fifty-fifth annual meeting of this Mission was held last week, Mr. J. Patterson, J.P., presiding. The report read by Mr. Babcock stated that 27 missionaries are now employed. During the year consecutive house-to-house visitation has been carried on with considerable success. The number of known drunkards reclaimed is 226. The number attending the Mission schools is nearly 22,000, and the attendance at the meetings over 130,000. The people themselves have contributed well towards the expenses of the Mission; an appeal was made, however, for continued public support.

Rev. George F. Pentecost, of Brooklyn, has recently held a series of evangelistic services in St. Paul's Evangelistic Church, New York. Rev. Hugh Pentecost, pastor of this church, has begun his ministry there with a bold and faithful testimony to spiritual truth, which will certainly secure the Master's blessing, if it does not awaken the church to life and earnest work. Mr. Geo. Pentecost was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, and the services were continued for some weeks. The meetings were much blessed to the quickening of many Christians and the conversion of some souls. Mr. Pentecost has not resumed his Sunday services in the Brooklyn Academy, but is devoting the winter to the Mission connected with his church and to outside evangelistic labours.

Southsea Mission, Portsmouth.—Mr. J. A. Vicary, of Bristol, has completed a week's Mission here. The meetings were well attended, and a goodly number professed to be brought to the Lord.

Edinburgh.—A ten days' Mission has been concluded in St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Edinburgh, in connection with the general Mission held in all the principal Episcopal Churches throughout the town. Sermons were preached three times daily by Rev. H. Pelham Stokes, and addresses were also given by Rev. E. C. Dawson, the Incumbent. The after-meetings were largely attended; many remained nightly to converse with the Mission preacher and a selected band of workers. A large congregation of men assembled on Sunday afternoon to hear a sermon to "Men Only," at which a deep impression was produced by the earnest words of the preacher. The Spirit of God manifestly worked among the people, and the services were prolonged, by special request, for some days longer than had been originally intended. The attendances steadily increased until the end of the Mission, and on Sunday last the church was crowded, both morning and evening.

Letters to the Editor.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Tallack's opinion, that capital punishment may be classed with polygamy, as things contrary to the spirit of the New Testament, though not expressly forbidden, is strongly at variance with the facts of the case.

I have already pointed out that capital punishment for murder was enjoined by God upon Noah as the head of the present human race; and that nothing less than an express repeal of this injunction in the New Testament would suffice to set it aside. Where can any similar injunction of polygamy be found?

In the next place, to say that "the New Testament, in its letter, does not expressly forbid capital punishment," is very much short of the truth. St. Paul declares that the ruler who bears the sword is ordained by God for a terror to evildoers.

Thirdly, Mr. Tallack says that polygamy is not expressly forbidden in the New Testament, except to bishops. This again is inaccurate. St. Paul says: "Let every man have his own wife, and every woman her own husband." This is equivalent to a prohibition of polygamy; for, were it sanctioned, every woman would not have her own husband.

If Christians would but study more carefully and diligently the Book which they acknowledge to be the Word of God, a great deal of error would be avoided.—I remain, truly yours, Woking, Surrey, Feb. 7. Horace Noel.

A BITTER CRY.

Dear Sir,—As one who has taken in and circulated The Christian from the beginning, may I express my thankfulness that you have taken up in a recent number the subject indicated by "V. M. S." in "A Bitter Cry." The misery I have witnessed, from the neglect of professing Christians to pay ready money, and the running up of small bills, might fill columns.

May I give one instance? Late one Saturday night, a young woman, who for years had supported her aged widowed mother by dressmaking, called at my house. On entering the room, she burst into a flood of tears, and after apologising for the intrusion at such an hour, begged the loan of a few shillings. Knowing that she had been in constant work, I inquired the reason. Her story was this: "Miss —— owes me so much. She went into the country and forgot (?) to pay me Since her return I have called twice, but she was too busy. Though I sent word how much I needed the money, the servant said I was to call on Monday."

She and her mother were keeping an empty house. The doctor who had been called in pronounced the poor woman's life to be in danger; ordered a good fire to be kept up night and day, and nourishing food given. "She is alone," said the poor girl, "in that great house. I have spent my last penny in linseed, &c., to make poultices. We have neither coal nor bread; soon the shops will be closed; to-morrow is Sunday, and she must die." And all through Miss ——'s forgetting. I visited the case, and can vouch for its truth. H. W. E.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

Sir,—What should we understand by John iii. 7, "They went forth taking nothing of the Gentiles?" Does the Apostle mean converted or unconverted Gentiles, or both? How does this apply at the present time? J. A.

[The brethren spoken of had gone forth as missionaries to heathen (Gentile) races. They had done so out of pure love to the name of Christ, and in full reliance on Him to supply their need. They would not let those to whom they went have opportunity to charge them with making the Gospel a means of livelihood. The Christian principle of giving for the support of the Lord's work, and of his servants wholly devoted to it, was of course unknown or undeveloped in such spheres as they thus visited. The same principle prevails now in modern Mission work; until native converts are instructed in the principles of truth, and impelled by personal experience of indebtedness to God, nothing is asked of them in the way of gifts, hence our societies for the support of Mission work (1 Cor. ix. 11—16; 1 Thess. ii. 8, 9; John iii. 8).—Ed.]

"KEEP CLOSE TO SCRIPTURE."

THE JUDGMENT OF BELIEVERS.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me some few observations on the letter of my Christian friend and brother Mr. Gosse?

(1) Great is the subject under consideration. "All believers, whatever their sins after faith, will have part in the millennial kingdom." Will our brother state his positive texts in proof of this?

(2) With regard to Rev. xx. 12, "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and books (no 'the') were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of the things which were written in the books according to their works." What is the proof here that none but the lost are before the throne of judgment? The mention of the book of life naturally suggests that there are some names in it of those judged. The supposition that the effect of the book is only negative and nugatory, is adduced just to get rid of the objection, which its presence naturally suggests. But it is no proof in favour of the idea. The dead whose sins stand uncancelled in the books of judgment are lost. Would the name of one of these, if found in the book of life, avail to rescue one condemned by the book of his deeds? Of course not. The books must be badly kept if such a contradiction were to be found. We know already that no name of the lost stands in the book of life. Shall, then, the book of life be brought to prove what we know already without such proof?

But, on the other hand, if the millennial kingdom be God's "prize," and many will be saved who are not rewarded, then the presence of the book of life is not useless, but is accounted for. By means of it, the saved who are not judged worthy of reward will be distinguished from the lost. There are those before the throne whose sins are blotted out. They have names in the book of life; and a name there has a positive effect. It gives entrance into the eternal city of God (Rev. xxi. 27).

(3) The judgment-seat of Christ is to judge believers only, and that as servants. I believe it. But the judgment-seats of every country try criminal cases among their subjects as well as civil. The Lord Jesus was tried for his life before Pilate's judgment-seat (Matthew xxvii. 19). So was Paul (Acts xxv. 11). Will Christ's judgment-seat have only to adjust degrees of reward for good works? Or are there not also among believers offences calling for punishment? (1 Cor. v. 1, 2; 2 Cor. xii. 21; 1 Thess. iv. 3—8; Heb. xii. 16, xiii. 4). The present putting out of the Church by Christ's command of certain offenders is the witness of the future exclusion of some from the millennial kingdom of God. The list of defaulters to be excluded now from church communion (1 Cor. v. 11) is repeated in the next chapter, as persons to be excluded from the coming kingdom (1 Cor. vi. 8—11). The Lord Jesus says that the just decisions of his churches now shall be ratified by Himself when He comes. Here is one who died excluded for drunkenness: must not Christ exclude him? (Matthew xviii. 18). Can the Saviour deny Himself? He was rightly accounted unworthy to sit down with the saints in the day of grace. Can the Lord Jesus account him worthy to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the day of recompense according to works?

(4) John v. 24 only discovers to us the believer's present standing. "He hath eternal life and doth not come into judgment, but is passed from death to life." So the Revised Version, "cometh."

(5) 2 Cor. v. 10 is, as our brother observes, somewhat inaccurately rendered; but when it is corrected, does it not overthrow our brother's views? "For we must all be manifested before the judgment-seat of the Christ, in order that each may receive the things (done) by means of the body according as he hath done, whether 'it be good or bad.'" Why are the last words omitted?

"The body here named," says our friend, "means, doubtless, the risen body." Impossible! The man has done nothing with his risen body; responsibility refers only to the present body and life.

(6) In the parables of the Talents and the Pounds our Lord is careful to teach us that not all of his servants will, at his coming, be well pleasing to Him. Unprofitableness, as well as positive transgressions, will prevent the servant's entrance "into the joy of his Lord."

Our brother, as an honest Christian man, speaks out clearly his meaning. All believers, he thinks, must enter into the glory and reward because they are members of the Son of God. And they ought to know it.

Is there, then, any sin which will exclude a believer? Can any, if the ground of entrance be membership in the Son of God? For that is an indissoluble link. He says:-

"The Holy Ghost by Paul (1 Cor. vi. 1—3) not only asserts that the saints shall judge the world, but wonders that the Corinthians did not know this. These saints, too, he calls 'you' in the next verse, even the naughty, perverse, quarrelling, carnal, puffed-up, wrong-doing, heretical believers, that constituted the Church in that luxurious city."

Now, as I read the Scripture, the Apostle wonders that Corinthian believers were not aware that, as the kingdom is that of the saints, so unsaintly conduct would exclude. He expressly excludes from the Kingdom, in the 9th and 10th verses of that very chapter, the wrong-doers, the unrighteous, and unsaintly. "Know ye not that unrighteous ones (no the) shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived [rest not on your membership in Christ]. Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." Look again. "Now, the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these—Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like, of which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God" (Gal. v. 19—21; Eph. v. 5—7; Col. iii. 24—25). Seven times over is the warning given to believers, He who is so guilty shall not enter the kingdom."—Yours truly in Christ, R. GOVETT.

PRAYER FOR PARLIAMENT.

SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN of February 7 a slight mistake occurs in an editorial introduction to an extract from a letter in the Record of February 2, signed "Credo."

No mention of the name of "Mr. Bradlaugh" has ever been made by me, for the Press, till this moment. As Christians, our war is against principles not persons; and the battle-cry referred to was in the following words: "Shall any one of us slumber whilst a God-insulting Atheism again threatens to force an entrance into our Parliament?" &c., &c.*—Yours faithfully, CREDO.

* Copies of the letter referred to can be had gratis at the Operative Jewish Converts' Institute, Palestine-place, Cambridge-heath, E.

THE "SABBATH ALLIANCE OF SCOTLAND."—Sums of £100, £50, £30, and £20 are offered for prize essays on the Sabbath; particulars may be had of Mr. James Brown, 26, George-street, Edinburgh.

LODGING-HOUSE MEN AT TEA.—About 250 men of the neglected class who frequent the common lodging-houses of Ratcliff Highway and neighbourhood were brought together for tea last Friday at the "Strangers' Rest," Ratcliff Highway. A bunch of snowdrops, sent by a friend from Devonshire (together with a scripture card), was given to nearly every man. Addresses were given by Messrs. J. H. Topping, J. T. Isaac, and J. Jackson. At the close about a dozen indicated their desire to be prayed for, and several remained to be further spoken with. It is a matter for thanksgiving that the miserable lives of these men were brightened for at least one evening, and that a motley crowd of thieves, tramps, dock labourers, and the wastrels of good society who filter down to the common lodging-houses, heard "the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto Salvation."

Notices of Books, &c.

THE QUIVER (6d. Cassell & Co.) has something for all classes of readers. Its monthly summary of good works at home and abroad is becoming more and more comprehensive and valuable.

THE UNIVERSAL INSTRUCTOR (Ward, Lock & Co.) has reached Part XL. It continues to give ample instruction on many practical subjects for those who desire self-culture.

A BULWARK OF TRUTH (sixth thousand—Religious Tract Society) is a twopenny book with Scriptures arranged under various headings, by the author of "How do I know the Bible is true?"

In the present Egyptian crisis many will read with interest the sketches given of "The Soudan" in the current number of THE WELCOME (6d. Partridge & Co.) One of the serial tales is by the popular Scotch writer, Anne S. S. Swan.

An interesting and well-illustrated sketch of the far-famed Scottish isle Iona, from the pen of Mr. Grattan Guinness, appears in the current number of THE REGIONS BEYOND (Elliot Stock. 2d.).

DR. ADAM CLARKE'S COMMENTARY (Ward, Lock & Co. 1s.) has now reached its thirty-fourth part, and brings the reader to the end of 1 Thessalonians. The notes will prove helpful to all who value Bible study.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND CONVERSION OF W. R. BEADLAUGH (2, Ivy-lane, E.C.) gives a deeply interesting account of the early life, conversion, and subsequent labours of the brother of the Member for Northampton.

DELVING AND DIVING is a penny monthly magazine devoted to the advocacy of rescuing boys from the slums of Manchester and Salford. It gives striking instances of rescue made by the workers at the Boys' Home, Wood-street, Manchester.

THE LORD'S DAY. T. Murray & Son, Glasgow. An essay in verse, in defence of the Lord's day as a day of rest and worship. The history and blessings of the Sabbath are expatiated upon, as well as the ill effects of its non-observance.

GOLDEN HOURS. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. In addition to some well-told stories, the February issue contains a good article by the editor, Rev. J. Jackson Wray, on "An Englishman's House is his Castle."

THE REAPER is the monthly organ of the Ayrshire Christian Union (Office: Ardrossan, N.B.). It gives interesting accounts of the doings of the Union, and contains much useful instruction for Christian workers.

With their current issues of periodical literature Messrs. Cassell & Co. send out the final number of their far-famed POPULAR EDUCATOR, including index and contents. Any persevering youth who masters this work will have received a liberal education at a merely nominal cost.

THE HYMNS OF MARTIN LUTHER, WITH MUSIC. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. An elegant edition of the sacred songs of the great German Reformer, set to their original melodies; the words are given both in German and English. There is a most interesting introduction by Mr. Leonard Wolsey Bacon. Though it is rather late in the day, the volume is a fitting memorial of the recent Luther Celebration.

SWORD AND TROWEL. February. 3d. Passmore & Alabaster. Mr. Spurgeon, though absent from his post, has not been idle. In the current number of his magazine he deals some doughty and telling blows at modern doubt. In the "Personal Notes" he announces the immediate publication of a new book on the same subject. There is a characteristic paper from the pen of his son Thomas, besides much other very readable matter.

ALL HANDS ON DECK. Religious Tract Society. Sketches for seafarers, embodying the wreck of the Cyprian, which left Dublin for Oporto, and the loss of the Hibernian, a ship that left the Mersey for Genoa. The book abounds with Gospel truth and moral lessons. BELIHILD. By JULIE SUTTER (same publishers). An interesting tale of Irish missionaries in Germany in 703 A.D. The "men of God" mentioned in these pages are all historic, and the narrative is true.

GRACE AND GLORY (J. Mann, Kingston-on-Thames); LIFE AND DEATH AND THE WORD-MADE FLESH (Nisbet) are twopenny tracts, by Rev. F. Whitfield. They were delivered as sermons by him and are now published by request. They are both spiritual and practical, and calculated to help the reader to a good application of the Gospel to matters of everyday life. Mr. Whitfield shows it is not creeds but Christ that men and women need. Many will be glad to circulate these little books.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN'S YEAR-BOOK FOR 1884 (1s. Hatchards, Piccadilly) is a directory to institutions existing for the benefit of women and children. It contains a mass of useful information on the various agencies which materially assists the class for whom it is compiled.

GOOD WORDS; SUNDAY MAGAZINE. 6d. each Isbister & Co. These popular monthlies continue to maintain their reputation for excellence both in the articles and illustrations. Good Words has portraits of two Scottish worthies — Edward Irving, the preacher, and Janet Hamilton, the poetess.

INDIA'S DAUGHTERS is the title of a "Service of Song," descriptive of the way in which Zenana missionaries reach the women of India, and of the subsequent results. The verses are of a missionary character. It may be had of Messrs. Weeks & Co., 14, Hanover-street, W. Price fourpence.

CONSTITUTION AND CANONS OF THE REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. 2s. 6d. Marlborough & Co. This useful manual is published by authority, and contains much interesting information concerning the principles and practices of the Reformed Church of England, as it is commonly called.

DUSTY MIRRORS. By ISA NICHOLSON. Abel Heywood & Sons, Manchester. A much more attractive book than its title would imply. In a very interesting story it brings out many little defects which mar our Christian character, even when busily serving the Lord. To Sunday-school teachers and those engaged in parochial work it will be very helpful.

BAPTISM, ITS USES AND ABUSE; CONFIRMATION, ITS TRUE VALUE. By Capt. SETON CHURCHILL. 6d. each Nisbet & Co. These pamphlets defend infant baptism and confirmation as being scriptural in their origin and beneficial in their influence. The doctrine of baptismal regeneration is denounced as contrary to the Word of God, and also to the Book of Common Prayer.

GERTRUDE ELLERSLIE, a Story of Two Years. By Mrs. MELDRUM. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier. The thoughtful reading of this interesting tale would undoubtedly prove a great blessing to all who have an undefined longing for something more than the routine duties and hollow pleasuers of the world. It well illustrates the truth that "None but Christ can satisfy." It may also be helpful to those who are desirous of improving and making the best use of their "precious golden talent of influence."

DR. BLANDFORD'S CONSCIENCE. By the Author of "The White Cross and Dove of Pearls." Nisbet & Co. This is a high-class work of fiction of a unique character. It consists of nearly five hundred closely-printed pages abounding with incident, comprising much subtle analysis of character, and of the influence of one mind upon another. The writer seems to have an extensive acquaintance with the modes of thought and distinguishing doctrines of almost every denomination of Christians, and gives some exquisite sketches of old Yorkshire Methodism. It is to be feared that the story is a too faithful transcript of what is happening all around in "cultured" circles, where young professors, weak in the faith, are led by the sophistries of "scientists" to entertain doubts about divine truth, and thus land in the mazes of error. The writer traces the career of two of Dr. Blandford's victims and draws a masterly picture of the Nemesis which followed that wretched man when, convinced of his folly, he tried to undo some of the mischief, while the good that he would have done turned continually to evil. Although the tale is thoroughly evangelical in its religious teaching, it is not altogether free from those elements of sensationalism which characterise works of this class; nor does it seem to us desirable to ventilate the views of freethinkers, even for the purpose of refuting them, in books intended for the perusal of young people.

A RESTAURANT FOR YOUNG WOMEN in business has been opened in the Walworth-road, under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A. and the supervision of Mildmay deaconesses. There is a reading-room where young women can read and write, or converse together; there are also bedrooms to let, suitable for the young women and for respectable servants. The Restaurant is next door to the Rochester Institute, which has been working now two years, and is resorted to by large numbers of young women in the neighbourhood.

Mission Appeals.

Gospel Tracts for Sailors.—Mr. W. H. Lloyd, H.M.S. Asia, Portsmouth, will be thankful for suitable tracts for distribution among the sailors in Haslar Hospital and on Her Majesty's ships.

The Infant Day Nursery, 30, Tavistock-place, Tavistock-square, London, W.C., is in need of funds to further develop its useful ness. The money paid by the mothers out of their often hardly-won earnings is not enough to enable the institution to pay its way. A visit to the Nursery will be warm y welcomed, and any contributions to the funds gratefully received by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss M. Petrie, 24, Gordon-square, W.C.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing on a three weeks' Mission by Mr. George Back, at Timbers-combe Chapel, Somerset.——For blessing already received at Dundee.——For great blessing at the "Workmen's Rest," Station-road, Wood-green.

PRAYER.—For a rich blessing on the meetings being held at Kirkby-Stephen, by Mr. Hall, of Annan.——For the work at Temperance Hall, Sedgley, Feb. 17 to March 2, by John Elliott.——For blessing at the new "Rest" Mission rooms, Station-road, Wood-Green.——For great blessing on a University sermon to be preached in St. Mary's, Oxford, on Sunday, Feb. 17, by Rev. F. J. Chavasse.——That the health of a Christian worker may be restored.——For the power of the Holy Spirit upon preachers and hearers at Mayfield and Jarvis Brook.——For a wise selection of a chaplain for Crediton Church.——For a revival of the Lord's work in Alderney.——For a special blessing on a week of revival services at Church-road Mission, Homerton, Feb. 17 to 23.——For a missionary who desires the way to be opened for him to labour in India.——For much blessing upon a series of evangelistic meetings in Chalmers Church, Dundee.——For a blessing on Mr. W. D. Dunn's labours at Grangemouth.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—The work of this society is developing rapidly. Although there are now about 5000 members of the profession on the books, it has been arranged by the director, Mr. Courthope Todd, to hold special meetings in outlying districts. Teas will be given, with addresses, in Marylebone, Islington, and Lambeth, those engaged at theatres in other neighbourhoods being too far off to enjoy the privileges of the institute at 21, King-street, Covent Garden. There have been not a few cases of blessing of late, and the local visitors are having a busy season in going from home to home. The three meetings weekly, on Tuesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, are well attended, and many come now who have refused to do so hitherto.

Forthcoming Meetings.
